GSU discrimination case refiled in higher court

By Misty McPherson
News Editor

A former GSU maintenance worker who alleges he was fired because he complained of racial discrimination is taking his case to the United States District Court in Atlanta.

"I'm still waiting to hear back from them," said Richard Peters, who was fired in 1989.

Ruth Ann Rogers, institutional compliance officer, said she has had no contact with anyone on the matter. "I wasn't aware that he had filed in an Atlanta court."

Peters originally took his case to the Office of Fair Employment Policies, and was ruled against by Frank Shuster, an Atlanta attorney who acted as Special Master in the case.

The 20-page decision, made Aug. 9, stated Peters' complaints of racial discrimination were not protected by law because they were "not made in good faith."

Shuster said he felt Peters protested because he wanted a job and not because of racial discrimination.

"They fired him for his protests, but his protests were not protected," said Shuster.

According to Peters, he protested two things at GSU -- the non admittance of blacks at the Forest Heights country club and the lack of minorities in the Athletic Department.

He was enrolled in a recreation class in the spring of 1988. He volunteered for a lab at Forest Heights, a local country club. Peters said he was pulled aside by

I haven't been on my feet since this happened to me. The main thing is I'm hurt.

—Richard Peters on being fired from GSU

Linda Hook, the class professor, and told him that the country club did not allow blacks.

Peters spoke with Hooks; Bricker, head of the recreational department; Richard Armstrong, vice-president of business and finance; Jack Nolen, vice-president of student affairs; and Nicholas Henry, president and protested the school's relationship with the country club.

The second matter Peters protested of was the fact that in the spring of 1988, (according to Peters) only one member of the GSU professional athletic staff was black.

Peters said he wrote a letter to David (Bucky) Wagner, head of the athletic department, volunteering for the position of athletic trainer. Wagner responded by saying that the university did not have funds for another staff member and the athletic department was not interested in experimenting with volunteers.

"I was trying to volunteer and be part of it [the athletic department] —that is my major," said Peters. "It would look better for the school if [they] had a black. It didn't have to be me."

"I haven't done one thing, on or off that campus, to be terminated for," said Peters.

Peters was dismissed from his job as the night shift maintenance man in the Physical Plant because of four complaints filed against him, all of which he claims he did not learn of until Jan. 9, 1988, when he unknowingly signed a reprimand concerning the complaints.

Just previous to these complaints, Peters questioned why a locksmith job he claims was promised to him by Kenneth LeCain, the head of building maintenance, was given to someone else.

"They appointed a white boy and I complained and they got rid of me," said Peters. "There were no protests (complaints) about me until I protested the locksmith job," said Peters.

Peters stated that because of threatening phone calls and harassment he moved to Alabama, where he is enrolled as a full-time student at University of Alabama at Birmingham.

"I haven't been on my feet since this happened to me," said Peters. "The main thing is I'm hurt."

But Peters said he is still ready to settle this matter. "It's been going on for three years. I have to live and breathe it."

"I'm not going to go away," said Peters.

"I look at the Shuster ruling as a win. He left so many avenues open."

Scientists challenge Bush wetlands proposal Environmentalists: Plan could cost the nation half its wetlands

By Reed Karaim
Knight-Ridder Newspapers

WASHINGTON — A panel of environmental scientists called on President Bush Tuesday to refer his controversial wetlands proposal to the National Academy of Sciences for independent review, saying the plan could cost the nation half its wetlands.

Dr. Mark Brinson, a former president of the Society of Wetlands Scientists, said Bush's proposal was a scientifically unsound, politically motivated attempt to open up millions of acres to development.

"These revised rules are nothing but a complete hoax," Brinson said. "I know of no research that backs up the shift in standards."

Bush, who several times has promised "no net loss" of wetlands, has been under attack by environmentalists since offering new wetlands rules for public comment in August. He said the rules were an attempt to cut red tape and provide a "common-sense" federal definition that still could protect the nation's 100 million acres of swamps, marshes, prairie potholes and other wetlands.

Builders, the energy industry and some farm groups had complained the earlier rules were too harsh.

