

August 2014

In a Country Churchyard

Aidan Rooney

Follow this and additional works at: <https://digitalcommons.georgiasouthern.edu/iss>

Part of the Celtic Studies Commons, and the Literature in English, British Isles Commons

---

Recommended Citation

Rooney, Aidan (2014) "In a Country Churchyard," Irish Studies South: Iss. 1, Article 28.

Available at: <https://digitalcommons.georgiasouthern.edu/iss/vol1/iss1/28>

This article is brought to you for free and open access by the Journals at Digital Commons@Georgia Southern. It has been accepted for inclusion in Irish Studies South by an authorized administrator of Digital Commons@Georgia Southern. For more information, please contact digitalcommons@georgiasouthern.edu.

In a Country Churchyard

Aidan Rooney

We want him to go out on a high note,
said the gravedigger's eldest son, himself
a gravedigger. He stood back from the edge,
his right foot on the left lug of a spade.
White orchids soothed the rug of manmade grass rolled out over planks laid across the space.

His father sat fornenst the opened plot,
on a stone wall the sun going down lit up.
It shone on the flowers and warmed the father,
his good cap doffed, his head inclined in rest.
He'd dug for everyone in the graveyard,
Mad Dog even, and the Hunger Strikers.

We haven't told him yet, the son disclosed,
but will when all the fuss is over.
His father's hair, as the poet's used to, glowed
in a sudden, sideways burst of sunshine.
Magnesium burning. And would not let up no matter the light. Or the light dying.

After tea, the son drove in the digger,
its link-box raised, then tipped, to fill the hole
with shingle scooped from the shore of Lough Neagh.
It fell like the wall of a waterfall.
He watched his father through its thinning veil
get up to get the shovel and the rake.