When Opinion Leaders Endorse Products — What Marketers Take Advantage of and Consumers Misconceive

Alexander Mueller
University of Saskatchewan, alexander.mueller@usask.ca

Marjorie Delbaere
University of Saskatchewan, delbaere@edwards.usask.ca

Follow this and additional works at: https://digitalcommons.georgiasouthern.edu/amtp-proceedings_2020

Part of the Advertising and Promotion Management Commons, and the Marketing Commons

Recommended Citation

https://digitalcommons.georgiasouthern.edu/amtp-proceedings_2020/43

This conference proceeding is brought to you for free and open access by the Association of Marketing Theory and Practice Proceedings at Digital Commons@Georgia Southern. It has been accepted for inclusion in Association of Marketing Theory and Practice Proceedings 2020 by an authorized administrator of Digital Commons@Georgia Southern. For more information, please contact digitalcommons@georgiasouthern.edu.
When Opinion Leaders Endorse Products — What Marketers Take Advantage of and Consumers Misconceive

Alexander Mueller
Edwards School of Business, University of Saskatchewan

Marjorie Delbaere
Edwards School of Business, University of Saskatchewan

Abstract

This conceptual paper explores the influence of opinion leaders, the elements of credibility, and draws on endorsement literature to illustrate how opinion leaders are perceived as credible sources in the market. The paper proposes a new type of opinion leader — the celebrity expert endorser (CEE). The CEE is characterized by the typical opinion leader behaviour in the form of information dissemination and the inherent motivation to collect information to pass it on to opinion seekers. However, the CEE also cooperates with marketers, manufacturers, and corporations and engages in some form of endorsement. As a result, the CEE walks a fine line between opinion leadership and endorsement, which makes it difficult for consumers to interpret the disseminated information. Two marketing strategies, representing common practices in the industry, serve as examples of how marketers utilize the influence of opinion leaders and how these strategies lead to distorted perceptions of consumers.