But Dr. Joseph Larson, chairman of the National Wetlands Technical Council, said field tests of the new standards convinced him that many of the nation's most important wetlands would no longer be protected under the new definition.

He said much of the Florida Everglades, the Great Dismal Swamp in Virginia and the prairie potholes in the Great Plains would no longer be recognized as wetlands.

"We're not talking about mud holes in someone's back yard," said Larson, who also heads the University of Massachusetts' Environmental Institute in Amherst.

Michael Deland, chairman of the president's Council on Environmental Quality, responded mildly to the scientists' claims, saying analysis of the rules was still under way, and "it's far too early to put any credibility on the 50 percent number or any other number."

"The document was designed to protect those areas that function in a traditional sense as wetlands, those that provide flood control, pollution filtration, provide habitat for wildlife and spawning grounds for fish," he said.

He said the administration was likely to extend the comment period for proposed rules past Oct. 15.

The two researchers presented the letter from the wetlands technical council and 13 independent scientists calling on Bush to refer his plan to the National Academy of Scientists.

Congressman Thomas speaks on wetlands

By Dennis Smith

Staff Writer

First District Congressman Lindsay Thomas addressed a group of environmentalists and faculty at the Southern Conference on Wetlands last Friday at GSU's Center for Continuing Education.

Thomas updated the group on wetlands programs and talked about upcoming legislation on the issue.

He said that it was time for Congress to get together and decide what areas will be protected and how it will be done.

Thomas is proposing a new bill called the Wetlands Stewardship Act of 1991.

"What I am attempting to do is to establish in law just what our national policy on wetlands is, and that is what has never been done," he said.

Wetlands are important ecological landscapes for many species and plants.

They also hold and purify excess water from our rivers and streams.

In referring to this region, Thomas said that he would like to "protect those areas which need protecting, but also allow enough growth so our children won't have to leave to find a job."

A large portion of southeastern Georgia is made up of wetlands.

Students released on $10,000 bond

By Kevin Hudson

Managing Editor

Three GSU students will have to wait to find out if felony murder charges against them will be dropped.

The students were, reportedly released on $10,000 bond last week after a grand jury decided there was enough evidence to bind the men over for trial on charges of entering auto in connection with an incident at a local auto dealership on Oct. 5.

The pending murder charge was not presented to the grand jury since the investigation is not completed, according to a spokesman for the District Attorney's office.

James Finch, 66, from Brooklet was pronounced dead at 12:45 a.m. Sunday at Bulloch Memorial Hospital. Finch was a security guard at Franklin Chevrolet/Toyota on Highway 80 East.

City police, responding to a citizen complaint, approached the dealership and spotted a jeep being driven by a white male leaving the scene.

According to the police report, a security guard pointed to two white males running across the open lot as Officers Jim Costlow and James Wilkinson arrived.

According to the report, the security guard advised Costlow that the white male driving the jeep had dropped the other two males off at the dealership.

Costlow then advised the police department of the tag number on the Jeep. Officers Randy Woodcock and Allison Baker picked up the driver within minutes according to the report.

The security guard identified the white male as the driver of the jeep. Police report identified the driver as James Daniel Bennett III, 18, a GSU student from Swainsboro.

The other two suspects were picked up later by the GSU Police Department. They were identified in the report as Jason Josep Baker, 20, a GSU student from Braselton and Patrick Parker, 19, a GSU student from Garfield.

Sargent Vince Alewine arrived at Franklin's a short time after Costlow and Wilkinson. Finch was found unconscious sitting in a chair in an office a short time later, according to the report.

EMS was called to the scene and transported the security guard to BMH where he was pronounced dead. The cause of death was later ruled as being a heart attack.

In Georgia, if a death inadvertently occurs during the commission of a felony, the perpetrator(s) may be charged with felony murder.

GSU Marching Band plans trip

The celebrated GSU Southern Pride Marching Band will be traveling to James Madison University in Harrisonburg, Virginia to cheer the Eagles to a victory at Saturday's game.

The band will be honored Friday night by James Madison's 320-member band, the Marching Royal Dukes.

