The community is invited to attend.

About Jeff Schmuki

Jeff's work combines ceramic materials, living plants, and sustainable power technologies, with repurposed commercial products. He feels that issues of environmental ethics can be more about the tools, models, and ideas that already exist and less about the problems and limitations we need to overcome. Topics such as ecology, sustainability, urban planning, and the Do-It-Yourself ideology influence Jeff's practice. His works generally fall into the Sculpture/Installation/Intervention formats and often address site-specific concerns, the natural and/or social environment, and the innovative retooling/reuse of common materials. By inventing new ways to connect nature to everyday life, Jeff transgresses boundaries between art, architecture, landscape, and design.
