Military and Veteran Student Center opens at Georgia Southern

AUGUST 24, 2016

Georgia Southern student military, veterans and their family members now have a new space to call home on campus with the official opening of the Military and Veteran Student Center, located in Fielding D. Russell Union on campus.

University officials held a ceremonial ribbon cutting Aug. 24 in the Russell Union for the Center, which will serve as a resource to assist military members, veterans and their family members in making a successful transition to the student community. The Center will also help military and veteran students become contributing members of the University community, and help them on their path to graduate with knowledge and the tools necessary to continue being a productive member of society.

“Over the past seven months, we have been working to set up and make this Center a central hub for military, veterans and their family members,” said Lt. Col. Ret. Bill Roberts, associate dean of Students for Military Affairs. “We strive to provide a place of camaraderie, information and connection. The Center houses a lounge which we call the Eagle’s Nest, and a resource center where you can get connected with Team Eagle, which is the military and veteran success network of Georgia Southern University. The center is a place to meet, relax, study and get information, assistance and advice on the wide array of services provided by Team Eagle.”

Director of Military Affairs for Board of Regents David R. Snow, Ed.D., also addressed the crowd of about 150 present for the ceremony, informing them this Center is a place that will help military-connected students and veterans thrive.

“Almost three years ago ... about a third of schools [in Georgia] had a veteran center on campus out of 30, and Georgia Southern was one of those initial ones that had [a center],” said Snow. “This Center is just the latest iteration and maturity of that process years down the road to better support that segment of the student population. I’m happy to report that today about 90 percent of University System of Georgia schools have a dedicated space on their campus for veteran students.”

Snow added that in Spring 2016, roughly 9,000 students enrolled in University System of Georgia schools took advantage of VA educational benefits, and that about 900 veterans graduated with degrees ranging from associate degrees to doctor of philosophy degrees.

“Veteran- and military-connected students are doing great things on our campuses and in our community,” he said.

University President Jaimie Hebert, Ph.D., also acknowledged the importance of the Center in serving the military and veteran student population on campus.

“Georgia Southern is proud to offer this special place where the mission reflects the very culture of this University — a culture that puts student success above all else,” Hebert said. “This center will be a place where our military, veterans and their families can gather, network and get support and resources they need to make a successful transition to student life. Staff will serve these new military students and their families, carrying on the commitment and care that is so evident across every aspect of our campus.”

Roberts, who also is the director for this center, is excited about the opportunities that will be available to veteran students, military and their families.

"I'm honored and thankful for the opportunity to serve our military-connected eagles and help Georgia Southern lead the way in providing a military-friendly campus," Roberts said. "Whether you've served our nation in the Army, Navy, Marine Corps, Air Force or the Coast Guard, or you're the spouse, son or daughter of someone who has, we are here for you."

Georgia Southern has been named a Military Friendly School by G.I. Jobs magazine, and will soon open a new Military Science building that will be home to the Eagle Battalion and Army Reserve Officer Training Corps \(ROTC\) program. Georgia Southern's ROTC Program has the largest Army ROTC Nursing program in the nation and has received three times the MacArthur Award.

Latest Results for Georgia Business Climate Survey Suggest Georgia Business Leaders are Optimistic about Future of Georgia

AUGUST 24, 2016

Georgia Southern University's Business Innovation Group (BIG) and Georgia CEO have partnered to establish a new Georgia Business Climate Survey, which will serve as a tool for viewing how the state is moving forward economically. Distributed on a quarterly-basis, the survey covers various types of questions regarding the business industry specifically, the economy as a whole, the business industry's propensity to hire new staff and investments in capital.

This quarter's survey analysis suggests that survey participants are cautiously optimistic about the future of Georgia's economy. When asked directly about their outlook on Georgia business conditions over the next three months, 42 percent of participants thought conditions would be better in three months while 46 percent thought business conditions would be the same.

When asked about their outlook on the next three months, business leaders were the most optimistic about business volume and sales and the most anxious about capital access, profitability and labor availability.

Right now, 75 percent of survey participants do not think they will do more business out-of-state than what they are currently doing. Overall, only 21 percent are planning on expanding their out-of-state business activities in the next three months.

Thirty-two percent of survey participants work for companies that employ less than nine people, while 24 percent of participants work for companies that employ more than 250 people.

"Survey participants are cautiously optimistic about the current and future state of the economy," stated Ben McKay, research specialist for the Georgia Southern Bureau of Business Research and Economic Development (BBRED). "This is a night and day difference when these findings are compared to similitude research conducted by BBRED shortly after the crash of 2008."

The sampling technique used for this study was a convenience sample of subscribers to one of the nine Georgia CEO daily newsletters. The locations served by this publication include Albany, Athens, Augusta, Columbus, Middle Georgia, Newnan, Savannah and Valdosta. Participants were contacted via email and responded using a provided link to an online questionnaire. The survey was open for two weeks and collected 368 valid responses. Due to the sampling technique used, it is unclear what the response rate to this survey is and the results are not representative of the views of the entire population of Georgia. The results do reflect the views of many readers of Georgia CEO.
