Students and Professors view Eclipse in Savannah

Two Armstrong students come fully prepared with eclipse glasses to watch the event on Tybee Island.

MADISON WATKINS
STAFF WRITER

The hype of the Great American Total Solar Eclipse finally came to an end on Monday, August 21 at 2:45pm. Many students were able to enjoy the eclipse while school was still in session as professors cancelled their classes for the day.

Senior biology major, Megan Odom, was ready for the eclipse.

“Yes, I care about the eclipse. I have never seen one before in my lifetime, and I may not get the opportunity to see one again. Even though I don't have eclipse glasses, I still am excited to see the effects of it.”

Undeclared sophomore,

Jacob Ivester, was less excited about the eclipse.

“I don't really get the hype because it has no real effect on me or the outcome of my life. It gets dark every day, and the only difference for this is that it happens for only a few minutes during the day.”

Anyone that missed the eclipse can catch the next two in 2019 and 2024, though neither will pass directly through North America. While eight more solar eclipses will happen worldwide over the next ten years, only a select few will be visible in North America.

Junior theatre major, Jordan Soto, is excited about the next eclipse in 2024.

“I'm still looking forward to it! As long as we can see more of it because today just seemed like any other rainy day.”

Senior Lecturer of Astronomy and Physics, Donna Mullenax, says Armstrong State University was not in the path of totality: Savannah had 97% coverage. This means the moon covered 97% of the Sun from our view in Savannah.

“The path of totality cut through Georgia, but only through the extreme northeast corner, including Rabun, Towns, Stephens, Habersham, White and Union counties.”

Since Savannah was near the end of the eclipse's path, coverage did not begin for us until 1:15 pm and ended at 4:09 pm, with our maximum coverage at 2:46 pm.

Local stores sold out of certified solar eclipse glasses weeks before the event, so many students worried about acquiring glasses to safely watch the eclipse. Their worries were largely unwarranted since rainy weather blocked what could have been, what Mullenax called “spectacular.”

Odom also said it was a bit disappointing. “I'm not as excited [to see the next eclipse] as I was for this one.” While the eclipse was masked by a rain cloud in Savannah, millions of people along the line of totality had the chance to experience the entire solar eclipse.

More information on this year's eclipse and future eclipses worldwide can be found at www.nasa.gov or timeanddate.com.

International Student Organization Hosting Camping Retreat

LILA MILLER
A&E EDITOR

On the Labor Day weekend of Sept. 1-3, Armstrong's International Student Organization (ISO) is hosting a camping retreat to St. Simon's Island, Ga. St. Simon's Island is the largest barrier island within a cluster of islands that makes up the Golden Isles.

International students and students who have previously participated in a study abroad program are encouraged to apply. However, current students may also apply if availability remains open.

The event's registration fee was originally $93 but has been reduced to $50 as ISO has agreed to pay for half of the cost of the fee. The registration fees include cabin housing, all meals and transportation to and from St. Simon's Island. The deadline to apply and register for the camping retreat is Aug. 28.

Participating students of the event will be residing in the Aldergate youth cabins at Epworth by the Sea, facilities used by Armstrong for past events.

The group will be accompanied by the Director of International Education, Dr. Mertz-Weigel and International Student Services Program Coordinator, Sara Nobles. Team Leaders ISO President Samuel Sanya and Vice President Kaushal Patel will be leading students in games, exercises and workshops.

Program participants will be able to enjoy camping in the cabins, creating camp fires, field games and a scavenger hunt, swimming, icebreakers, team building exercises and leisure time to explore St. Simon's Island.

An important aspect of the retreat is to facilitate team building exercises and student bonding. Group events will help students build skills, understand conflict styles, successfully navigate interpersonal relations and understand different cultural and societal norms.

Members of ISO and their team of executives include students from western Europe, Wales, India, Nigeria, Kenya, Jamaica and Vietnam. The main purpose of the retreat is fostering community between students.

The retreat will give students an opportunity to get out of Savannah and make friends. Students will engage in viewing different perspectives while meeting people from various backgrounds, including race, class, gender, sexuality and those who are not able-bodied. Worthy of note is that Epworth by the Sea's recreation centers are entirely handicap accessible.