"We are going on this trip to support the Eagles and to present a positive image of GSU to the people of Virginia," said Dan Pittman, the director of GSU's band. "We also want to cultivate a lasting relationship between Southern Pride and the Marching Royal Dukes."

Cartoonist to visit Southern

Michael Obrenovich has helped thousands across the country with a practical and easy way to communicate through the use of humor and cartoons.

His presentation, "Using Humor and Cartoons to Communicate Effectively" will be held on Oct. 23 at 7 pm in the University Union, room 280, and on Oct. 28 at 6 pm in the Carroll Building, room 266.

Obrenovich, a highly respected nation-wide speaker has invented a unique teaching system that communicates curriculum material through humorous cartooning strategies. Students who are taught through this technique have a higher retention rate than with other methods. Obrenovich will be demonstrating this exciting technique at both workshops.

Obrenovich's presentations are free and open to the public and are being sponsored by the Campus Life Enrichment Committee and the Department of Educational Leadership, Technology and Research.

Georgia Legislative Internships Available

Georgia college students who are interested in how state government works may apply for an internship in the state legislature.

About 30 students are selected each year from private and public colleges and universities in Georgia's, said Wheatie Gowen, assistant coordinator of the internship program in the University of Georgia's Carl Vinson Institute of Government.

Interns in the 10-week program, which begins in January, usually work for Georgia House or Senate committees doing research on bills or issues before the General Assembly.

They may also work with a legislative committee monitoring the progress of legislation, Gowen said.

Students must be Georgia residents and at least juniors in college. Academic credit plus a stipend of $175 during the legislative session is given. Deadline is October 18.

Peace studies offered

By Sydney Trent

Knight-Ridder Newspapers

SWARTHMORE, Pa. — What could the hit television series "MASH" and a play written in 411 B.C. possibly have in common?

Try war and sex, Swarthmore College professor Jerry Frost recently suggested during a lecture in his class "War and Peace."

His students snickered. But Frost wasn't joking.

In "MASH," the sexual banter between doctors and nurses was used to soften the sting of anti-war criticism, he said. And Aristophanes attempted the same in his satire "Lysistrata," in which the women of ancient Greece withhold sex to dissuade the men from fighting.

Frost's course, which looks at war and peace from the Hebrews to the Greeks, is among 16 offerings included in "Peace and Conflict Studies," launched this fall at Swarthmore.

The program is one of about 200 at U.S. colleges and universities that explore the causes of war and alternatives to fighting. Most began during the Vietnam War; others were created during the military buildup of the early Reagan years.

Now might seem like an odd time to start a peace studies program, given the seeming end of the Cold War and the wide national support for the Persian Gulf War. But many educators believe that, with the fall of communism in the Soviet Union and Eastern Europe, peace studies are more crucial than ever.

"Five years ago, we had the feeling that resolving conflicts was going to be a more significant matter in the world, and time has borne that out," said Harvey Glickman, coordinator of a joint peace studies program between Haverford and Bryn Mawr Colleges, which was launched in 1986.

"As high-level conflicts between the superpowers are being managed, we are seeing a rise in the number of low-level conflicts," Glickman said. "The world is becoming less polarized and more complex, and that can lead to instability."

At the same time, the focus of peace studies programs has broadened to include the study of conflict at all levels, not just between nations.

"We're looking at the idea of peace within society and political and economic structures that decrease poverty and increase communication between racial and gender groups," said Paul Wehr, a sociology professor at the University of Colorado and member of the planning committee for the Peace Studies Association, an umbrella organization for peace studies programs.

In the Philadelphia area, St. Joseph's, La Salle and Villanova Universities and the University of Pennsylvania also have peace studies programs.

They range from those offering an undergraduate "concentration" of six courses — such as the Swarthmore and Haverford-Bryn Mawr programs — to those offering doctorates, such as Penn's Conflict Analysis and Peace Science program.

"These are students who want to improve the world," Glickman said. "They see coming into these courses a chance to discuss their ideals and put them into practice. But we try to show them the constraints in which public policymakers operate so they can temper their idealism with pragmatism."

