Writer of year reads from works

GSC News Service

An acclaimed writer, Sandra Worsham, will be reading excerpts from her novel in progress as well as her published short stories on April 21 at 8 p.m. in the Foy Recital Hall.

Worsham, the 1982 Georgia Teacher of the Year, has conducted numerous writing workshops from California to Georgia. The Rain Dance Review, a literary art magazine she developed with Baldwin High School students, received a superior rating for two years in the National Council of Teachers of English competition. Currently, Worsham is an Artists-Initiated Grant recipient from the Georgia Council for the Arts.

The event is free and open to the public and is sponsoring by the Campus Life Enrichment Committee and the Milledgeville-Baldwin County Allied Arts, with additional support from the Georgia Council for the Arts.

'Tai and Joe' wrap up year

April 20, 1989 will be the beginning of the end. As students vote for new Student Government Association officers, they will be saying goodbye to the Federico-Hayes administra-

Known more commonly as Tai and Joe, these two officers are almost finished with what they feel was "a very good year." According to Tai, "this administration had three objectives: to increase student involvement, to increase student representation of campus committees, and to increase the amount released to the students from this office."

In retrospect, Federico and Hayes feel successful in all of these objectives, to a point; however, both officers wished they could have achieved even greater success in these areas. "We weren't as successful as we would like to have been. But it is not due to a lack of trying," said Hayes. Federico feels that some of their success will be seen on election day. Both officers are expecting a 100 percent increase in ballots over last year's 717.

"We feel that a lot of our work will help in laying a foundation for future administration," added Federico.

Scantily clad women and a pitcher of water: Jacques saw it all

by Jacques de Broekert Features Editor

Boredom, sometimes it can really get to you. Take for instance last Thursday night. There I am sitting at home and in walks my roommate saying, "Hey, lets go to the wet Tshirt contest at Thursday's."

Sometimes you have to do the right thing and sometimes you have to do the wrong thing. As usual, I chose to do what I like to do the best; the wrong thing.

I was actually excited about this thing, thinking that I would get to see some girls that I had been seeing on this campus with just the essentials

So off we went.

The first thing we encountered was a car double-parked in the parking lot with what looked like someone's mom in the front seat. Both Mike and I started to say something about this when a man, looking very much like someone's father, walked passed us mumbling some obscenities. "Yep, someone's parents."

We paid our $3 fee and went in. An amazing amount of girls where there. I couldn't believe that this many would show up for this.

Mike started asking Chris Samson, Thursday's manager, questions which were somewhat garbled on the tapes we made of the conversations we had. He kept calling Chris, Chris Dukes which is funny because Chris Dukes is the former head of the Campus Intramural office and a devout Morman. Chris would get a laugh out of that.

"Everyone pretty much just signs up for this thing when they get here," Chris said. "Miller Light gave us the T-shirts and a little boost in the beer, but they didn't give us any cash."

The contestants were told before hand that if they stripped down to the bare facts that they would be disqualified. This was a little disappointing to me as I was hoping that maybe we were going to see some good stuff. "So when you make the announcement do you think there's going to be a mad rush for the door with people asking for their money back?"

"No I hope not."

I went out in the crowd to find some tits"

I don't want to enter this contest because my tits aren't big enough."

I finally found one of the contestants. She was surrounded by several guys who looked very much like bodyguards. I asked her if I could ask some questions, not sure if I would blind-sided by one of her boys. She seemed eager to tell her story.

Did your friends talk you into this? "No, my boyfriend did. It was just a spur of the moment thing." Did you "There's lots of girls here with big practice for this? "No" going to start slapping her around or anything?"No, no she doesn't have to do this if she doesn't want to." (This question seem to be a little funnier than it should have been, as if it where maybe a little true.)

Is there some special technic your going to use for this? " No I'm just going to go up there and shake 'em around."

Shortly after this short interview I spotted a well equipped young lady.