“Icebreakers are always fun, we [ISO] put in a lot of work to share useful information for students during their time in the U.S. as well as back in their home country.” Nobles said.

The itinerary for the retreat is broken into one day segments throughout the duration of the three day stay and is available via Armstrong's ISO page.

ISO will also be offering events throughout the fall semester including club meetings, cultural celebrations, International Cafe, International Day of Peace, International Education Week, Taste of the World and Discover Belize. More information will become available as the dates approach.

The informal mission statement of ISO is to aid “current international students and domestic students [to] come together to celebrate their unique heritages... no matter where you are from, you will find family and friendship at Armstrong!” ISO also promotes “diversity, acceptance and friendship.”

For more information on ISO, please visit their office on campus in Gamble Hall in room 110, or add their group “Armstrong International Student Organization” on Facebook.

Armstrong Back-to-School Essentials

A few back to school items that are essential for success. (Mitchell McDuffie)

PAIGE SCOTT
STAFF WRITER

With the second week of the semester under your belts, it's time to switch back to school mode. Everyone has a specific ritual to prepare for the semester, such as going school supply shopping or waiting a till the first week to buy textbooks. Regardless, there are a few common back-to-school essentials that every Pirate needs to know to start their semester.

The most overlooked back-to-school essential is a planner, organizer, or agenda. Many students fail to utilize the benefits a planner can provide. When used correctly, an agenda can help you stay organized and keep track of due dates, meetings, and events happening on campus.

However, the difficult part of having an organizer is remembering to use and look at it. Once you are in the habit of jotting things down and checking it regularly, your planner will be a significant part of school. Nevertheless, when you purchase a planner, it is necessary to get a writing utensil.

Samara Johnston, a senior English major, says her back-to-school essential “... is a really good pen.” Pens are great writing tool to have during a busy semester in order to quickly take notes or write things down in your planner.

Different colored pens can help color code notes, outlines, and things in a planner. Victoria Peebles, junior Education major, likes to pair her pens “...with a binder filled with separate dividers for each class to keep things organized.” Whether it be an expensive gel pen or a cheap ballpoint, pens paired with an organizer can help keep you on task.

Although it is obvious that school can be mentally exhausting, many students fail to realize the toll it takes on their health. It is important, at the very least, to remain hydrated during and in between classes. Therefore, a reusable water bottle makes the list of back-to-school essentials.

Armstrong makes it easy by having water bottle filling stations in several of the buildings on campus. By having a reusable water bottle at all times, you can stay hydrated and save costs. Also, you help save the environment by reducing your plastic consumption!

S'well water bottles such as the brand S'well, keep liquids cold for 24 hours and hot for 12 hours, and come in all kinds of fun prints and colors.

Retail stores, like Wal-Mart or the Armstrong bookstore, have numerous options of cost-friendly reusable water bottles.

All over campus you find students with headphones in their ears. It is almost unavoidable to listen to music in between classes. Thus, a good music playlist is a back-to-school essential.

Whether you make your own or find one online, a good playlist can help keep you focused while studying, doing homework, and writing essays. Spotify has a variety of playlists designed specifically for studying and offers a student discount for Spotify Premium. So, pick your tunes, and get to studying!

The final back-to-school essential is a portable charger. During a full day of classes, your phone is bound to die. What's worse than being stuck on campus with a dead phone? With only a few outlets in each classroom, it's not guaranteed that you'll find a spot near one.

Portable chargers make it easy to quickly charge your phone in your backpack or pocket. The convenience of the charger will provide an ease of mind and emergency solution to your electronic devices. However, make sure it's charged before you leave home!

In the event that you are struggling to transition into the semester, use these back-to-school essentials to help ease your way. There are more options that you can use additionally, but these are common among the Armstrong campus.

Housing’s Semi-Annual Block Party Welcomes New Students

MADISON WATKINS
STAFF WRITER

Armstrong’s Housing Department held its semi-annual Block Party on the brick pathway between Windward Commons and Compass Point on August 19.