GSU economics professor: "Education is a rewarding profession."

By Nancy Rowell

Staff Writer

"Southern is very much like Louisiana, I still feel at home with the students and I have been impressed with the good manners of GSU students, especially the men," said Jimmie Earle, an economics professor at GSU.

After 37 years in Louisiana Jimmie Earle decided to move closer to her family.

But she was torn between her two daughters; one living in Dallas and the other in Statesboro.

"I chose Statesboro not only because of family, but there was also a better opportunity here," she said.

One might wonder why she has the name Jimmie. She chuckled at this question and said "I was the fourth girl."

"My dad was named James and I'm really proud to be named after him."

Following high school she attended a vocational technical school. Then Earle worked as a secretary for outpatient clinics for a year.

She soon married and quit her job since this was a time when very few women worked while raising a family.

Besides caring for her daughters, she also worked as secretary and treasurer in her husband's office.

From 1955-1983 he worked as a family practitioner.

In 1974 when the price of gas rose from 39 cents per gallon to $1.25 per gallon, Earle began commuting to college.

The trip to Northeast Louisiana University was 40 miles ...one way. She graduated with a Bachelor's and a Master's degree and she was hired there.

"I understand why students get to frustrated," she said. I can remember what it's like to be a student. I think some professors have forgotten that they were once students also."

After a year, Jimmie Earle has settled into a routine filled with students, happiness and laughter.

This quarter begins her second year as a GSU economics professor. "I really enjoy teaching. Besides adjusting to a new town and a new school, I've also had to get used to the quarter system."

Moving is a new beginning with new friends, new activities and a new environment.

Laughing, she said "When you've lived somewhere all of your life, you take for granted that you know how to get things done or who to call. It's nice going places where you know everyone."

Speaking softly she began to explain her interest in education.

"I began teaching because I liked being part of the school experience, not just the classes, but the art exhibits, the plays and the football games."

Including her Master's Earle has been teaching for nine and a half years, but only eight full time.

"It's a different world ...not like any place else. Education is a rewarding profession; you have so many rich experiences," she said enthusiastically.

"Education is like a coin - two sided. It is a privilege to attend college, but privilege bears responsibility."

Earle is frustrated by students who have this wonderful opportunity and waste it.

Said she "They should really learn something about the subject as well as themselves."

Earle is a member of the University Optimist Club and attends the First Presbyterian Church.

She also works with the Savannah Avenue Association which is a group of homeowner's trying to benefit the community by preserving and promoting the older homes.

They were responsible for the Savannah Avenue luminaries (candles in white bags) during the Christmas season.

She is also affiliated with the Friendship program in which she "adopts" an international student for a quarter.

"It's a chance to broaden both of our horizons and helps us better understand different cultures," Earle said.

"Activities such as these help me enjoy school even more since my life is more grounded," she said smiling.

After a long day teaching, Earle joins the students in aerobics, "I'm trying to get back in shape."

Earle also enjoys tennis, yardwork, reading and writing letters.

"Instead of bills, it's so nice to go to my mailbox and wonder 'Now, who will I get a letter from today?'"

As a child's eyes widen with delight at the thought of a toy store, hers widen in delight of a Hallmark store.

Earle said "There are so many cute cards and so many neat places to get them."

Taking a moment to reflect on her home, she decided that her most treasured items are her letters, cards and pictures that she has collected over the years.

Her summer project was to put 35 years of pictures into albums.

Ever so seriously she leaned forward "Don't ever get that far behind!"

Her sense of humor shines as she describes one of her most embarrassing moments.

"While in church one Sunday morning I stood up for the first hymn."

"My half-slip slid half way down," laughing lightly, "I had to decide whether to pull it up or take it off. I took it off and put it in my purse."

When meeting people Earle looks for expression, especially in the eyes.

"I don't know if the eyes are the windows to our souls, but I can tell a lot by looking into the eyes. I look for laughter."

Appropriately, her eyes have those characteristics that she seeks in others.

