Stomp out Stigma: A Call to Action
11:30 am - 1:30 pm
Compass Plaza/Learning Commons

TAKE ACTION; GET INVOLVED. Join Active Minds September 17-20 at select pop-up locations and pledge to be the voice that helps stop suicide! Every year, more than 1,000 college students lose their lives to suicide. Active Minds aims to bring awareness to campus suicides and mental health in our community. Be a part of the movement to stomp out stigma by signing our pledge and posting a pic of your signed pledge on social media with the hashtags #ActiveMindArmstrong and #NeedYouHere.

Then we want you to practice what you pledge by taking one of our resource cards and giving it to a loved one or even a stranger who may be in need. Mental illness is treatable, and suicide is preventable. Even so, many suffer in silence. Active Minds is trying to change that.

Dining Etiquette
12:00 pm - 1:00 pm
Student Union, Skidaway Room
Would you know how to stand out during a business meeting at a restaurant, or when your interview includes a lunch meeting? Join us for an informative video loaded with dining etiquette tips including difficult to manage foods, understanding place setting organization, what to order and more!

QPR: Question, Persuade, Refer
2:30 pm - 4:00 pm
University Hall 131
The Counseling Center is hosting a Drop-in Suicide Prevention Training for Faculty and Staff. It is Suicide Prevention Month and it is important to know how to help those in need. You will learn how to question someone if you are concerned they may harm themselves, persuade them to get help and become aware of the referral sources for them to access if needed. Ask a Question, Save a Life.

Fundamentals of Digital Photography
6:30 pm - 7:30 pm
Tybee Island Marine Science Center
Design for beginning photographers, this class is ideal for those with an interest in capturing stunning images of everything from people to nature. Using digital single-lens reflex photography (DSLR) is like using point-and-shoot technology except that the overall quality and response is enhanced. This class is geared toward those who anticipate moving toward DSLR photography.

Guest Lecture: Frida Kahlo and the Never-Ending Torments of a Mexican Icon in the 21st Century
6:00 pm - 7:00 pm
Ogeechee Theater
Dr. Osvaldo Estrada, Professor of Latin American Literature, is our guest lecturer from UNC-Chapel Hill. Dr. Estrada’s presentation traces several literary and cultural representations of Frida Kahlo produced in the midst of neoliberalism, gender debates and the widespread commodification of cultural memory. Focusing on contemporary literature, corridos and films, the critic interrogates how and why writers recreate hybrid narratives that fuse history, memory and fiction. In doing so, he reveals the innovative and sometimes troublesome ways in which authors can challenge or perpetuate gendered conventions of writing women’s lives.

Screening of Haze

4:00 pm - 6:30 pm
Ogeechee Theater

As part of National Hazing Prevention Week, the Office of Fraternity and Sorority Life will be screening the award-winning film HAZE on Wednesday, September 26th in the Ogeechee Theater starting at 4 pm. After the screening, there was a discussion with the film’s director David Burkman. A modern retelling of ancient Greek mythology, HAZE is a sobering, realistic portrait of what can happen behind fraternity house walls. In the aftermath of a brutal fraternity hazing death, a college freshman’s desire to join the best fraternity on campus is compromised when his older brother launches an anti-hazing crusade. HAZE is a dark, raw look into a secret world of intoxication, ritual savagery, and into the hearts of two young men, each driven in his own way by a need for acceptance and brotherhood. Disclaimer: This film contains scenes of brutal hazing, graphic violence, sexual misconduct, and unsettling imagery. Viewer discretion is advised.

Armstrong Campus Participates in Suicide Prevention Week

By: Gabriel Williams

One life lost is one too many. In support of National Suicide Prevention Week, the Armstrong campus of Georgia Southern University will host several empowerment events for students as part of a national effort in preventing suicide.

The events will be spearheaded by Active Minds, a student-led organization that aims to help bring awareness to mental health stigmas.

Health Service and Peers Educating Peers (PEP) will also be coordinating events that week as well.

Suicide is the second leading cause of death among people ages 20-24. In fact, 1-in-12 college students in the United States plans suicide. Many young adults feel that there isn’t anyone they can trust and talk about their problems with.

However, Armstrong has people that can help you through whatever you are going through, right now.

GSU health services offers a variety of counseling resources to students who may need some guidance in working through their dispositions. PEP is also comprised of trained students who help provide encouragement and assistance for their fellow peers.

An anonymous representative from the organization also said, “We want to help spread awareness of mental health and let students know we are here for them,” and also mentioned that there will be an open mic performance for students to share their testimonials and also enter in to win a $25 gift card.

This event will be in honor of those who have lost their lives to suicide, especially the 1,100 college students who die each year from suicide. To participate in the event or to be involved with the organization, contact Active Minds at active-mindsarmstrong@gmail.com.

Becoming More Supportive of Those Struggling with Mental Health

By: Laura Weyman

Eduticate Yourself

First and foremost, it is important to educate yourself regarding what the person is going through. Research the illness your loved one has been diagnosed with, but also keep in mind that each individual’s experience is unique. Listen to them with an open mind and shed the belief that there is a possibility for them to simply “snap out of it”. Such opinions will only alienate the person.

It is important to listen to their answers. How they are feeling and genuine empathy is the key. Be willing to open up about it, learn from asking them questions about how they are feeling and genuinely listen to their answers.

Be Inclusive

There is nothing more dehumanizing than others making you feel as if you are not equal while struggling with a mental illness. While it is great to be compassionate and understanding, enabling is not helpful. According to a PsychCentral article, it is therapeutic for patient’s to be held accountable for their behavior. For example, if a certain type of behavior would be regarded as inappropriate for everyone else in the family, the diagnosed person should be held at the same standards.

