Georgia Southern receives largest gift to date for scholarship for nursing students

SEPTEMBER 1, 2015

Georgia Southern University has received a gift from East Georgia Regional Medical Center toward the School of Nursing Students' Memorial Fund established in memory of the five nursing students who lost their lives in a tragic accident on April 22, 2015.

Of the $41,670 given to the University by East Georgia Regional Medical Center, $25,000 was a corporate gift from the hospital and the remaining $16,670 was raised through the generosity of individuals within the hospital's leadership, Board of Trustees, physicians and employees. Since the tragedy, supporters from the local community and across the country have donated more than $50,000 in additional gifts to the Fund. Georgia Southern has now raised more than $90,000 toward its goal of $125,000 to enable the University to distribute five $1,000 scholarships each year to students in the School of Nursing through the Fund.

"The Georgia Southern family extends beyond our campus as shown by this generous gift from the leadership, physicians and employees of East Georgia Regional Medical Center," said Interim President Jean E. Bartels, Ph.D., RN. "The support we have received from the medical community and friends of the University following the tragedy will enable us to perpetually remember these remarkable young ladies while making a difference in the lives students dedicated to caring for others for generations to come."

Efforts to celebrate the lives of the nursing students through a gift to the scholarship fund were led by Bob Bigley, CEO of East Georgia Regional Medical Center.

"The loss of life is tragic. Certainly the loss of five nursing students and the injury of two others impacted all of us in the medical community," said Bigley. "We all thought long and hard on how to recognize these individuals and the contributions they were going to make in caring for others. After discussions with the physicians, Board of Trustees and employees, we all agreed that providing a lasting tribute to their chosen profession was the most appropriate way to honor them, their profession and those that will follow."

Researchers Track Currents with Drifters and Dye

Researchers from the James H. Oliver, Jr., Institute for Coastal Plain Science (ICPS) at Georgia Southern teamed up with Gray's Reef National Marine Sanctuary on Tuesday, Sept. 1, to release 50 gallons of a non-toxic red dye into the Altamaha River near Darien, Georgia, to study how the River's outflow affects hard bottom reefs offshore.

The resulting plume of dye will be monitored visually and with instrumentation as the dye flows from the release point along the Georgia coast and offshore. Tracking the path of the dye (rhodamine WT) will provide estimates of how the Altamaha River outflow delivers dissolved contaminants, nutrients and fresh water along the Georgia coast to hard bottom reefs, such as Gray's Reef, found approximately 20 miles offshore.

In addition to the dye release, the investigators will deploy two GPS satellite-enabled current drifters that will provide information on how larger materials, such as dead stalks of marsh grass, may disperse after being transported from the Altamaha River estuary.

These drifters are constructed from basic materials found in local hardware stores, and the GPS satellite transmitter tracking and mapping is coordinated through NOAA's Fisheries Science Center.

Georgia Southern University researchers and Gray's Reef staff have, in past years, conducted drifter-building workshops with educators to develop ocean current and watershed studies into classroom lesson plans.