Prosecutors presenting the case against three [GSU] students to a grand jury would be wise to see that felony murder charges go no further than the arrest warrant Statesboro police filed. This is not plausibly a murder case...

The grand jury will be asked to consider theft charges. That would fit what the suspects are accused of doing. The three allegedly went to a car lot and took the canvas roof and doors off a vehicle.

But a security guard at the lot apparently suffered a heart attack and died after discovering the crime. Because of that, police filed murder charges.

Georgia law does say that a death which occurs as the result of a felony can be prosecuted as murder. That's a legal stretch to cover criminals who may not have intended to kill anyone but put others in danger. To apply the law in this case would be a far greater stretch than that.

The three students may have acted foolishly and perhaps criminally. But they did not intend physical harm to anyone. That their actions may have unintentionally brought tragedy will weigh upon them for the rest of their lives. They don't deserve to face the possibility of life in prison on top of it.

A legal system can retain crucial public support over the long run only if it is broadly recognized as fair and reasonable. Murder charges in this case would call the reasonableness of Georgia's system into question.

Letters to the Editor

Parents want to thank Samaritan in uniform

Dear Editor,

I recently received a letter from the appreciative parents of a young woman who, while experiencing car trouble on I-16, received assistance from a GSU student.

The letter, in part, reads:

On Sunday evening, September 29 about 8 p.m., my daughter broke down in her car on U.S. 16, about a mile outside Savannah. She had two major problems: a brand new tire, bought the day before blew out on her, and after she tried to re-inflate it from the aerosol can, the engine wouldn't start.

Facing the prospect of walking about a mile and a half to the next exit for help, a car stopped (at which she nearly died thinking the worst was about to happen!) when she realized that the person who stopped wore a Army uniform, had GSU plates on his car, and that probably she could trust her situation to his help.

This young man tried jumping the engine, checked for other problems, (and) failing that, drove her to the nearest phone and waited for her to arrange transportation for her car and for her to arrange a ride from her roommate.

As a parent, I will be forever grateful that this young man cared enough to help out someone he didn't know and cared enough to make sure she was able to continue her trip. I thought you also should know how appreciative we are.

If you could trace who this was, would you please try and get this card of thanks to him.

He is a senior with two quarters to go until graduation, is tall with brown hair and drives a red Honda with Georgia plates.

I am dismayed that my daughter didn't get his name so that we could thank him directly. Any help you can give would be appreciated.

I have the card of thanks mentioned in the letter and would like to present it to the deserving person.

Even if we are unable to identify the student who provided assistance in this instance, I believe that everyone of us in the GSU family should take pride in one of ours and share in the honor that he brought to himself, his uniform, and the university.

Are campus police going too far?

Changes...

Philana Griffin

On the fourth of Oct., around 12:15 p.m., a group of students were casually walking from a party that had just dispersed at Chandler Heights.

As the group continued to laugh, walk and talk, campus police slowly came driving up from behind.

They were eventually stopped. Tamala Booker asked out of concern, if something had happened and/or if they were looking for someone in particular. The officers said, "No, we received complaints about noise."

"[But,] we've just entered into the complex," said Tamala.

Later, around 1 a.m., Renee Stewart, one of the girls that was walking with Tamala earlier, said that "We'd just left Tammy's apartment en route to mine."

Before she entered into her apartment, she saw some friends and stopped to talk.

According to Renee, there were "about seven or eight of us standing in front of my apartment. And, all of a sudden campus police came by [bitching]."

"It's against the rules to loiter in front of your apartments," said the officer.

The girls asked why they couldn't, especially if they weren't creating any noise that would awaken their fellow neighbors.

The girls said they, "were just being harassed because we definitely weren't doing anything."

Tamala then called the campus police office. A dispatcher told her that there was a 1 a.m. curfew.

The young ladies knew they were being misinformed. They looked in The Eagle Eye, and in the Pines handbook. Neither source confirmed what the female dispatcher said.

I took it upon myself to look into the matter. I called Ken Brown, the Chief of Campus Security, to ask if there was a curfew. He stated that there wasn't one that he knew of. He also said that campus police are supposed to make routine patrols in the area.