Speak with Others in Your Situation

Dealing with a family member or close friend struggling with mental health can feel hard at times. The person may start feeling heavily dependent on you or if they are struggling with severe depression or another mental illness, they could lose motivation to go out or complete the most basic tasks. The National Alliance on Mental Illness can help link them up with a support group, so you can meet others in your situation and learn about new ways to care for your loved one. For more information, visit: http://www.nami.org/

Look Out for Suicidal Behavior

According to WebMD, 50% to 75% of those considering suicide show warning signs. Although not everyone threatening to commit suicide will follow through, every threat should be taken seriously. The top signs of suicidal behavior include, excessive sadness or moodiness, hopelessness, sleeping problems and changes in personality/appearance.

You, Me & Ennui Makes Three

I feel too young to be set in my ways habits, habits, habits make creatures of us all. J’ai soif, mais pour quelle raison?

Don’t I have enough? I still have the cup To fill or to break, at my leisure.

My dreams are full of polyamory and infidelity waking up exhausted, an IV of coffee

Laying still too briefly I wonder idly what day it is. Wednesday. The cat makes bread out of my chest before I drag myself to the kitchen.

Waiting for the water to boil, I do the dishes. Domestic bliss, a swollen face and a burn leg. All I Want is to sit here and stare and stare and stare through the windows at the crawling ivy on the neighbor’s chain link fence.

To be a passive spectator, a casual observer. Don’t make me live and be disappointed.

The phone is ringing. Someone’s at the door A long yawn. I guess we all do what we have to, In the end.

The title “Marilyn Monroe, Murderess: How a Femicide Fatale Role Shaped Monroe’s Star Persona” contains words that most people would not associate with the legendary actress. And yet, Dr. Amanda Konkle, PhD changed that with her lecture on how Monroe’s earlier femme fatale roles shaped the following years of her career.

On Sept. 14 in the Ogeechee Theater, Konkle, an Assistant Professor in the department of Literature, gave the first lecture of this year’s Robert J. Strozier Faculty Lecture Series. Konkle had been a fan of Marilyn Monroe since college and realized, while she was doing research for her dissertation, that little material had been written about Monroe’s film works compared to the numerous biographies written about her. This discovery, as Konkle put it, gave her an opening to explore why few had explored her films despite how popular they were during her lifetime.

Konkle began her lecture on Monroe by discussing the topic of 20th Century Fox’s formation of Monroe’s early star persona and how Monroe challenged that persona in her work.

In her first few film roles, Monroe’s characters were nothing more than the sexy secretaries or pageant queens.

However, in the 1950 film “The Asphalt Jungle,” she gave a brief but complex performance in her role as “Angela Philyan.” In a scene where her character realizes that she may not be able to trust her “uncle” lover’s place anymore, she gives a look of consternation to herself before turning over and putting on a smile. By giving that one look, Monroe gives more depth to her role as a naive love interest.

In the 1952 film “Clash by Night” as Peggy, she played a role uncommon for the time, a tough independent woman. Not a femme fatale. She played the minor role of a character named “Peggy.” While the character was frequently the subject of violence, she would immediately reverse the violence by dulating it out.

Monroe also used her publicity to consistently challenge the role the studio executives pushed on her.

In 1952, some nude photos of her were taken and published in “Playboy” magazine, resulting in public controversy. Monroe however, was not ashamed and openly admitted to posing for money.

Many of her fans supported her despite the controversy, because of how open she was to the press about the issue.

The incident earned some people’s respect of Monroe as an individual but many however could not respect her as an actress because of the sexpot roles she consistently played in films.

Konkle went on to discuss how Monroe continued to go against her persona in films like “Don’t Bother to Knock” and “Niagara.”

However, after these films were released, studio executives were pressured to shift her star persona to a “non-threatening” role because of the roles she had been playing. Her role in “Niagara” in particular, had her as a “dangerous manipulative woman” which challenged the post-war ideals of men and women at the time.

Her films following “Niagara” were the more well-known “Gentlemen Prefer Blondes,” “The Seven Year Itch,” and “Some Like It Hot” which had her fulfilling the “non-threatening” dumb blonde roles until her death.

Konkle and an audience member discussed at the end of the lecture that even though Monroe was pushed into more of the dumb blonde roles towards the end of her career, she was still able to subtly come across as smart in some of her roles.

One of those characters was quoted as saying, “I can be smart when I need to be but men don’t usually like that.”

The material Konkle discussed was pulled from her upcoming book that will be released on Feb. 4 called “Some Kind of Mirror: Creating Marilyn Monroe.” It is what Konkle described as a “very-changed version” of her dissertation.

The next lecture in the Ogeechee Theater will be a guest lecturer from UNC-Chapel Hill on “Frida Kahlo and the Never-Ending Torments of a Mexican Icon” in the 21st Century” on Sept. 20 from 6 p.m. - 7 p.m.
Thanks to Saturn trekking through Capricorn until December, everyone around you will finally get a break from your constant whining and crying. Well, that’s what the stars have in line, but let’s not get our hopes up because we all know Cancers thrive on being everybody’s doormat. As a crab, one would think you would put that exoskeleton and giant pincer to good use and conquer whatever obstacles present themselves, but you’d rather throw yourself in the hot pot of boiling water at a low-country boil than inconvenience others in the slightest.

If you’re going to sacrifice yourself so willingly, don’t complain about your questionable choices later. Also remember that astrology is as meaningless as your existence, so don’t take this forecast as a personal attack like you do with everything else in your life.
