Narrative:

1935-2000 (by Janet D. Stone, author of From the Mansion to the University a history of Armstrong published in 2010)

In the spring of 1935, Savannah Mayor Thomas Gamble began to promote the establishment of a junior college in Savannah to serve the young people of the community who could not afford the cost of higher education away from home. Despite the stringent circumstances of the Depression, Gamble was convinced that a city-supported junior college would benefit not only Savannah's youth but Savannah's business activity and the Savannah community at large. Interest in the college project grew, but the idea needed a home. On May 27, 1935, Gamble announced that the new junior college would take its residence in the magnificent gray brick mansion of the late George Ferguson Armstrong, a successful Savannah shipping businessman, whose widow, Lucy Camp Armstrong Moltz, and daughter, Lucy Armstrong Johnson, agreed to give their former home to the city to fulfill the mayor's proposal. Located on the southern edge of Savannah's historic district, the Armstrong mansion was the last of the great homes that had been built in the downtown area. It stood at the head of Bull Street, between the historic squares of downtown Savannah to the north and the green expanse of Forsyth Park to the south. The imposing Armstrong mansion and the surrounding neighborhood provided the new junior college with its distinctive character for the next thirty years. Early patrons of the college's growth included Savannah banker Mills Bee Lane and his wife Mary Comer Lane, and Savannah newspaper owner and publisher Herschel V. Jenkins.

The college opened its doors in the fall of 1935 with 168 first year students and a group of 8 faculty and staff. In June 1937, 78 students became the first graduates of Armstrong Junior College. The first president of the College, Ernest A. Lowe, came to Savannah from the University of Georgia and from the offices of the newly formed University System of Georgia. Although Armstrong remained a city-supported junior college, outside of the University System of Georgia, it looked to the University System for advice and counsel on curricular matters. After Ernest Lowe left in 1941, Thomas Askew served briefly as the college's second president before entering military service. Foreman J. Hawes became the college's third president in 1944 and served until retirement in 1963.

From the beginning, the college and faculty developed a primary emphasis on two years of liberal arts coursework, but the curriculum also included courses developed to serve the various professional needs of the Savannah community, most notably business courses and the basic science coursework needed by nursing students at the local Savannah hospitals. By the late 1950s, however, the city of Savannah found it increasingly difficult to provide the revenues that the college needed to supplement tuition and fees. Various negotiations began in 1957 to seek ways to obtain state funds to support the college. These negotiations culminated in 1959 when Armstrong College joined the University System of Georgia, ending twenty-four years as a city-supported institution.

In 1963, Otis Johnson became the first African American student to be admitted to Armstrong. Entering as a sophomore transfer student from Savannah State College, Johnson graduated from Armstrong with the class of 1964. Integration was only one of the changes that affected the college in the decade of the 1960s. Plans to expand the college beyond the six buildings that it occupied around the Armstrong mansion provoked strong community concerns about the effects of this expansion on the architecture and the squares of the historic district. In March 1962, banker Mills B. Lane, Jr. resolved the dilemma by purchasing 250 acres of land for a new campus on the far southern edge of the city. The college occupied the new site in January 1966. Prior to the move, the Board of Regents, in May 1963, approved the conversion of Armstrong into a four-year institution. The first baccalaureate class of 117 students graduated from the new campus in June 1968.

A new president, Henry L. Ashmore, presided over the new, four-year college as it rapidly expanded its buildings, enrollment, and programs. Under his leadership, the college developed new offerings in health-related fields, notably degree programs in dental hygiene and nursing.
Other health-related programs followed quickly, such that in 1978 the Board of Regents designated Armstrong as a Regional Center for Health Education in Georgia. On the new campus, Armstrong also introduced teacher education courses, and by 1971 was offering the M. Ed. degree in conjunction with Savannah State College. The enlarged business department offered a Bachelor of Business Administration degree, and the arts and sciences departments strengthened their baccalaureate programs with a host of new Ph.D. faculty.

In 1971 the University System of Georgia came under increased scrutiny from the Office of Civil Rights. As a result, Armstrong and Savannah State College, an historically black state-supported college in Savannah, initiated a number of efforts at joint programs, most notably a joint graduate program for the M.Ed. and for a Master's of Business Administration. This joint program and other actions by the University System failed to convince the federal courts that Georgia did not have a racially segregated system of public higher education. In 1979, the Board of Regents proposed and the court accepted a "Plan for the Further Desegregation of the University System of Georgia." For Armstrong, the Plan meant a major program swap with Savannah State. The Armstrong Business program, graduate and undergraduate, was transferred wholly to Savannah State; and the Savannah State Education program, graduate and undergraduate, was transferred wholly to Armstrong. The programs, the students, and the faculty made the move in September 1979. The program swap shook enrollment at both institutions, and throughout the 1980s the idea of merger between the two schools remained a shadowy presence.