In addition to Brown, I asked a highly placed person in the Housing Department - who wished to remain anonymous - the same question. He also confirmed that there's no curfew in the Pines.

Campus police, what's the problem?

Chief Brown confirmed that your job is to make routine patrols in the area to make sure all is well, not to harass certain individuals.

I can understand if they were having a rowdy party, kegs, or live rock bands.

But they weren't.

If similar incidents continue to occur, the young ladies are willing to take whatever measures necessary to rectify the problem.

I'm sure other Pine residents will agree, if you must patrol the area, then do so. But, don't stop someone unless it's absolutely necessary. Sure, we need the protection you provide. However, we don't need the HARASSMENT.

By the way - my fellow Pines, University, and Chandler residents - since I've vocalized your concerns and experiences, please don't give police any reason to continuously bother you.

Like Tammy, Renee and their other friends, conduct yourselves in an adult manner at all times. And, if you're still harassed just for BEING, then they're to blame - not you.

This list, of course, does not include the engagement ring, wedding rings, rehearsal dinner, usher and bridesmaid gifts, a wedding license, honeymoon expenses, etc., etc.
Total estimated cost: about $4000.
And I understand that we're getting off cheap.

I also suspect that the people who came up with the wonderful tradition of the parents paying for most of the expenses were the bride and groom. A pretty smart bride and groom at that.

There is an entire industry waiting out there for the unsuspecting couple that wants to have a "real" wedding.

Jewelry stores lie in wait like trapdoor spiders with "easy payment plans" for the poor saps who want to buy a nice ring for their fiancé. He should be finished paying it off around the time of their tenth anniversary.

There are bridal magazines that are three times the size of an issue of National Geographic.

Flower shops have carefully arranged catalogues and payment plans, and you could fill a large room with all the helpful books on how to conduct a wedding.

Bakery stores make a special "groom's cake" to go along with the wedding cake. You pay for it too. After all, it's a tradition.

I could go on and on. I didn't even go into picking out a china and crystal pattern.

I have never eaten off my parents' wedding china, nor have I drunk from their crystal. I don't think I have even seen the good silver. It kind of makes you wonder about this china pattern thing.

Someone needs to tell these third world countries that don't have enough industries to start having bigger weddings. The upswing in their economy should soon be obvious, and men will be too busy trying on tuxedos and helping to pick out china patterns to have civil wars.

It almost makes you wonder, in this age of a massive divorce rate, if this marriage thing is worth it, with all its china, flowers, tuxedos, expensive rings, dinners, mailing invitations, honeymoon plans, relatives, and plans that make the invasion of Normandy look like a picnic.

Is it worth it?
Yup.

Storm Orphans coming to rock the Rockin' Eagle tomorrow

"We are who we are, and if you like it, that's great, but if you don't, that's okay too," guitarist mark patrick said

By Doug Gross

Staff Writer

In a music industry heavily populated with acts all too eager to cash in on the latest formula for instant success, it's always refreshing to come across a group like Tuscaloosa, Alabama's Storm Orphans.

"We've never been into trying to chase the current fad," said Storm Orphans guitarist Mark Patrick in a recent telephone interview. "We are who we are, and if you like it, that's great, but if you don't, that's okay too. We know it may take longer to get where we'd like to be, but until then we'll keep putting out records on our own and playing live shows."

The Storm Orphans, Alabama's self proclaimed Ambassadors of Frenzy, will bring that live show to the Rockin' Eagle Cafe on Wednesday night in support of their most recent record release, Sin Souls in Hell From Sex, their fourth on their independent record label, Low Rumble Records.

The album's rather colorful title is derived from a photograph on the record sleeve depicting band members standing in what Patrick described as a "cross garden", an assortment of monuments bearing religious slogans, created by an unknown artist on his farm property outside of Tuscaloosa.

"The guy is not real receptive to visitors on his property," said Patrick of the creator of this "garden". "From the story we heard, the guy lost his whole family in an accident with a drunk driver and sort of went off the deep end. It's just something we found interesting, his own form of freedom of expression, I guess."

