ABOUT THE COLLECTION

Administrative History: The Marvin Pittman Laboratory School, founded in the 1920s, was part of the teacher education curriculum of Georgia Normal School, later Georgia Southern University. Georgia Normal School, established in 1924, was created to train South Georgia's rural teachers. The Laboratory School moved to campus between August 30, 1926, and July, 1927. Being located on the campus, the school was able to offer both an elementary school and a high school.

The Laboratory School was named for Marvin Pittman following his death in 1954 by a newly elected Bulloch County Board of Education. Marvin Pittman came to South Teachers College in 1934 as President. With his help, the college was able to secure a large amount of grant money from the Rosenwald Fund. Marvin Pittman was able to transform different programs of study, the training of teachers, and the physical aspects of the campus. The school held his name, his goals, and his visions for education until the closure of the Marvin Pittman Laboratory School in 1999.

Scope and Content: This collection consists of materials documenting this history of Marvin Pittman Laboratory School. Materials span 1938-1997 the bulk of which cover 1970-1997 and include yearbooks, scrapbooks, student work, plaques, slides, photographs, and ephemera. Documentation of core expectations, courses taught, accomplishments, student/parent handbooks, and various activities during events are also housed in this collection.