The Housing Department holds this event at the beginning of the fall and spring semester to engage new and returning students and encourage proactivity in on campus.

The company Fun Times that offers attractions at many events on campus throughout the year provided this year’s amenities as well. Many of the different organizations and clubs on campus set up tables to engage with the students and give them information on what they are about.

This year the Block Party coincided with the Meet the Greeks event where students can meet the representatives of the different fraternities and sororities on campus. The Meet the Greeks event had representatives from the Alpha Sigma Tau, Delta Sigma Theta, Tri Sigma sororities and the Kappa Sigma and Pi Kappa Alpha fraternities this year, and started earlier in the afternoon with the Block Party following afterwards.

Multiple student organizations and clubs handed out flyers, food and water bottles in aims to self-promote and to accommodate for the sweltering Savannah weather.

Among the many student organizations, there were ministry groups: the Baptist Collegiate Ministry (BCM)

and the SEEK Catholic Campus Ministry, the Recreation and Wellness Center and research groups: Terrapin Educational Research Program of Savannah (TERPS) and clubs such as the Armstrong Pre-Pharmacy Club, the Gay-Straight Alliance (GSA) and Go Green Armstrong.

We stood in at a couple of tables. To get an interview with club representatives. One such table featured the TERPS group. The goal for the TERPS group is to raise awareness for the Terrapin Turtles that are commonly found in this area around this time of year when they are nesting and are commonly in danger of being run over. The place where they are most at risk is on Highway 80 that leads to Tybee Island.

“If we find an abandoned nest we will bring the eggs back to campus and put them in an incubator until they are ready to hatch. Once they hatch we take care of the turtles until they are ready to be released back into the wild...

we always get a good amount of people interested in the program at events like these who start regularly attending the meetings” explained Chelsie Miles, research student for TERPS.

Another table featured BCM where Campus Minister Tony Branham welcomed students and facilitated outreach. “These events are very beneficial. They are definitely worthwhile and always bring in people. We were able to get a lot of students’ emails today so we can keep them up to date on our events,” Branham said.

Many students enjoyed what the Block Party had to offer. Here are some remarks by attendees at the event. “My third semester [living on campus] is going very well. I like all of my roommates that I’m living with and the rooms in Compass Point are very nice and comfortable,” Sophomore mechanical engineering major Austin Webb said.

Housing director Nick Shrader and assistant director Katie Fester were delighted that the students were enjoying themselves.

“These events are about giving the students an opportunity to engage with others and see what the campus has to offer,” Shrader said. “The Block Party is a big community builder. It really helps all of the organizations reach out to students and the residential students in particular.” Fester elaborated.

They mentioned having student enjoyment in mind organizing the Block Party, and every year when they try to refine the event by bringing back popular attractions and orchestrating new activities.

The Housing Department will be organizing more on-campus events in the upcoming months, more details will be available as the dates approach.

Local Author Zach Powers Hosts Book Release Party at Pinkie Masters

JOHN SINGER
STAFF WRITER

On August 18, the Original Pinkie Masters hosted a book release party for local author Zach Powers’ latest book, “100 Things to Do in Savannah Before You Die.”

Powers’ book hit shelves in stores and online August 16 with a release party on August 18 at local downtown Savannah bar, Pinkie Masters, where he elaborated about his successes in writing.

The sense of community is one of the biggest things Author Zach Powers, a Savannah native, said he misses about living here, while he recounted his experience of living between cities, Savannah, Ga. and Fairfax, Va.

Throughout the past few years, Powers has written everything from commercials for local TV station WTOC and short stories for literary journals to newspaper columns in Do Savannah’s monthly alcohol column, “The Proof”.

Powers lead the writer’s workshop at Flannery O’Connor’s Childhood Home for eight years. Powers’ previous book of short stories, “Gravity Changes,” recently won the BOA Editions Limited’s award for short fiction and was published in May of this year.