"I won one of these before, and I don't care what people think about me. I mean if I was the only girl up there I wouldn't do it. If I win, I'm going to buy a puppy."

I noticed that not one of these girls seemed to think that this was in any

there is the sound of Mike running

"What do you think I want to get some F&@$%#G P#$%Y what do you think!' "Let's say something that we can print, shall we Roddy Brillhart."

"Ah, well I'm just here from the University of Miami and I just want to get a little p#$%^y, I'm sorry. Ha, Ha, Ha."

Crowd control was a little tough at this point because the contest is beginning. I jumped up on the stand used by the camera man to get a good vantage point for the camera work I felt was necessary for this story.

The first contestant is watered down and is almost immediately disqualified for feeling herself off too much. The other contestants seemed to get the idea of the importance of following the rules.

As each girl stepped into the pool to be water down the crowd was more and more excited. Finally one sorority sister took the stage and seemed to be a crowd favorite.

After all ten contestants had given it there best shot the contestants were judged. Three were left. The sorority sister, some unknown GSC coed, and some out-of-towner. The crowd would decide who the winner would be.

It seemed that the crowd was with the out-of-towner. At this point I remember thinking how insignificant $250 is.

The biggest problem with watching sports movies is that you always know what the eventual outcome will be. No matter how many love affairs, arrests, or gun play is involved, the heroic athlete always manages to score the winning touchdown, hit the winning jumper, or slug the bottomof-the-ninth-with-two-outs home run. There are exceptions to this rule (especially Brian's Song, Number One), but most of the time you can be sure that Rocky Balboa is going to cream that challenger and retain the

Al's Insights

By Al Allnoch Sports Editor

Like a lot of other college students (and Americans in general), I enjoy playing golf. And also like many of these people, I have discovered that golf is an incredibly difficult game to play well.

I fell in love with the game the first time I played (or attempted to play) two years ago. The endless challenges and possibilities, in some ways, made the sport more interesting than my life-long favorites, baseball and basketball. I even began watching televised golf tournaments, which, to me, were previously akin to watching truck and tractor pulling on ESPN or country music videos on The Nashville Network.

Golf is frustrating, however. There are so many variables and so many things to think about that I sometimes wonder how anyone can pull off a successful golf swing.

But it is possible, and when I cannot do it and I send a ball shanking off to the right or skull one 20 yards in front of me, I want to cry. Hackers, I believe they call us. The frustration occasionally even leads me to toss a club or two down the old fairway. Good sportsmanship? Of course not, but who thinks of sportsmanship in the wake of a topped 5-iron?

In the May issue of Inside Sports, actor Robert Conrad's words of his young relationship with golf provide a bit of comfort. "The hardest thing is getting used to being this bad at something," he says. "My whole life I've generally excelled at anything I've attempted in sports.

"I thought I'd be better at this game than I am. I see guys who weigh 130 pounds and look uncoordinated step up and whack the ball off the tee straight down the fairway. I try the same thing and it trickles off sideways into tree. Boy, that's hum-

Boy, you're right, Robert. I will not give up the game though. No matter how many shots I miss and no matter how many times I say "That's enough, I quit," the beauty of golf and the lure of success won't allow me to quit.

I see potential in my game. I've experienced 250-plus yard drives and I've birdied holes before; I just cannot do these things consistently for 18 holes. But a perfectly struck golf shot, as any golfer will tell you, is one of the greatest feelings in any sport. I've seen my crisp 9-iron shot rise high into the air, suspend itself against the blue sky, then drop softly onto the green, and I want to see it again and again.

I plan to continue playing golf and I'm going to do my best to control my anger, improve my game and enjoy it. In an interview with Golf Digest, PGA star Mark Calcavecchia said something that reminded me of what many people often forget about sports. "The important thing is to have good time. It's a game. Why play it if you don't enjoy it."