It is no surprise that freedom of expression should be an interest of band members Patrick, vocalist Rusty Luquire, drummer Jack Masey and bassist Shawn Patrick, a group who refused to play the waiting game typical of groups looking for big money, major label contracts, opting instead to release their music independently on Low Rumble.

"Basically, we knew it could be a long time before we heard anything from a major record label," said Patrick. "We enjoyed touring and playing live, and we saw it [an independent label] as an opportunity to get our stuff out to the public and get some airplay."

The band's success with these releases is the result of a hard driving, guitar oriented sound which on occasion approaches the realm of heavy metal, but is more in-your-face and less cliched than the typical metal fare. If R.E.M. and Black Sabbath got together to throw back some drinks and write a few songs, the result may be something similar to Storm Orphan's material. The group's work is notably devoid of self ingratiating guitar solos and wimpy ballads, relying on a strait ahead rock style which has garnered the group the attention of major record label representatives in the past few months.

While Patrick knew no specific details (the band leaves business affairs up to their management, freeing members to concentrate solely on their music), he reported that the group's management had been in contact with spokesmen from several labels, especially since their recent appearance at the New South Music Seminar in Atlanta.

With record companies finally beginning to notice this un-and coming band, it appears it may only be a matter of time before Storm Orphans, despite their refusal to compromise themselves or their music, are receiving the widespread acclaim they deserve. What this means for local music fans is that we better catch them in the intimate setting of the Eagle now, before it's too late.

Alcohol affects many of the organ systems, including the liver, the digestive tract, the cardiovascular system, the brain, and the nervous system. It is also thought to influence the risk of cancer in many organs, and has been shown to affect the lifespan.

Alcohol abuse may inflict permanent damage on any or all of the organ systems mentioned above. It seems to be a cause of shortened life - if not from direct physical damage, then from some kind of violent trauma, such as traffic accidents, assaults, and brawls.

Studies show that up to 86% of those involved in assaults are intoxicated at the time of injury. However, it has been suggested that it is not alcohol that makes people violent but the proximity of a large crowd of people for extended periods in public areas or licensed premises.

Alcohol simply makes offenders less likely to avoid arrest than sober individuals. This is why it is best for everyone not to linger around after a party because there is a high risk of fights among intoxicated individuals.

Not all those who drink alcohol become violent, but there is some evidence that alcohol consumption by a stressed person predisposes violent behavior. Studies also show that alcohol consumption by young adults increases the likelihood that the behavior of others will be perceived as insulting or challenging.

Health educators should focus attention on guidelines for alcohol overindulgence as much as on limits for habitual daily or weekly consumption. Television programs and peer group discussion on and off campus may be the most effective way to influence drinking habits. The risk of permanent injury should be emphasized. It is important to control the availability of potential weapons in places where alcohol is consumed.

Everyone, drinkers and non-drinkers alike, would benefit by participating in the Alcohol Awareness Week activities taking place this week.

Don't just sit there...

Eagles destroy Western Carolina at home, 44-6

By Rod Swinson
Staff writer

The Eagles rebounded from a tough loss to Eastern Kentucky to route the Western Carolina Catamounts 44-6 Saturday afternoon.

The Eagles impressed a home crowd of over 19,000 with a dazzling balanced attack which accumulated over 400 yards.

The defense came out pumped up after the opening kickoff and stopped the Catamounts offense cold on three consecutive plays.

Following a partially blocked punt, the Eagles took over the ball on their own 38 yard line and the onslaught began.

Freshman quarterback Charles Bostick hit senior slotback Albert Huntley on a shovel pass play which went for 18 yards. Senior fullback Lester Efford then rambed 12 yards up the middle. On the next play, Efford took a swing pass from Bostick and outran the Western Carolina defense 31 yards for a touchdown. David Cool added the extra point for a 7-0 lead.

Western Carolina countered on their next possession as quarterback Lonnie Galloway took the ball around the right end and raced 55 yards before Eagle cornerback Rodney Oglesby could catch him. But, the Eagles defense behind Curtis Gordon and Nick Davis toughened and held the Catamounts to a 36 yard field goal by Phil Shirley to make the score 7-3.

