CVS Pharmacy expected to purchase Snooky’s lot

Following Statesboro City Council’s vote to allow CVS Pharmacy’s purchase of the property located at the intersection of Fair Road and Tillman Road, Snooky’s restaurant is expected to close.

The council voted in favor to rezone the 3.35 acres of land that currently includes Snooky’s, Andrew’s Klean Korner, a tanning salon, part of an apartment complex and offices.

The property was rezoned from Highway Oriented Commercial to Commercial Retail in order to allow CVS Pharmacy’s purchase.

“If they buy all of the property, which I don’t think has happened yet, they will own the entire property,” said Councilman John Riggs.

“They can do whatever they want. They can reopen Snooky’s or use it as storage or demolish it. It would be up to CVS.”

Public Safety Department receives accreditation

By KEN COLYER

The Georgia Southern University Department of Public Safety recently gained certification from the Georgia Agency Certification Program.

According to a press release, the certification is a progressive and time-proven way of helping law enforcement agencies calculate and improve their overall performance.

The department began working toward gaining accreditation in January of 2010 and continued working through the application process until last November when it completed the process.

“We’ve been doing most of these things on our own. It’s just that now, we’re documenting it,” said Chief Mike Russell.

The certification process is completed in six stages. Throughout the completion of these stages, the department undergoes a policy shift to the certification standards and then is assessed by GACP officials.

If the department passes the assessment, they move on to a joint review committee that either passes or advises the department on what it needs to correct.

If the department passes the joint committee review, then it is certified for a period of three years. It is also officially presented with the certification and must file annual reports to ensure continuing compliance.

This certification also brings added benefits such as greater recognition in the field of outstanding achievement and increased governmental support.

Only a select few departments in Georgia gain accreditation and even fewer college public safety departments are certified.

“There are about right at 700 departments in the state of Georgia. Of those, only 100 have this certification and out of those 100, only four departments are from college campuses,” said Russell.

Other colleges with GACP certification include Georgia Health Sciences University, Georgia State University and the University of Georgia.

many years. Former Georgia Southern University Head Football Coach Erk Russell was rumored to be a frequent visitor.

The restaurant is popular to many Statesboro residents, including Riggs who said he was patron for many years.

“I’ve been going to Snooky’s for over 40 years, pretty much since I was born,” said Riggs. “I wish they wouldn’t close. I would like them to stay open.”

The owner of Snooky’s, Bruce Yawn, is expected to retire, leaving the restaurant’s future in jeopardy. However, Yawn was not available to comment.

“I spoke with Mr. Bruce, he told me he’s been thinking about retirement for a while now and I think he should be able to retire whenever he wants,” said Riggs.

“I certainly understand his position and wish him well, but it will be a big blow to the community.”

GSU’s Department of Public Safety recently became one of only four accredited college public safety departments.

Wildfires are burning thousands of acres of land in south Georgia, causing the occasional smoky haze over Statesboro.

ut the area more down wind of the smoke, more toward Bulloch county. The afternoon thundershowers help with the wash out process. However, the bad news is, you can get lightning from those storms, which can ignite the fires,” said Murphey.

According to The Florida Times Union, Jacksonville issued a record tying number of air-quality advisories as of the end of June. Reuters stated that public health officials in Florida, Georgia and South Carolina cautioned people with chronic respiratory problems to stay out of the smoke as much as possible.

The Center for Disease Control in Atlanta described the smoke as a mixture of gases and burnt particles from the trees and plants. In a Reuters article, the CDC explained that the smoke can hurt resident’s eyes and irritate respiratory systems.

“The smoke is composed of particle pollution. The 2.5 microns or less is what we detect. As far as health, it is the cardio-pulmonary effect in the heart and lungs. The long-term exposure is what we are more concerned about. It also reduces visibility, sometimes people forget about that,” said Murphey.

