Newsroom

September 1, 2017

Georgia Southern University

Follow this and additional works at: https://digitalcommons.georgiasouthern.edu/newsroom

Part of the Higher Education Commons

Recommended Citation
Georgia Southern University, "Newsroom" (2017). Newsroom. 901.
https://digitalcommons.georgiasouthern.edu/newsroom/901

This article is brought to you for free and open access by the Office of Strategic Communications & Marketing at Digital Commons@Georgia Southern. It has been accepted for inclusion in Newsroom by an authorized administrator of Digital Commons@Georgia Southern. For more information, please contact digitalcommons@georgiasouthern.edu.
The Georgia Southern University Counseling Center’s Doctoral Internship in Professional Health Service Psychology has been granted full accreditation by the American Psychological Association (APA) for the next eight years and is one of only a few Counseling Centers in the Southeast to receive this title.

The national internship program has been in place for seven years and has worked with doctoral interns from a range of universities throughout the country. The program initially submitted its self-study in Spring 2016, and the APA performed a site-visit in March 2017.

"The self-study is a nearly 1,000 page document answering questions on every imaginable detail of our internship experience and how the experience offered meets the training criteria set forth by the American Psychological Association," said Jodi Caldwell, Ph.D., director of the Counseling Center. "Completing and submitting a self-study is the most work-intensive part of the accreditation process."

Prior to becoming a psychologist, doctoral students must complete a 2,000-hour internship program at an approved site. As of 2017, every state in the U.S. will require the psychology doctoral internship experience to be APA accredited in order to count toward a psychologist’s professional licensure.
requirements.

"Doctoral students must apply for an internship through the process of registering with National Matching Services, completing an extensive application, and competing for desired placements at sites across the U.S. and Canada," said Caldwell. "Accreditation brings international recognition of the quality of the program, it brings a wider range of applicants from around the country to apply for the program, and it provides Georgia Southern with a degree of recognition as one of the few Counseling Center Doctoral Internships in Georgia and the Southeast U.S."

The internship program at Georgia Southern offers high-quality training in the practice of health service psychology and focuses on application of clinical theory and research. It requires interns to learn and abide by ethical, legal and professional standards of the field.

Upon completion of the program, interns are prepared for generalist entry-level professional practice in college and university counseling centers or similar settings that require skills in individual and group psychotherapy, crisis assessment and intervention, psychoeducational outreach programming, consultation, provision of clinical supervision and administrative functions.

"In addition, woven into the program is the belief that every competent practitioner in the field should be guided by sensitivity to individual differences within a diverse society and should practice openness to lifelong learning," said Caldwell. "Noted strengths of our program include the provision of supervision, group therapy, crisis counseling and risk assessment, as well as the integration of multicultural training into all components of the program."

For more information about the program, visit http://students.georgiasouthern.edu/counseling/training/internship/.

Georgia Southern University, a public Carnegie Doctoral/Research University founded in 1906, offers 118 degree programs serving 20,673 students. Through eight colleges, the University offers bachelor’s, master’s and doctoral degree programs built on more than a century of academic achievement. Georgia Southern is recognized for its student-centered and hands-on approach to education. Visit GeorgiaSouthern.edu
Georgia Southern University hosts 6th annual Rural HIV Research and Training Conference in Savannah

SEPTEMBER 1, 2017

Georgia Southern University’s Division of Continuing Education will host the sixth annual Rural HIV Research and Training conference at the Coastal Georgia Center in Savannah, Georgia, Sept. 8-9.

The Rural HIV Research and Training Conference is a two-day forum for exchanging the latest information and learning the newest tools to address the challenges of the HIV/AIDS epidemic in rural communities.

The conference brings together health professionals to share innovative strategies, discuss unique challenges and foster advocacy and community partnerships to address HIV/AIDS prevention, intervention and care, working with children, youth and families in rural communities.

Jeanne White-Ginder will be the keynote speaker for this year’s conference. White-Ginder will discuss her experiences on the frontlines of the AIDS epidemic in the early years and the role that HIV/AIDS stigma plays in fueling the epidemic today.

Her son, Ryan White, was diagnosed with AIDS after contracting HIV during one of the many blood transfusions he received to treat his hemophilia. Until then, AIDS had been considered by the general public as a “gay disease,” and Ryan’s fight to lead a normal life and attend school ironically thrust him and White-Ginder into the media spotlight.

For more information on the speakers, and to register for the conference, visit: http://academics.georgiasouthern.edu/co/conferences/ruralhiv-2/.

Georgia Southern University, a public Carnegie Doctoral/Research University founded in 1906, offers 118 degree programs serving 20,673 students. Through eight colleges, the University offers bachelor’s, master’s and doctoral degree programs built on more than a century of academic achievement. Georgia Southern is recognized for its student-centered and hands-on approach to education. Visit GeorgiaSouthern.edu
Katherine Taylor’s Reflective Plane on view at Center for Art & Theatre Sept. 28 – Oct. 20
ow.ly/Gxv930eGvVk @BFSDoArt