Powers says he really got into creative writing while working at WTOC, “I was part time at the beginning and had long breaks in between newscasts, like three hours, it was a little too far away for me to drive home and back, so I would stop in at [local coffee shop] Gallery Espresso and sit there for two or three hours writing or reading, that was the beginning of taking it a bit more seriously and thinking maybe this is the direction I should go.”

While he doesn’t follow a writing routine, Powers believes it’s important to set aside some sort of time to write every day. He notes, “Pretty consistently I write in a coffee shop or someplace like that. Sitting in the corner is just the right level of distraction that keeps me from getting bogged down in boringness, and also pulls me out of my head enough to keep me moving forward, but sometimes writing means staring at the computer for an hour not typing anything. Sometimes failing miserably at putting words on the page is just what you got to go with. Inspiration isn’t always something that comes to you; you always have to be moving towards it, if you’re not, you still might get inspiration sometimes, but not nearly as often. I’m always sitting there, thinking, reading weird things about science, reading outside my genre trying to pull in ideas from different places, bingeing tv, anything can give you inspiration.”

When asked his best advice for young writers, Powers encourages writers to remember that “The first draft of anything you write is probably really far away from what the final draft should be. Everything you see in a book has been revised at least twelve times, I have a short story in my collection that has been revised 64 times, and even for a novel, I’ll probably do ten significant revisions. Study the craft, there’s craft and talent in writing, you need both, and both can be developed, but craft is centered in that revision process, in polishing up what you have on the page into something someone wants to read.”

Powers’ recommends that next week Armstrong students pick up some good reads at E. Shaver’s Books or The Book Lady Bookstore, visit Tybee Island before the Labor Day rush or grab some all-American grub at Betty Bombers.

CAMPUS VOICES: What was your most memorable moment of the Eclipse?

Me and my boyfriend broke up...and it was cloudy.

The clouds, maybe how dark it got.

Sierra Davis
Junior, Chemistry

It was raining. Years from now, when my kids ask me what happened on that fate-ful monday at 1:30 PM EST, I'll say 'I looked up at the sky and rain fell into my eye, and my contact fell out. It was a horrible experience.

How to Survive Freshman Year: 6 Do's and Dont's

PAIGE SCOTT
STAFF WRITER

By now you're probably overwhelmed by all the advice everyone you know has tried to give you about starting your first year of college: go to class, study, and don't party every night. Well lucky for you, I've been through it all. With my college career coming to an end, I can't help but think back on what I wish I would've known when I came to Armstrong.

DON'T: Be loud on the second floor of Lane Library. A big thing I wish I would've known during the first few weeks of my freshman year at Armstrong is that the second floor of the library is the Quiet Floor. It is designated for students to be able to study and do homework without any distractions. This is a great place to hunker down and get work done. The first floor is a little less serious, with several computers and tables for group study sessions, but both floors also have study rooms available for reservation. *TIP: Bring a sweater or jacket because it's always freezing in there!

DON'T: Be afraid of your professors. One of the best things about Armstrong is our amazing professors. Every one of your professors is there to help you, and would be happy to do so. They all are experts in their field, so ask questions in class, e-mail them, or take advantage of their office hours. Don't be afraid to speak up. Building relationships with your professors can be beneficial later in your academic career in case you need a recommendation for a job or graduate school.

DON'T: Expect everything to work out perfectly. No one is perfect. You're going to miss a quiz, forget an assignment, and fail a paper. You'll lock yourself out of your room and fight with your roommate. There will be times when it seems like everything is falling apart, but know that it will be okay. Every student has been in this position and you will see the light at the end of the tunnel. Within the first year you tend to learn a number of things and make the most friends. Once you get through this semester, the next few will go by in the blink of an eye. So, enjoy the good times and the bad.

DO: Use your designated printing money!! At the beginning of every semester, Armstrong gives every student $8.00 worth of printing money to be used at WEPA print stations around campus via PirateCard. I had no idea this existed until my second year at Armstrong. Now, I always try to use every bit of the $8.00. WEPA print stations are conveniently located around campus in the library, Student Union, and

Learning Commons. *TIP: If you can't make it to a WEPA Print Station, there's free printing in the Writing Center located in Gamble Hall.

