NASA MESSENGER's Mission to Mercury

NASA released the first orbital image of Mercury on Tuesday afternoon, taken by MErcury Surface, Space ENvironment, GEochemistry, and Ranging (MESSENGER). On March 29, the Mercury Dual Imaging System was turned on and began capturing the first of thousands of orbital images. View some of the images taken since Tuesday here. These images take approximately 6 minutes to travel from the spacecraft to Earth. Enjoy the show and check back over the next few days as they continue to add more photos.

Edible Book Festival

March 31, 2011

Combine your creativity and love of books and enter Henderson Library's 2011 Edible Book Festival on Saturday, April 9, at the Mainstreet Statesboro Farmers Market. Entries will be on view beginning at 10:00 AM.

They'll be judged by market visitors, and prizes will be awarded at 11:30.

Put on your thinking caps and create an edible book. Rule #1: Entries must be "bookish" through the use of text, literary inspiration or form. Participants may make books out of anything edible. Anything you can cook up that is book related is welcome!

Details for entry are available at <https://library.georgiasouthern.edu/friends/new.html>

Henderson Library welcomes community members. Access to resources is available on site during all hours the library is open throughout the year. Anyone older than 17 may check out materials. Visit the library's booth during the Edible Book Festival to learn more about Henderson Library.
