Rock N' Roll Marathon Runs Through Savannah This Weekend

By: Ethan Smith

The Humana Rock N' Roll Marathon hits Savannah once again this weekend.

The event, also known as the "Beautiful Marathon", will be run within Savannah's most beautiful spots, including River Street, the Historic District, Bay Street and the Victorian District.

The uniqueness of the event comes with the course itself. While runners are actively going through, stages are set at certain areas with rock n' roll bands playing music for spectators and runners alike.

Michael Franti is the headliner for the event. Franti is not only a musician, but he is also a humanitarian who uses music for positive changes.

He is also a heavy political activist as well. Other bands and singers include Mike Richards, Savannah city employees, Savannah State's Powerhouse of the South and many more.

The event, which runs all weekend with events centering around it, will feature the marathon and half marathons on Saturday from 7:30am to 3:00pm. Sunday, also recognized as Family Day, will feature the 5K and one mile events in Daffin Park. Go out and run or have some fun in Savannah this weekend and channel your inner rock n roll self. Participants of all ages are welcome to attend and have fun spectating or participating in the event.

Abrams grew up with five siblings. Her family eventually moved to Atlanta where Abrams attended high school and became a speechwriter by the age of 17.

certain that we create good prosperous jobs across the state of Georgia, all 159 counties.

That’s what I wanna do because I’m proud of Georgia and proud to be a Georgian.”

Amendments and What They

Amendment One: The Georgia Outdoor Stewardship Act

The first of five amendment to be on the ballot this November will revolve around sporting goods stores.

Introduced in 2017, this amendment proposes placing up to an 80 percent sales tax revenue on sporting goods stores such as Bass Pro Shops and Dick’s Sporting Goods. The money gained from the sales tax revenue would go into a trust fund that would have the sole purpose of protecting and preserving the land.

Without creating a new tax, this amendment would also preserve drinking water, beaches and forests. Numerous conservation groups in Georgia have supported this amendment, mainly the Georgia Wildlife Federation and Georgia Conservancy.

Amendment Two: Statewide Business Court

This amendment gets straight to the point. If approved, Georgia would create a statewide business court to remove the state and court dockets from certain situations. This process would allow Georgia to become faster and more-friendly to businesses.

South Carolina and North Carolina have this idea already in place while Fulton and Gwinnett county already have courts that handle business disputes.

Business judges would be appointed every five-years by the governor. These appointments would be approved by numerous committees before any other action would be taken.

The amendment has been backed by Nathan Deal and the Georgia Chamber of Commerce.

Defining and Taxing Timberland change the way timberland is defined and taxed. The distinction between the difference in and commercial timber are treated and handled. Most completely backed by the General Assembly, the state of Georgia would preserve forestland tract owners. Amendment to be administered and take full effect.

Amendment Four: Marsy's Law

Marsy's Law is a very interesting amendment this November. The amendment, if passed, would require the state of Georgia to recognize and notify victims or their families before a person accused of a crime appears in court.

The amendment also gives victims the right to speak out in court before a defendant is sentenced, released from their time in jail or entering a plea.

For some background, the amendment is named after Marsy Nicholas, a University of California Santa-Barbara, who was stalked and killed by her ex-boyfriend in 1983.

Georgia is not the only state to have focused on the amendment, as it has gained traction in other states as well.

Amendment Five: School's Sales Tax Referendums

This amendment focuses on creating independency between the different levels of school systems.

If this amendment passes, it could mean that city and county school districts within the state of Georgia would no longer need to call upon voters to enact a 1% sales tax for school improvement projects and tasks.

Also, the larger school system within a county could call for an education sales tax without the approval of the smaller system or systems within that same county.

The tax collections between the districts would still be split up, but this would become based upon student enrollment counts.

Dessert Theater: "Pancake Special"

By: Stanton Dobson

The Armstrong campus BCM will be holding its annual Dessert Theater show on Nov. 8-10 at 7 p.m. in an effort to raise funds for the student summer mission program of SendMeNow. SendMeNow is part of the Collegiate Ministry of the Georgia Baptist Mission Board.

The BCM currently has a goal to raise $6000 as a part of this joint effort, and at the end of the year, each BCM from around the state will pool their money together to send out student summer missionaries across the country and around the world to help in bettering disadvantaged communities as part of SendMeNow.

The prospect of Desert Theater is based around the idea of, as student director Jakarie Miller describes, "dessert and a show."

"They sit down and at 7 pm, we start the play, and at intermission, we take about 30 mins to serve the guests... different desserts that different churches around the area [prepare]... while that's going on speakers go on stage and give a background on SendMeNow and the mission trips for the next year, and usually the director will come up there and talk about the show."

This year's show, "Pancake Special," will feature an all-student cast that will portray the story that Miller himself wrote.

"Pancake Special" is a story that involves four run-of-the-mill characters as they navigate an extraordinary situation—a robbery.

The characters include: Carla, a bitter, 40-year-old, real estate agent that is played by Katrina Yaneza; Amy, a young waitress who works at the diner where the play is set, is played by Heather Byler; David, a single father who has fallen on hard times, is played by Charlie Conger; and John, a pastor that is played by Dan Hatch.

Most of the actors have some experience in acting and theatre, but for some others, like Yaneza, this is a totally new experience.

Yet Miller notes that "she, probably out of everyone, has shown the most growth of someone who had no experience to where she is now."

As Miller explains, these four characters are put in a situation with "a lot of pressure."

"'Pancake Special' was written with the intent to show God in a very ungodly situation. People who you would not think to be a representation of God; it's written very secular on purpose for that to happen. People can come expecting to see things they may not have seen before."

Among the cast members, a few were interviewed on their favorite aspects of the rehearsal process so far.

Byler elaborates on her favorite aspect of the play, "I think the writing in general is really good. It's not overloaded in comedy or overloaded in drama. There's a really good mixture of both, and there's a really nice flow to it... It's a lot of fun."

While Conger said the highlight of play for him is "my corny jokes."

Still, perhaps the best testimony to the play comes from its director Miller.

"I think this show does a good job at showing that if you let those [internal] walls be broken down, that's where the healing comes—that's where the spiritual healing comes—that's where the emotional healing comes. So, I think people can come expecting a good time. It's not an all-the-time, heavy show. It has many different elements. It's funny; it's hilarious; it gets real sometimes; it gets down to the nitty-gritty and it really—it gets heavy...but it's a lot of fun."

"Pancake Special," Miller's second directorial endeavor, will be performed Nov. 8-10 at the Armstrong BCM.

Miller will be co-directing the show with Madison Watkins.

The general admission price for the event is $10, while the price of admission for students and children under 12 is $5. For more information on the event attendees can contact the BCM at 912-925-8563 or at armstrongbcmstudents@gmail.com.

A short teaser of the play is also available on our website at theinkwellonline.com.