The Okefenokee Swamp engulfed 287,833 acres since April, where the largest fire began due to a lightning strike. More than 1,000 acres have burned just since last week.

Although there were significant amounts of rain in the past week, it still is not enough to put out the flames. It would take many days of continuous rain to put out the Okefenokee fires, said Murphey.

The EPD advised residents to take extreme caution when throwing out cigarettes or handling fire outdoors. People with asthma or other heart and lung related issues are advised to stay inside and avoid prolonged exposure to the smoke.

Ga. fireworks law: enforce or abolish

Citizens of Statesboro and students of Georgia Southern University both enjoyed last week’s fireworks performance on the Fourth of July in one location or another.

However, some residents of the city chose not to attend a fireworks performance set up by the local community in either Statesboro or Savannah, but instead, chose to create their own.

According to the Georgia law, fireworks — larger than sparklers and fountains — set off by uncertified members of the community can result in a fine. This law was put in place due to the summer droughts and imminent threat of wildfires.

The state of Georgia should be concerned with the fact that fireworks were set off illegally by citizens since the state is in a current drought and wildfires are ravishing certain areas, but its law enforcement doesn’t seem to care.

However, if residents set off fireworks without a permit, then where is the local law enforcement? Fireworks performances were visible within many Statesboro neighborhoods and apartment complexes. This means those who set off the fireworks not only traveled to either South Carolina or Alabama purchase the illegal product, but also committed an illegal action.

Although the fireworks were being displayed without a permit, in a previously unapproved location, and with products purchased illegally, the local law enforcement didn’t issue warnings or fines to those who committed the act.

Laws are enacted for a reason and should therefore be enforced. If the law enforcement is not willing to ensure that the laws are upheld for the safety of the community, then there must not be a threat and there is no reason for the law to be implemented in the first place.

Therefore, the law banning fireworks in the state of Georgia should either be enforced — those who break it should receive warnings and fines — or the law should be abolished.

Either take a stand for what needs to be done in order to protect the citizens of this community or help to abolish the law and let everyone celebrate the holiday the way it is meant to be celebrated.

Abstain from ignorance, stay informed

This past weekend, I found myself fortunate enough to attend the Bulloch County Democratic Party first annual Independence Gala Fundraiser.

At this event, I was able to meet such people as Mike Berlon, chairman of the Georgia Democratic Party and Stacy Abrams, Georgia State House Representative minority leader, as well as some other influential people.

I know you are probably all surprised to know that I attended a Democratic fundraiser, but yes, I do identify as liberal.

After the event, we got to sit around and discuss the future of Georgia politics and we covered some interesting topics.

There were 60 elections in which there were no Democrats to run, basically giving the seat to the conservatives.

President Obama won 47 percent of Georgia in 2008. This means that Georgia could be a player in the 2012 election. It also means there is no reason for the Republicans to have won 60 seats unopposed.

The state is changing, and changing fast. Due to the high African American population in urban areas and the budding Hispanic population, Georgia is no longer a solid red state.

The Democrats have a chance here to play a big part in helping President Obama steal Georgia, which has, until recently, been considered to be a given for conservatives.

Let us be reminded that whatever you have to complain about under President Obama’s administration is not entirely his fault. The Republicans control the House and thus are a major player in passing and shooting down big pieces of legislation.

We all need to take a minute to look at what has happened, then see who was really behind it. There are fighting points on both sides; it’s just about what’s best for the country.

Would you be so eager to get Obama out of office that you would elect someone like Sarah Palin, who has been quoted saying she would win in 2012 if she decides to run.

Don’t do that to America, people. Rise above political ignorance and be informed on the issues and what we can do to fix them. I’m not saying, “Vote for Obama,” but I am saying don’t vote until you’ve done your homework.

Think about it like this: if you have a huge test tomorrow, are you going to buckle down and study, or just hope you get it right? The year 2012 is America’s next big test. So do America a favor and study before you take it.