Despite the upheaval of the program swap, Armstrong continued to expand its curriculum in Health related fields, adding new graduate degree programs in Nursing and Health Science, as well as new Master's degree in Criminal Justice, and in history. In 1982 Robert A. Burnett became the fifth president of the College. Because of increasing interest in the possibility of a university-level institution for southeast Georgia, Burnett and other college presidents in the region began to work on a variety of cooperative configurations that might achieve this goal. In 1989 the Board of Regents chose a plan that designated Georgia Southern College in Statesboro, Georgia as a Regional University. In this capacity it would oversee all graduate programs in southeast Georgia, including all of Armstrong's Master's degree programs. These programs were now offered through Georgia Southern University in affiliation with Armstrong. This arrangement lasted until 1995 when the Board of Regents reversed its decision, and Armstrong regained control of its own graduate program.

In 1996 the Board of Regents decided that all of the state-supported four-year colleges that offered graduate programs should be identified as "universities." In conjunction with this change to university status, a number of Armstrong faculty proposed that the college change its name in order to indicate a regional identification. The college alumni raised strong objections to any change that would eliminate the Armstrong name. The resulting compromise produced 'Armstrong Atlantic State University.' At the time of the change in name and status, the academic family at Armstrong consisted of approximately 5,300 students and 250 faculty. A significant physical expansion of the campus coincided with the institution's new identity. The completion of a new Sports Center and a major new classroom building, University Hall, gave visual expression to the host of changes enveloping Armstrong as it approached the millenium. A major new science building, approved for construction, loomed just ahead on the horizon.

The expanding size and purpose of Armstrong since 1935 find a parallel in the changing phrases and images that have appeared as the identifying logo for the institution. Known initially by the local, colloquial name of 'Geechees, Armstrong adopted a Pirate logo after the move to the new campus in the 1960s, a general allusion to Savannah's coastal location and association with Robert Louis Stevenson's Treasure Island. With the change to University status and the adoption of the new name as Armstrong Atlantic State University, a compass logo became the institutional insignia to set the course for the new directions of the future.

Armstrong’s growth led to a focus on expanding infrastructure and student services during this period. In 2018 University System of Georgia consolidated Armstrong and Georgia Southern University of Statesboro. GA into one University, called Georgia Southern University. One of several consolidations of USG schools during this period.

Thomas Z. Jones was inaugurated Armstrong's sixth President on October 12 2001. Beyond continuing Burnett’s legacy of close ties with the local community, Jones established Public-Private partnerships in order to fund expansion of Armstrong's infrastructure and academic programs. The Educational Properties Foundation Inc. was a prominent example. As a private foundation it was able arranged financing for University projects without the State funds or requirements. User fees paid for the projects. In 2004 Education Properties purchased of land and buildings of shopping complex next to the Armstrong Campus. Armstrong alumni in the local business community supported these partnerships, but mourned the loss of the Armstrong’s business degree in the program swap with Savannah State University (part of a 1979 court-ordered desegregation plan.) Jones and the University’s administration responded with programs aimed at professional and leadership development. Armstrong eventually added an economics degree, while taking care not to violate 1979 plan. Armstrong participated in five ICAPP (Intellectual Capital Partnership Program) projects during Jones' tenure, several to develop the health professions workforce.

Armstrong moved from a commuter school to a more residential campus during this period. Resident’s halls, a student recreational center and new Student Union went hand in glove with developing student-life programing on campus. In 2003, a grant from Goizueta Foundation helped to establish the Hispanic Outreach and Leadership program (HOLA) to better serve Savannah’s growing community. A first-year experience program aimed to increase student retention and better assess student learning. Other highlights of the Jones years: Fine Arts, Jenkins Hall and Lane Library building renovations, twenty four new academic programs were added and Armstrong's men's and women's tennis teams both captured NCAA Division II National Championships in 2008.

