Biology graduate students seek to improve the environment in their research

"Our lab is really focused on applied sciences — what we can do to actually make differences out there, like what's actually being done by the [Department of Natural Resources]," Raven Hurt said. "I'm hoping that my research will prove to them that they should be using different monitoring techniques."

Center for Sustainability plants 25 trees for Arbor Day

CFS members and campus volunteers planted the containerized trees on Sweetheart Circle and Southern Drive, while also planting 650 seedlings around campus.

Seniors honored at Hanner Fieldhouse

The Georgia Southern women's basketball team celebrated Senior Day at Hanner Fieldhouse before a big win over Appalachian State on Saturday.

In case you missed it: Student group advertises with controversial signs

One member said professors around the country are avoiding works by figures with complicated pasts. Three Georgia Southern University professors say otherwise.

In case you missed it: Simeon Carter reflects on his unusual path to discovering basketball

After a dramatic growth spurt, Carter started getting active, but basketball was not in the picture yet.

"I used to be short and fat," Carter said. "I grew from 5'7 to 6'2 over the summer going into eighth grade."
