Is the Increase in Teaching load for temporary instructors occurring University-wide?

Submitted by: Clifton Price and Tina Whittle

Question:

Is the increase in teaching load for temporary instructors occurring University-wide?

Rationale:

We cannot uncover any evidence to support this claim. If the fifteen-hour teaching load is indeed a reality across the University, it appears as if only the Department of Writing and Linguistics has been made officially aware of their temporaries' increase in load. Since teaching loads have a direct tie to the delivery of quality education in the classroom, shouldn't the University as a whole be officially informed if over sixty faculty in twelve departments across six colleges will be teaching an increased load? A fifteen-hour teaching load for temporaries occurring University-wide could also set a precedent for non-temporary faculty.
