COE alumna uses Google to connect students, teachers globally

Educational technology has become a passion for Georgia Southern University College of Education (COE) alumna Hollie Sisk ('01,'05).

A media specialist in the Bulloch County School system, Sisk desired to train not only students but also her fellow educators on how to utilize Google for Education, an online resource of applications for educators to connect, discover new educational products and news, and participate in training on a global perspective.

"Seventeen of the 18 districts in First District RESA are implementing Google for Education with a goal of eventually becoming one-to-one with devices like the Chromebook; however many teachers do not know how to use Chromebooks and Google for Education core suite of services," said Sisk.
