National Youth Advocacy and Resilience Journal

Volume 3
Issue 1 Fall 2018

Article 7

December 2018

The Departed Girl

Amber Moore
University of British Columbia

Follow this and additional works at: <https://digitalcommons.georgiasouthern.edu/nyar>

Recommended Citation

Moore, A. (2018). The Departed Girl. National Youth Advocacy and Resilience Journal, 3(1).
<https://doi.org/10.20429/nyarj.2018.030107>

This art corner is brought to you for free and open access by the Journals at Digital Commons@Georgia Southern. It has been accepted for inclusion in National Youth Advocacy and Resilience Journal by an authorized administrator of Digital Commons@Georgia Southern. For more information, please contact digitalcommons@georgiasouthern.edu.

The Departed Girl

Abstract

This poem is inspired by a participant in Sunde-Peterson's (2014) case study that explored how a gifted youth faced adversity. The participant who inspired the subject of this poem faced much trauma; Sunde-Peterson was interested in how this impacted her development, while this poem attempts to imagine her escape beyond the data collection period. Like Sunde-Peterson, the speaker of this poem also posits that how gifted youth respond to trauma warrants more attention.

Amber Moore is a Ph.D. student at the University of British Columbia studying language and literacy education with the Faculty of Education. Her research interests include adolescent literacy, trauma literature, and exploring gender and sexualities issues in school. She also enjoys writing poetry and creative nonfiction.

Keywords

poem, girlhood, runaway, trauma, coming-of-age

Creative Commons License

This work is licensed under a Creative Commons Attribution-Noncommercial-No Derivative Works 4.0 License.

Cover Page Footnote

I would like to thank the Language and Literacy Education department in the Faculty of Education and the University of British Columbia for funding my Ph.D. program. I would also like to express deep gratitude to my supervisors, Dr. Mary Bryson and Dr. Annette Henry, for their continued support and guidance. Finally, I owe a huge thank-you to Dr. Carl Leggo for the invitation to write this piece.

The departed girl

Amber Moore

University of British Columbia

She grew up without help in a town too small for her. Everyone knew it.
Her eyes were wider than others'— she could see farther than the church and the school—both full of books she read long ago, like Matilda, who could never be satiated by the religiously curated words.

She became a real-life doll to the adults who cared for her. She was their confidante, keeper of secrets. She would listen and stare back with those glass eyes and flattened hair from too much time on her back, trying to quiet her thinking self. She began to learn that support would come for her “from the outside.”

Her departure was distressing; the player rejects the toy when it's ready, not the other way around. She turned her glass eyes to a stranger she spent time getting angry at institutions with before leaving him for someone who read as much as her and could also cross borders.

Through moments of troubled autonomy and after finally finding a focus, she burned her possessions and became an advocate instead of a poppet, inhabiting soft skin this time that could be touched. She was a good fit in this new environment of confirmation, a sense-making process analyzed and therefore, valued.