Judging from the often crowded fairways at our infamous Meadow Lakes course and Claxton's delightful Evans Heights layout, a lot of you enjoy golf. There are many complaints in the golfing world of course overcrowding and slow play. The better golfers get irritated when the lesser-talented of us get out there and spray balls all over the course.

But if you are having fun, don't be discouraged. Play as fast as possible, follow the rules and don't get angry. And if you are not swinging well, the game can still be fun!

The Scottish character Agatha McNaughton, in Michael Murphy's book Golf in the Kingdom, speaks of the game: "Golf is for smellin' heather and cut grass and walkin' fast across the countryside and feelin' the wind and watchin' the sun go down and see'in yer friends hit good shots and hittin' some yerself. It's love and it's feelin' the splendor o' this good world." And those words should be enough to keep anyone who is frustrated with golf from giving it up.

Press rights stripped from student paper

Censorship... it is an ugly word that carries with it images of revoked civil rights and the aberration of our own freedom guaranteed by the first amendment. It has come to our attention that the dreaded hulking form of censorship has invaded our sleepy little collegiate community and reared its ugly head to snuff the free flow of information.

Webster's dictionary defines censorship as: a censor stopping the transmission or publication of matter considered objectionable. The key to that definition lies in who is the censor and what right he has to decide what is objectionable and what isn't.

Because GSC is a state college, it is subject to state and federal constitutional laws including freedom of the press. The George-Anne is therefore legally protected from censorship. The Eagle, apparently, is not. The Eagle editors were apparently restricted last week by their corporate and administrative owners, the Statesboro Herald and Morris Newspaper Corporation, from informing the GSC student body of a controversial sports story.

It is a shame that any newspaper trying to serve the best interests of the GSC student body can be liable to any type of control and censorship. We understand the Morris Newspaper Corporation's and the Herald's position-their business is business, privately owned--but they are apparently infringing upon the rights of these journalists and preventing the public from receiving information they have a right to know.

With the existence of such restraint, student newspapers owned and operated under private ownership cannot hope to be truly an "independent voice."

It is a disturbing statement of the entire journalistic community that this sort of situation was condoned, celebrated and encouraged. At the same time, The Eagle's efforts to break away from this type of restraint are encouraging and noble.

The real danger in this situation is that censorship is like a cancer that if left unchecked will eat away at the integrity and effectiveness of the journalistic community until all that is left is the raw sewage of propaganda to be fed to an uninformed public.

It is for this restraint that The George-Anne is coming forth in support of The Eagle's efforts to publish the truth, in spite of what is and was at stake. They put their butts on the line for journalism and for this, we commend them.

It is restraints such as this that make us wonder if the high sounding pronouncements of our constitution are just pipedreams in the face of such blatant censorship in our own community. The Eagle sought to print the truth and were prevented in spite of any constitution.

It is restraints such as this which make us realize the restriction of other freedoms may soon follow.

Censorship is an ugly word and unfortunately the corporate employees of The Eagle now understand its definition with stark clarity and realize their own limitations. As fellow journalists we, at The George-Anne, will fight wholeheartedly to retain our rights and their rights to freedom of the press.

Nicks psychologically repel paint

By Terry Snyder Staff Columnist

I have eight thousand one hundred and thirty-six nicks in the paint on my car. None of them are visible from over three feet away, but I know exactly where each one is located.

It's one of those afflictions of having your own car. You always feel like you're driving a wreck because you know thousands of things about it that could be just a little better.

That's the problem with a lot of things. The better you get to know them, the crummier they get.

Have you ever seen a member of the opposite sex from a distance, become interested in that person, approached him or her, and found that he or she is really some kind of mutant whose afflictions grow steadily as the distance between you decreases?

So anyhow, I have these nicks in the paint on my car. I could spend the money to get the car painted, but I just can't bring myself to it. After all,

If it disappeared tomorrow I wouldn't even miss it when I drove the car. It doesn't make the car go faster, ride smoother, handle quicker or get better gas mileage.

