Rehabilitation Services News

Georgia Southern University

Follow this and additional works at: https://digitalcommons.georgiasouthern.edu/rehabilitation-news-online

Part of the Higher Education Commons

Recommended Citation
Georgia Southern University, "Rehabilitation Services News" (2019). Rehabilitation Sciences, Department of - News. 16.
https://digitalcommons.georgiasouthern.edu/rehabilitation-news-online/16

This news article is brought to you for free and open access by the Rehabilitation Sciences, Department of - Publications at Digital Commons@Georgia Southern. It has been accepted for inclusion in Rehabilitation Sciences, Department of - News by an authorized administrator of Digital Commons@Georgia Southern. For more information, please contact digitalcommons@georgiasouthern.edu.
On October 12th, 29 first-and-second year graduate physical therapy students spent their Saturday providing blood pressure and balance screenings to 114 Savannah community members as part of two National PT Day of Service events.

The Day of Service is organized by the Physical Therapy Association of Georgia and the American Physical Therapy Association as part of National Physical Therapy Month. The 5-hour long events took place at the Southwest Branch of Live Oak Public Library and the Forsyth Farmers’ Market and were organized by Haley Worst, PT, DPT, OCS, assistant professor in the Department of Rehabilitation Sciences.

“I chose to volunteer because the profession that I am working towards does not stop outside the hours of 9-5. Physical therapy is meant to be a continual effort to serve the community in the best way that one can,” stated Luke Thayer, a second-year DPT student. “A lot of citizens are not informed of the benefits of physical therapy and do not realize that we treat more than post-operative individuals and sports injuries. We are musculoskeletal experts and can facilitate an increase in one’s wellness by improving function, movement, balance and decreasing pain,” stated the Grayson, Georgia, native.

Students were enthusiastic about the community’s response to the events and enjoyed the opportunity to interact with people from the community while providing each participant a meaningful healthcare service.

“I enjoyed having the opportunity to interact with the community, apply the skills I have learned so far and being able to continue to develop my personal communication skills,” stated first-year student Jacob Gross from Thomaston, Georgia.

Second year DPT student Alicia Connolly from Dacula, Georgia, chose to participate in the PT Day of Service event as a way to make a contribution to the community and get hands-on experience. “The event gave me an opportunity to assess people and talk with them about their health which will help better my skill set for when I am actually working and treating patients.”

In addition to Georgia Southern student volunteers, several current and retired physical therapy faculty members assisted in the event. Participating faculty included Worst, Sharan Zirges, PT, DPT, MSHA, Andi Beth Mincer, PT, Ed.D., and Professor Emeritus Anne Thompson.

The Physical Therapy program at Georgia Southern University is a full-time doctoral program housed in the Department of Rehabilitation Sciences. The program consists of nine semesters of academic coursework, including three full-time clinical affiliations and several additional clinical experiences.

Posted in Events, General Announcements