The exhibit has impacted students from Georgia Southern University. Youssef Salhi, Advisor of the Arabic Club, would like people to know that “Arab Americans are Americans just like everyone else. They may come from a different part of the world, but they are Americans. They are Arabs and have self-identities that they are proud of. Through their identity, they have a lot to share such as the way they cook their food, the way they interact with their family, and their values.”
