Georgia Southern University will participate in International Fraud Awareness Week – Nov. 15-21. It is part of an effort by the University System of Georgia to promote an ethical culture and to bring awareness to the common and uncommon instances of fraud or ethical violations within the campus community.

"Fraud, waste and abuse directly impact our stewardship responsibilities, and the well-being of individuals within our campus community," said Jean Bartels, Ph.D., R.N., interim University president.

Throughout the week, the campus community will receive video messages from President Bartels, and such offices as Public Safety, Human Resources, Finance, Information Technology and Academics on stewardship, prevention, integrity, responsibility, inspiration and trust.

“Reporting fraud and ethical violations is everyone’s responsibility. The cost of fraud, waste, abuse, and unethical activity is not only financial, but also affects employee morale and the University’s reputation,” said Jana Briley, chief audit officer and director of Audit and Advisory Services. “As good stewards, we must take an active stance against fraud, waste, abuse and unethical activity. To help with this effort, the University has an Ethics and Compliance Reporting Hotline.”

In addition to video messaging, posters and digital signage will be visible across campus and all faculty and staff will receive a tip card with reporting information.
