Intern Bio

The Communication Arts Department welcomes Samantha Shockley, its Summer 2011 intern.

As an intern she will assist the department with writing newsletters and releases as well as planning projects and a multitude of other projects.

Samantha is a senior public relations major from Snellville, Ga.

She hopes to work in a public relations department at an advertising or marketing firm after graduation.
Georgia Southern welcomed a new term to the summer lineup this year, Maymester. Many other universities offer this term during summer and now so does GSU.

It is a term that lasts three weeks and the students meet three hours a day five days a week.

Each class is a week’s worth of material.

Many students chose to take either the morning or the afternoon Maymester course.

A senior public relations major, Ashley Salim, said that she signed up to take it because a public relations elective was offered and those are difficult to get into, and she is returning to Atlanta to work once the term is over.

One student taking two Maymester courses, Robert Roberts, said he did this because the workload crammed into three weeks is worth it to be able to get the credit and be done so quickly.

Roberts said, “It [Maymester] has helped me learn to better manage my time and how to focus on school even though everyday is still a pool day.”

In an informal survey of ten students, all of them indicated that they think Georgia Southern should continue to offer Maymester in the future.

One senior said it is perfect for those who walk in spring commencement and still have a class to take in order to graduate. She said that Maymester makes it so that they can get to the “real world” faster.