DO: Take advantage of the Fitness & Wellness Programs. One of the biggest changes when you head off college is being able to eat whatever you want whenever you want. With that freedom comes one of the scariest things: the Freshman 15. Some people think that the Freshman 15 is a myth, but I'm here to tell you it's 100% real. To avoid the Freshman 15, take advantage of the Fitness & Wellness Programs that Armstrong offers to all students. The Student Recreation Center on campus has a variety of fun activities you can take part in. From group fitness classes to basketball and ping pong, the SRC has something for everyone. They even offer Personal Trainers at an affordable cost for students, faculty, and staff.

DO: Join clubs and organizations. Armstrong has more than 100 student organizations for students join. From fraternities and sororities to student government and service opportunities, there's something for everyone. Joining a student organization is a great way to make friends with similar interests and get involved in things on campus. Not only is it fun to be involved in things on campus, but being a member of a student organization looks great on a resume or grad school application. So, don't be afraid to step out of your comfort zone and find a club that you're interested in. I know it's cliché, but college is the best years of your life. You should aim to have fun, but be responsible. Take advantage of the opportunities you have while on campus and you can set the foundation for your future. I hope these tips help you have a great first year!

The Eagles Land In Savannah for Fan Fest 2017

Coach Summers signing autographs. (Ethan Smith)

ETHAN SMITH
STAFF WRITER

The 2017 Georgia Southern University (GSU) Eagles Football team arrived in Savannah for Fan Fest at Armstrong State University

(ASU) on Friday, August 18th. ASU students and faculty, Savannah locals, and GSU students and alumni attended the event that kicked off with a scrimmage game as Georgia Southern players and coaches prepare for the 2017 NCAA Division I college football season.

GSU is recovering from its disposition last season as a school in the Sun Belt Conference with a subpar record of 5-7(4-4), however their performance did not translate to their record. The Eagles started 3-0, with victories over Savannah State, South Alabama, and UL Monroe. After three consecutive wins, the Eagles lost to Western Michigan 49-31, Arkansas State 27-26 and ACC power Georgia Tech 35-24. Those losses dropped the team to 3-3(2-1) at the season's midpoint.

The Eagles finally got back in the win column against New Mexico State 22-19, and they'd go on their second losing streak of the season by losing four times in a row to Appalachian State 34-10, SEC power Ole Miss 37-27, Louisiana 33-26, and Georgia State 30-24. The Eagles won against Troy to end the season, but due to a 5-7(4-4) record, they did not qualify for a bowl game.

Looking ahead, GSU plays many powerhouse teams again, the first big game being at Auburn on September 2nd. The game will air on SEC Network.

The GSU Southern Pride Band, the GSU Cheerleaders, Gus the Mascot, and Freedom, GSU's bald eagle, also made appearances.

Georgia Southern's athletic director, Tom Kleinlein, intends to include the Armstrong campus in sports events in the future. "There is some work required to ... get these facilities to Division I standards [for football], but things like soccer games ... and volleyball matches ... will be played here in the very near future."

Students can expect the Savannah campus to be included in the sports scene of Georgia Southern, but it will be a slow transition because of the cost to improve Armstrong campus's grounds to be suitable for heavier sports.

Kleinlein gives Armstrong sports fans something to look forward to, saying, "We will do a lot more fan events and fan watch parties and those kinds of things."

Once the scrimmage ended, players and coaches set up for pictures and autographs, and many students from both ASU and GSU stayed around for Fan Fest, an after-party with perks like prizes and inflatables. The prizes included t-shirts, raffles for athletic wear, and game packages and were open to all in attendance.

Georgia Southern's head football coach, Tyson Summers, was impressed with the turnout for the event. "We have a really good crowd and we are very excited about how many people from Savannah and from Armstrong State came out to support us. We are very appreciative of being able to come over here."

Furthermore, the players had great things to say about the consolidation, coming to Savannah, and the possibility of more sports being included on the Armstrong campus.