A good paint job costs at least a couple of hundred dollars. Why spend that kind of money on something that seems to have no use whatsoever? I worry about spending money because it's never easy to tell if you'll enjoy what you bought with it as much as you enjoyed having it.

To this day, I haven't been able to decide whether I'd enjoy a paint job, new wheels, or new speakers the most. The end result is that I'll probably never get any of them. But I can buy one of them. I have that power; that's what's important.

Maybe that is why you never see happy people in Jaguars. They always look like they just killed their mothers. Maybe that's so nobody will pull out in front of them with a Volvo. People who drive Volvos do that a lot. Then they slow down. That's why When you have money in your owned them would learn how to aren't going to get any better.

But anyhow, every guy who drives a Jaguar had to give up sixty thousand dollars worth of 'I could buy that' power. Now, when he sees something for sixty thousand dollars, he can only think, "I could have owned that, but I bought this car instead." That must be a horrible realization, and that's what you actually see on the faces of Jaguar

I think the whole point is that nothing is perfect. Show me anything you think is perfect, and I'll tell you how it could be better. We lost the ability to accept perfection in the fall of Eden. The first little bit of knowledge Eve gained was that Adam's hair could be a little bit thicker, and the first knowledge that Adam gained was the Eve's thighs couldn't.

If you don't believe in Eden, maybe it's because we've gotten that much better at rejecting the ideal of perfection. Remember that perfection is Volvos are so safe. If the idiots that only the condition of things that just

Fan of The George-Anne sends article for students' benefit

Dear Editor:

I would like to start my letter off by saying that I enjoy reading your paper, The George-Anne. Our daughter is a freshman at GSC, and brings us her newspapers from school when she comes home to visit. The paper is very informative, and lets us, as parents, know what is going on at GSC.

I have noticed that you are always asking opinions from your readers. Well, I was reading a neighboring county's newspaper last night, and A Concerned GSC Mom!

DEAR SHANNONS: I agree, and so did Claude Sitton, my "boss" at The Raleigh Times: Here's the piece:

MESSAGE TO TEEN-AGE DRIV-DECEASED TEEN-AGE DRIVER

You have a power that no one else on Earth possesses. Your teachers, the police, the governor, the president-none of them have this power; only you have it. This "power" is the power not to kill yourself while behind the wheel of an automobile. This "power" is the power not to kill others with the car you're driving. This "power" is the power not to be a victim of the slaughter of teen-age drivers on our roadways.

You've all seen the stories in the newspaper. Many of you were friends of the teenagers killed. Maybe they were speeding, or passed illegally, or ignored a stop sign, or tried to beat a red light. You cried for them, went to their funerals, participated at memorial services held for them at school. And then got into your car and did the same thing because it could never happen to you!

We want to tell you about another group that doesn't have your "power", and that's your parents. When you leave this Earth, your parents remain behind. They are left behind to grieve over your premature death. They are also left behind to grieve for the future that you'll never experience for yourself-your high school graduation, your wedding. your first child. There will never be another vacation where the "whole" family goes on a trip. > One year ago today, we buried our teen-age son, Jack. Jack was killed in an automobile accident. The accident was a direct result of ignoring the posted speed limit. Jack was a great kid, and we could not have asked for a better son. However, a few seconds of bad judgement, whether caused by inexperience or a sense of "teen-age immortality," or both, cost Jack his life. There is no pain on this Earth that's worse than losing a child. This tragedy will haunt us for the rest of our lives. And every week more parents must face the dreaded realization that they will never see their child again on this Earth-never to kiss them, never to laugh with them,

BARBARA AND JACKRATZ, SR., RALEIGH

DEAR BARBARA AND JACK: My heart goes out to you in your sorrow. The piece you wrote is indeed powerful-and a fitting memorial to your son, Jack Jr.

I hope editors of high school (and college) papers will feel it's worthy of printing. If so, consider this "permis-