Everyone has thought about killing his or her boss at some point in time. But, when do you actually draw the line and commit to it?

Nick, Kurt and Dale, played by Jason Bateman, Jason Sudeikis and Charlie Day, spend their bar nights dreaming of killing their severely horrible bosses.

Their work days get so bad to the point that they actually seek out a hit man to do the deed, and end up instead, with their murder consultant, Dean ‘MF’ Jones, played by Jamie Foxx.

“Horrible Bosses” seems at first to be just another “Hangover” with the same brand of slapstick humor and witty commentary. Well, pretty much it is, just without Zach Galifanakis.

The movie really does a great job of making the bosses truly detestable. Nick’s boss, Dave Harken, who is played by Kevin Spacey, is a paranoid, narcissistic CEO who treats his employees like morons and his wife even worse.

Dr. Julia Harris, played by Jennifer Aniston, is black-mailing Kurt with suggestive photos of their ‘love-making,’ threatening to show them to his fiancee if they don’t actually ‘get busy.’

Bobby Pellit of Pellit Chemicals takes over his father’s company after a fatal heart attack. Where Jack Pellit was likable and nice, Bobby is a crack-head, sleaze-bag tool that is afraid of men in wheel chairs and pregnant women.

“Horrible Bosses” takes that step in the dark territory of murder and suspicion, without taking it too far to where it’s a cheesy, unbelievable comedy. With every obstacle and mess up, the characters get in deeper and the plot gets even more hilarious.

The actors really come through and shine, bringing this movie that one step up to separate it from the “Hangover” and every other comedy movie the past few years.

Making over $20 million this past weekend, “Horrible Bosses” proves to be a perfect crowd-pleaser this summer and holds it’s own in the box office.

If you’re looking for an easy laugh and a few ridiculous, jaw-dropping moments, this movie will deliver in all the right, and the wrong ways.
The Averitt Center for the Arts in downtown Statesboro has an opposing duo of artists on display. The Calm and Clamor exhibit showcases a wide variety of art from painter Christopher Paul and sculptor Duke Oursler. They were hand picked by the gallery committee at the Averitt Center to show their work in the main gallery at the same time.

The committee thought that an exhibit featuring both artists would be interesting for students and the community.

Oursler's work consists of sculpture forms that represent the steps taken to create a sculpture. He uses different building materials to create three-dimensional works of art.

Paul's works are two-dimensional paintings that use acrylic paints mixed with varied materials, such as coffee.

Paul likes to create calming views of modern scenes that do not normally inspire a serene feeling. His painting "City-ish" is a contradicting view of skyscrapers painted in soft colors on a bold background.

"A visual arts committee here at the Averitt Center reviewed art submissions by both Paul and Oursler, and these individuals believed that the artwork of the two complemented one another," said Tim Chapman, the executive director at the Averitt Center.

The artwork from both of these artists is somewhat influenced by the environment around them and their everyday lives.

Oursler's work directly reflects the actual procedures that it takes to get one of his sculptures completed.

"I use hard geometric forms in my work. A lot of my work is based off of abstract things. My art is an expression of my process while I am working," said Oursler.

Oursler is an alumnus of Georgia Southern University and has taught several sculpture and three-dimensional art courses on campus.

Oursler finds a pleasure in his work when individuals develop their own thoughts about his art.

He also likes that his artwork sometimes remind visitors to the exhibit about events and situations in their lives.

"My work is not necessarily a thing where I'm trying to make a statement, I want people to see that this is interesting. I do not want people to have to think deep, but I do like it when they make their own interpretations of the artwork," said Oursler.

Finding a balance between the calm of Paul's work and the clamor behind Oursler's is easy when they are blended together in a formal gallery setting.

The two-dimensional and three-dimensional difference also attributes to the opposing feelings of the art.

"While Paul's paintings are very soothing and peaceful, Oursler's sculptures are more raw and extreme, and when you put the two together, there is a major contrast," said Chapman.