Senior receiver at Georgia Southern and finance major, Myles Campbell, said,

"We had a great environment and a very good turnout and it was a great practice today. Savannah is a place that I love too. It's a great environment, a great community, and a lot of our fans are here."

Senior linebacker at Georgia Southern and marketing major, Chris DeLaRosa, said, "I'm really excited about [the merger]. It was really exciting coming out here today. We had great weather and I love Savannah as a city and I think we had a great turnout."

After meeting some of the fans in attendance, DeLaRosa also said, "I'm excited to go out here and meet with the fans some more, maybe get in the bounce house and just have some fun."

Others in attendance were excited to see the scrimmage and meet the football players. Armstrong students got to get a feel for some of Georgia Southern's game traditions and are looking forward to attending Georgia Southern football games in the future.

Armstrong students have their first chance to support the Eagles as a true part of Georgia Southern University on Sep. 9 when GSU plays their first home game against New Hampshire. Check out the Georgia Southern Twitter page, @GSAthletics_FB, and use the hashtag #GATA to show your support for GSU football this upcoming season!

The George-Anne: Inkwell Edition

TAYLOR SURINE
NEWS EDITOR

Over the summer, Georgia Southern's student media director, David Simpson, Armstrong's academic advisor for the Inkwell, Tony Morris, and the Inkwell staff met to discuss the needs of Armstrong's student newspaper in light of the consolidation.

Simpson would act as a voice for the Inkwell at consolidation meetings to make sure everyone's needs were met, both the Inkwell's and the students'. Simpson reached out to us in June, saying "My top concern in all student media matters is how well it serves the audience – students on campus."

On June 9th we met with Simpson and the conversation centered on comparing and contrasting Armstrong's student life with Georgia Southern's student life. Simson was very understanding that the two schools are in different locations that house two different campus personalities.

We explained to Simpson that our campus is close-knit and we thrive on our friendships. In fear of losing our paper altogether, we explained how Armstrong's student editors sitting next to their audience in class every day benefits students by making them feel comfortable enough to have a voice in important campus issues. A paper only housed in Statesboro wouldn't have his effect.

Simpson attended the presidential-level consolidation meeting and forwarded us the recommendations:

OWG Recommendation

Recommend all Student Media products be branded under the George-Anne name and look. The George-Anne will have one print publication with two editions.

The 2017-18 Inwell staff along with advisor Tony Morris and his son.

Explanation of Recommendation: The look and feel of the paper should be the same. Each community will receive information specific to their physical location.

Due to the distance between the three campuses and the uniqueness of each campus, we will customize publications to reflect the student experience.

Simpson explained, "The Armstrong staff would have complete control of the Armstrong edition of the George-Anne," which gave us comfort; however, these recommendations caused us to become concerned with losing the Inkwell name that students have come to know and love since 1935. Simpson quickly informed us that he would "acknowledge that [we] were not in favor of dropping the Inkwell name" at the consolidation meeting.

The student media recommendations were put on the agenda for the consolidation meeting following the meeting with Simpson, but were delayed for further discussion. Simpson then added Interim Associate Vice President for Student Affairs & Dean of Students, Andrew Dies, to the email thread between Simpson and the Inkwell staff.

To compromise on the name change, Dies said, "I am proposing we change the recommendation to read: 'All student media products be branded under the George-Anne name and look. The George-Anne will have one print publication with two editions: the George-Anne: Statesboro Edition and the George-Anne: Inkwell Edition.'"

The consolidation meeting finally happened, and the recommendations were approved with no change. Simpson stated, "Beginning fall 2018, there will be two independent newspapers: the George-Anne: Statesboro Edition and the George-Anne: Inkwell Edition."

Simpson then added, "I believe editors on both campuses will find it appropriate to use content generated on another campus. And it will make sense to have collaboration to cover university-wide topics, possibly down to sharing bylines on articles. But editors on each campus will make decisions to use that content on a case-by-case basis and will display it as they see fit in their own editions."

The Inkwell staff looks forward to using this year to find out what Armstrong students need from their editors and will do what it takes to deliver newsworthy content to keep students informed and interested.
