

5-24-2013

Epidemiology News

Georgia Southern University

Follow this and additional works at: <https://digitalcommons.georgiasouthern.edu/epid-news-online>

Part of the Epidemiology Commons

Recommended Citation

Georgia Southern University, "Epidemiology News" (2013). Epidemiology News (through 6/2018). 8.
<https://digitalcommons.georgiasouthern.edu/epid-news-online/8>

This article is brought to you for free and open access by the Biostatistics, Epidemiology, and Environmental Health Sciences Department Publications at Digital Commons@Georgia Southern. It has been accepted for inclusion in Epidemiology News (through 6/2018) by an authorized administrator of Digital Commons@Georgia Southern. For more information, please contact digitalcommons@georgiasouthern.edu.

Caring for Haitian Orphans with Aids

May 24, 2013

Marie Denis-Luque enjoys her job as a research project manager in the Jiann-Ping Hsu College of Public Health at Georgia Southern University. But she said she found her true calling many miles away in a place she once called home. She is the founder and executive director of Caring for Haitian Orphans with AIDS, a home in Port-au-Prince, Haiti, that cares for HIV-positive children.

When she was just 15, Denis-Luque arrived in Tallahassee, Fla., from Haiti with her two sisters to live with her father, stepmother and their two children. A return visit to Haiti in 2003 when she was beginning research as a public health graduate student at the University of South Florida changed the course of her life's journey. In Port-au-Prince, she met Valcuse, a 13-year-old HIV-positive girl who was living in a hospital courtyard because her guardian had abandoned her. "I put myself in her shoes and started thinking, 'What if my dad hadn't gone to the United States — a lot of what-ifs — this could have been me,'" Denis-Luque said. According to UNAIDS, the Joint United Nations Programme on HIV/AIDS, between 13,000 and 16,000 children ages 14 and younger are living with HIV in Haiti. For many of them, that diagnosis is a death sentence because their access to antiretroviral drugs is limited. Denis-Luque adds that because they have HIV, some kids are treated as outcasts. "They are taken advantage of because their parents are dead and the people entrusted to care for them such as a neighbor or an aunt or uncle will use them to collect money from aid agencies, and then leave them at hospitals when they get sick," she said.

Denis-Luque said Valcuse's story haunted her for weeks. When she returned to Florida, she raised $500 from friends and family and sent it to the nurse and counselor who first introduced her to Valcuse, who has since died. But the girl's desperate situation prompted Denis-Luque to create a special home for HIV-positive kids, and a model of care in which HIV-positive women would serve as live-in "house mothers" for the orphans. "We provide everything like a mom and dad would provide," Denis-Luque said. "They go to school with the other children in the community and we pay the costs."

Thirty-six children have found a home at Caring for Haitian Orphans with AIDS since it opened its doors nine years ago. Currently, 14 girls and six boys share a three-bedroom rental duplex with a courtyard. They are cared for by a full-time project coordinator, three live-in "house mothers," a part-time nurse, a tutor and an unpaid volunteer. Several of the youngsters are critically ill, but others are thriving. "When you go to the house, you see kids jumping around, reading, singing and doing things that all children do," Denis-Luque said. "I want them to have normal lives." Her main challenge, she said, is "funding to keep the home operating. We really rely on the kindness of people's hearts for funds. I want people to know that a lot of work can be done for just a little money. This past year, it cost us about $60,000 to run the organization and that included a small stipend for our dedicated staff, schooling for the kids, hospital care, housing and everything." The home for orphans with AIDS gets some outside help from a few church organizations in the U.S., but the home's director hopes for more donations and assistance from other unpaid volunteers. "I want this place to outlast me," Denis-Luque said.

For more information about the home, visit www.choaids.org. For more information about HIV in Haiti visit <http://www.unaids.org/en/regionscountries/countries/haiti/>.

Share: f t e +

Posted in Archive, Epidemiology, JPHCOPH