The blend of serene paintings and hard structures make this exhibit unique.

The Calm and Clamor exhibit will be on display in the main gallery at the Averitt Center until Aug 13.

What can an internship do for you?

By Sarah Dixon,
Marketing Intern

The desire for the ultimate dream job exists in millions of college students across the country. However, with the way the job market is today, it is necessary to have experience that will stand out against other applicants. You may ask, “What can I do to stand out?” Well, an internship could be your golden ticket to landing that job.

Employers look for hands-on experience rather than just classroom knowledge. Since an internship is an opportunity to learn as much as possible, it typically lasts one semester.

The position can be paid or non-paid, depending on the employer. Additionally, an internship position has the potential of turning into a career position.

Once a student has determined which internship they plan to accept, here are some tips to make the experience successful.

Dress and act like a professional, creating the impression that you belong there as much as anyone else. It is much easier to mingle with your fellow workers and supervisors if you feel a part of the organization.

Forming relationships in the workplace leads to the accumulation of strong letters of recommendation and fresh networking opportunities.

Another important step is to seek feedback on your performance from your current employer because it attests to your seriousness about the career and your desire to improve as a professional.

Finally, maintain contact with your co-workers or supervisors after you leave the organization. Doing so helps you to build your professional network and can lead to additional internship opportunities or a full-time job after graduation.

Major Decisions Cause Confusion

By Sarah Dixon,
Marketing Intern

Choosing a major is one of the most stressful decisions that a college student has to make because of the fear that interests will change or you won’t be happy in that field.

Not to mention, registering for classes can be quite confusing if you do not know which ones to select.

However, before you freak out, keep in mind that students change majors an average of three to five times during college, so you are not alone.

Career Services assistance is available to help guide you through your decision-making process.

So, what are the steps toward choosing your major? First, start your college career off with a strong GPA so you have a better chance of maintaining a 3.0 as your courses become more difficult.

Next, allow yourself time to do some career exploring. How are you supposed to know you want to do something for a living if you do not experience a day in the life of a professional in that field?

In order to do so, you can speak with a Career Advisor to learn about job shadowing opportunities in order to develop your own career plan.

Additionally, students can take the on-line career assessment, FOCUS, which will suggest different careers based on your interest, skills and abilities.

After completing FOCUS, students are encouraged to meet with a Career Advisor to discuss your results and determine potential career paths.

Additional options for further career exploration would be to volunteer, complete an internship or even consider a co-op. Joining campus clubs or organizations relevant to your chosen major is another option to explore careers.

Student organizations often bring in professionals to talk about their industry and company.

Men's Soccer looks to strive for better in 2011

After finishing last in the Southern Conference this past season, the Georgia Southern University Men’s Soccer team looks to use its experience from competing in Europe to make a statement this fall.

The men’s soccer team left for its 11 day European tour on May 13. GSU spent time in the presence of two of soccer’s biggest powerhouses: Spain and France.

Spain won last year’s World Cup and France won it in 1998. The men’s soccer team had the pleasure of watching professional European teams such as the European Champions, FC Barcelona play in an exhibition against Deportivo, and they had a series of friendly matches against three semi-professional teams.

Head Coach Kevin Kennedy shared his thoughts about the team’s visit overseas.

“I thought it was really neat. We got to play some professional teams and go to Camp Nou and see Barcelona play, as well as some other professional teams. It was really neat training with [them] and seeing their youth teams... [some] 17 and 18-year-olds competed for professional contracts,” said Kennedy.

GSU played San Lorenzo, a team recently promoted to the Second Division. It then moved on to Olympic Reserves, a French Division Three team that won the French Reserve League Championship in 2009 and 2010. The team ended its tour by playing in another exhibition match against AS Minguettes as its final test of the tour.

