Georgia Southern Celebrates Arbor Day

For the third year in a row, The Center for Sustainability and Physical Plant have teamed up to celebrate Arbor Day on campus. Although Arbor Day in Georgia is typically celebrated on the third Friday in February, this year's campus celebration will be held at 9:30 a.m. on Feb. 24. Together, students, faculty and staff will work together to plant nearly 200 hardwood trees near Dorman Drive. The campus community is invited to participate in the event and is encouraged to meet the group at the Eidson House that morning. Arbor Day began in 1872 and went on to become a nationwide tradition in 1882. Today, state Arbor Days are scheduled to coincide with the best tree planting weather.

Speaker Invites You to 'Hug An Elephant, Kiss A Giraffe'

Justin Jones-Fosu says we've been talking about "diversity" for the last two decades, and it's lost its meaning.

Jones-Fosu will bring his discussion entitled, "Hug an Elephant, Kiss A Giraffe: Redefining Diversity in Everyday Life" to the PAC at Georgia Southern on Wednesday, March 4 at 7:30 p.m. The dynamic speaker will use music, movement and creativity to hit some of the basics of the diversity conversation while honoring its complexity.

The event is free and open to the public.