When Jones announced his retirement in September 2008 a national search was conducted for Armstrong’s next President, however successful canidate was a Vice President and professor of Marketing and from just down the road at Georgia Southern University. Linda M. Bleicken started work July 2009 and was inaugurated Armstrong’s seventh President on September 17, 2010. Bleicken arrived at something of a highpoint—the celebration of Armstrong’s seventy-fifth anniversary, enrollment was up and the campus physical plant expanded. The school transitioned to a faculty senate form of governance in 2008 seen as a next step for growing faculty and university. But the economic crises beginning in 2008 meant a large cut in State funding. Transferring the Dental Hygiene program to Savannah Technical College was one cost-saving decision, especially difficult as it was one of Armstrong’s first health professions programs and a campus fixture. Dr. Bleicken responded by communicating these issues clearly but also promoting Armstrong’s strengths, important role in the community and brighter future to all constituencies. Increasing Armstrong’s visibility to the larger community and telling Scholl’s story was her goal, and a strength. In 2010 the University published Janet Stone’s scholarly history of Armstrong—a clear-eyed analysis of the School’s development, which also included the nostalgic moments, anecdotes and photographs to warm alumni hearts. The book was titled From the Mansion to the University, because Dr. Stone suspected another name change was afoot. By 2014 the name changed to Armstrong State University, but long before then, the logo changed and Armstrong Magazine replaced The Compass. In Armstrong Magazine (Spring 2011) Dr. Bleicken wrote of the continued need to be “fiscally prudent” and seek alternate sources of funding. She also announced a new strategic plan to chart the College’s course that valued service, diversity and tradition (p. 15). By fall of 2016 the President’s report cited some statistics that showed the plan in action: a more diverse student body contributing many volunteer hours to the Savannah community while completing their choice of varied academic offerings. Armstrong was raising private funds successfully and getting a lot of likes on Facebook. In her last Armstrong Magazine message (Spring 2017) Bleicken wrote that cheering on Armstrong’s sports teams with husband Carl was a favorite experience and ended “Armstrong’s values of scholarship, leadership and stewardship have guided us. I am hopeful that our commitment to supporting student success will deepen and strengthen as we chart a brave new path for the future” (p. 2.) Linda Bleicken retired from the University System of Georgia on June 30, 2017.

The next year brought consolidation and with it, many changes. The first USG announcement of the consolidating (Dec. 2016) stated that there would be one university called Georgia Southern University and that the current GS President (Jaimie Hebert) would continue as President of the consolidated University. All other aspects of the University—administration, athletics, curriculum, student services, information systems and physical plant were worked out by the two schools during 2017-June 2018 period. Of course, this work continued. The Savannah campus was to be called Georgia Southern University—Armstrong Campus after consolidation, which took effect January 1 2018.

Scope and Content:

Records from Presidents Henry Ashmore and Robert Burnett form the bulk of the University Archives, 91 linear feet. Henry Ashmore's administration 1962-1982 is thoroughly documented. Robert Burnett filled several positions at Armstrong before becoming acting President in 1982. Dr. Burnett's files as Vice-President and Dean of Faculty are arranged together with his records as President in record group Office of the President (Box numbers 50-75.) The bulk of the Dr. Burnett's records document the period 1980-1992.

The University Archives holds few records from the period 1935-1960. Some of President Hawes’ correspondence with faculty survive in Ashmore’s files, but otherwise the records of the first three Presidents are not held. The most significant holdings for the early period are photocopies of the record books of the Armstrong State College Commission which governed the College from 1935-1958 (Record Group 98.) The student newspaper, The Inkwell, is bound from 1935 to the present and available in the library's special collection. Alumni Association records and student publications from the early years are found in President Ashmore's records. Record group 900-949 Alumni includes records and memorabilia from graduates of the college's early classes. Finally the University Archives has a film of the College's 1939 Homecoming celebrations. The rest of the early records were not moved to the Southside campus in 1966 and perhaps were destroyed. No records remain in the former Armstrong House on Bull Street, currently owned by a law firm.

In addition to the Office of the President, records from the Business Office, Graduate Office, the Student Government Association and Alumni Association are also held and comprise about 13 linear feet. The University Archives does not hold records for all of the record groups.

The Presidential records were housed in the campus's central supply warehouse. The University Archives accessioned the records in 1999. During 1999-2000 the bulk of the records were arranged, described and processed. Original order was maintained as much as possible. Records from the Business Office, Graduate Office, Alumni and some of Dr. Burnett's records were transferred directly to the University Archives during 1999-2000. Scrapbooks, albums and media had been stored in the library before being housed in the University Archives.

Faculty Papers

1000 Frank Chew Collection
Date(s) (2.4): 1966-1969
Extent (2.5): 10 folders, 16 posters and a small drum.
Name of Creator(s) (2.6): Frank Chew (Frank S. Chew born 1937 (?))
Scope and Content (3.1): Posters, scripts, programs, stage designs and props of The Masquers’ productions directed by Frank Chew. Chew’s correspondence and course materials. Printed material includes copy of The Albion, and campus publications.

Conditions Governing Access (4.1): Unrestricted

Language and Scripts of Material (4.5): English

Administrative/Biographical History (2.7): Frank S. Chew, born in 1937 in Atlanta, Georgia joined the faculty of Armstrong in 1966 to teach theatre classes and direct the college’s theatre, The Masquers. A recent graduate of University of Georgia and interested in theatre of the absurd, Chew brought an iconoclastic outlook that shook things up. His theatre direction attracted students, and the support of fellow faculty members, but provoked some protest from Savannah community members. The collection includes original posters created by Armstrong student Linda McCreevy for most of the productions. Ken McKinnell of the school’s art department did scene design. Chew left Armstrong in 1969 in order to travel. He settled in Atlanta and taught theatre.