Kennedy said, “We played three games. We lost to San Lorzeno 2-0 — they were just promoted to the Spanish Second Division. We bounced back and beat the Olympic Reserves team 4-2 and then we closed out with a Third Division French team, AS Minguettes, and lost that game 2-0.”

Aside from competing and training with professionals, Kennedy mentioned another advantage the trip had to offer.

“It was a great experience for our team, but it was also great for our team to be together for two weeks to be around each other 24/7 and really come together and focus on soccer, as opposed to other things that student athletes are focused on while in school,” he said.

The Eagles will be put to the test in several exhibition games against the University of South Carolina at Aiken and Lander University Bearcats the following week before starting their regular season against Presbyterian College in Clinton, S.C.

The Eagles will compete against their regular SoCon opponents such as Elon, Furman, the University of North Carolina at Greensboro and College of Charleston. However, they will also play Division One teams such as North Carolina State, Belmont and Lipsicum.

Kennedy said he is very optimistic about taking on these teams.

Promising Season

“Hopefully, we’ll see the fruits of our labor because last year we were very young. Last year we were leading NC State 2-0 with 20 minutes left and lost 3-2, so hopefully we can go up there, score some goals, and put ourselves in a position to win again,” he said.

They have a philosophy of ball control that is definitely going to be tested this season. Last season, both UNC-Greensboro and the College of Charleston ascended to the national tournament, but the Eagles will be formidable themselves.

Kennedy said, “We haven’t changed much. We are a possession oriented team, we want to be able to hold the ball and play through teams. It requires us to be better technically and repetition and high pressure situations, we try to replicate that in practice.”

After finishing the season with a meager record of 3-11-1 and a conference record of 0-6-1, the Eagles have a promising season ahead of them. They did top the SoCon in saves per game with 16 by goalkeeper Neal Bates.

With eight returning juniors and seniors, the Eagles have a more complete team and roster to work with.

Additionally, last season, the team was very young with experience, so Kennedy is very confident there will be improvement this upcoming season. Some of the players have even taken some initiative to train over the summer.

The GSU men’s soccer team did celebrate Striker/Forward Jon Cox’s signing with the Atlanta Silverbacks and beginning his career in professional soccer.

Cox is only the second Eagle from the soccer team under Kennedy to ascend to the professional level of soccer. The first was Andreas Carrbrera in 2007 who signed with the Puerto Rican Islanders.

The Southern Conference established a marketing contract with CSE, its marketing consultant, to be broadcasted into the living rooms of fans in Georgia, North Carolina and South Carolina for the fall 2011 season.

This package will be televised into 11 million homes through 32 affiliates. This makes this platform the largest distribution package within one region across the broadcasting and cable domains. Additionally, the SoCon is already pursuing an expansion of the package into Alabama and Tennessee.

GSU fans will have the ability to watch the football team play SoCon foes Chattanooga and Furman via a webcast on the new Eagle Vision network. Simulcast will also be incorporated into this season, meaning statewide public television networks will be able to stream games on their respective websites. This will enable non-instate fans to monitor and support their teams when their team is on the road.

This football package will reach students and fans alike for not only the 2011 season, but the agreement also spans the 2012 and 2013 athletic seasons. The package will cover a total of eight football games per season.

Women’s World Cup

The qualifying round of the Women’s World Cup came to a dramatic and fantastic end with the United States defying the odds and surmounting one of the most unbelievable comebacks in Women’s World Cup history, and they did it with only 10 players on the pitch.

Viewer numbers all over the U.S. skyrocketed. The number of people tuned in equaled the number of views of the U.S. women’s last World Cup championship victory over China in 1999.

Additionally, the Brazil-U.S. quarterfinal match was played on the exact same date the U.S. defeated China to win its second World Cup final in July 1999. This brought much needed attention and publicity to an unknown tournament that is going on this summer.

The match, which was broadcasted on ESPN, acquired 3,890,000 viewers. This feat needed attention and publicity to an unknown tournament that is going on this summer.
