Carolyn Nixon is Named a Rangel Fellow
Carolynn Nixon (political science) graduated from Georgia Southern University in 2017, but she still keeps in contact with her peers and mentors. This fall, those networks helped in her successful pursuit of a Charles B. Rangel Fellowship, which will provide funding for a master’s degree program in international affairs and placement in internships with the United States Department of State. Upon completion of the two-year degree, Rangel Fellows work for the government for five years.

Honors Program alumnus Tony Hudson (international studies, ’17), one of Nixon’s peers, received this award in 2017. Hudson inspired Nixon to look into the program and eventually apply. Nixon’s support from her peers as well as her professors gave her the push she needed to pursue this opportunity.

Dr. Jamie Scalera, a professor with the Department of Political Science and International Studies, was an important figure for Nixon during the application process. “She notified me when the application was open, read drafts of my purpose statement, wrote me a letter of recommendation, and made sure I was in contact with other students who had applied. All of my professors in the department have always been supportive and encouraging. They continued to look out for my best interests even after I graduated,” she said.

Coffee, Beignets, and Conference Conversations

New Orleans, Louisiana is an eccentric, vibrant city that is as unique as its people, and a few University Honors Program students experienced that city’s unique culture and history while they presented research at the Popular Culture Association of the South (PCAS).
Dra. Leticia McGrath led the students on this trip, and as a member of PCAS, she tries to attend this conference each year and to take students with her. “I take students because it allows them the opportunity to present their research in a professional setting where they can receive feedback and participate in discussions that will help them in future research,” she said.

Emily Pressler (Spanish and French ’19), who has gone to several conferences with Dra. McGrath, agrees. “This was a great opportunity to present my preliminary thesis research findings,” she said.
