Reference Code (2.1): 40-42 Collection Guide to Desegregation records in University Archives

Name and Location of Repository (2.2): Special Collections, Lane Library, Georgia Southern Univ. Armstrong Campus, Savannah, GA, 31419

Title (2.3): Discovering Desegregation at Armstrong: Records and Papers

Date(s) (2.4): Inclusive dates: 1966-1994
Bulk dates: 1974-1978

Extent (2.5): Core is three record storage boxes (40-42) from President Ashmore's administrative records, but several other record groups have related content.

Name of Creator(s) (2.6): Office of the President, Ashmore

Scope and Content (3.1): The Discovering Desegregation at Armstrong describes material from the University Archives related to desegregation of Armstrong State College. Most of the material (Box 40-43 and Box 5) are part of the Administrative Records of President Henry L. Ashmore \(1964-1982\). Also described are records from the Joint Graduate Program, Student Government, and President Burnett's administrative records.

Conditions Governing Access (4.1): Open

Language and Scripts of Material (4.5): English

Administrative/Biographical History (2.7): In 1969 a review of the University System of Georgia's (USG) compliance with the Civil Rights Act of 1964 concluded "The State of Georgia is operating a dual system of higher education based on race in that past patterns of racial segregation have not been eliminated from most of the institutions within the system." (Paul M. Riling, Regional Civil Rights Director, to George M. Simpson, 26 February 1970 as quoted in From the Mansion to the University, 2010, p. 183.) Savannah was home to two units of the USG, Savannah State College, an historically black institution, and Armstrong State College, historically white. The Office of Civil Rights called for a System wide plan, which became successive plans; implementation overseen by the Dept. of Health, Education and Welfare (HEW.) In Savannah, Armstrong and Savannah State tried a joint graduate program from 1971-1978. Then, in 1979 the schools exchanged academic programs: all business to Savannah State and all education to Armstrong. Merging the two schools was seriously considered by the USG during 1982-1983. As part of Georgia Southern University's designation as a regional university for South Georgia, the three schools joined their graduate programs, from 1990 to 1995. Savannah's part in the plans for the further desegregation of the University System of Georgia are significant; Janet Stone used these records in her scholarly history Armstrong, especially chapter nine, "The Adams Case 1970-1979" and chapter eleven, "Quo Vadis Uncertain Directions in the 1980s". Stone's Timeline of USG desegregation plans with ASC/SSC highlights (Appendix A p. 316) is a valuable guide. Stone's history is available from the Digital Commons @ Georgia Southern open access as a pdf download <https://digitalcommons.georgiasouthern.edu/armstrong-about/7/>