The teams traded punts on their next possessions.

After Bostick picked up a key first down on a 20 yard run, the Eagles got on the scoreboard again.

With 2:12 left in the first quarter, Efford burst up the middle 16 yards for a touchdown to cap a seven play, 51 yard drive. Cool added the extra point to give the Eagles a 14-3 lead after one quarter.

On the Eagles next possession, Bostick took matters into his own hands. After a key interference penalty, Bostick finished a five play, 77 yard drive with a 27 yard touchdown run around right end. Cool added the extra point for a 21-3 lead.

With key plays by Michael Berry and Paul Sikkelee the Eagle defense stopped the Catamounts on their next possession.

On the Eagles next possession, Bostick added to his 125 passing yards of the first half by going to the air to Huntley for a 23 yard gain and then to senior split end Deryl Belser for a 35 yard gain.

Completing a six play, 82 yard drive, Bostick slithers into the end zone from one yard out. Cool added the point after to give the Eagles a 28-3 lead.

The Catamounts' next possession was their last taste of pleasure. Shirley kicked a 34 yard field goal to finish a 14 play, 63 yard drive to make the score 28-6 at the half.

The Eagles took the second half kickoff and marched the ball down the field. With a good blend of the run and pass the Eagles scored at the 10:14 mark as Bostick goes around the right end to score capping a 11 play 62 yard drive. Cool adds the point for a 35-6 lead at the end of three quarters.

The Eagle defense would not let up, as they held Western Carolina to only 207 yards of total offense.

By the beginning of the fourth quarter, the Eagles had pulled most of the starters, but the backups played well.

With 13:10 left in the game, reserve quarterback Derrick McGrady dropped back and hit Terrence Sorrell for a 15 yard touchdown pass to complete a 12 play, 80 yard drive. The extra point was blocked and the Eagles led 41-6.

Cool capped off the scoring for the day as he booted a 53 yard field goal to give the Eagles a margin of 44-6.

Bostick, who led the Eagles with 16 rushes for 116 yards, said the team is maintaining a positive attitude.

"I think we're on the right track. We're just going to take everything one day at a time," he said.

Eagle fullback Lester Efford praised the offensive effort. "We have to execute, and that's what we did."

He added that his offensive line performed admirably. "The guys up front deserve all of the credit."

The Eagles next face James Madison University in Harrisonburg, Va. Kickoff is set for Saturday at 1:30 p.m.

Smith learns about life after Eagle football

By Rod Swinson
Staff writer

When the Eagles destroyed the Western Carolina Catamounts, they were minus one of their big tanks who usually sits right on the front line.

Former GSU offensive lineman Danny Smith said sitting in the stands watching his team take the field without him was an undesirable feeling.

"Sitting in the stands, and knowing I can't be out there was so very hard for me."

Smith, a senior, decided that the team's, as well as his, best interest would be served if he discontinued his career in football.

He started all 15 games last season and was expected to anchor the offensive line this season. He had shown consistent improvement throughout his five years at GSU, according to the coaches.

Smith was an All-State selection in high school at Waycross High. He played in the Georgia North-South All-Star game. He also lettered in baseball in high school.

Smith was injured during a pre-season practice and has severe headaches as a result of the injury.

After trying to play with the injury for a while and consulting with his physician, Smith decided to give up the game.

Smith says the coaches and team were very supportive, but he still misses some of the players.

Danny Smith, a senior accounting major, was forced to end his football career at GSU by a neck injury. (Special photo)

"I miss the fellowship with the other players, and the prestige of being a GSU Eagle."

Smith is looking forward to graduating and said that he hopes to get a job in his field of accounting.

Even though he still keeps in touch with the team, Smith said there is one aspect of the game on Saturday that he misses tremendously.

"I miss seeing Lester Efford in the huddle after every play with the mindset that he can run over any player who gets in his way."

Soccer team fights past Stetson at home, 4-2

By Michael Strong
Sports Editor

The GSU men's soccer team overcame poor officiating and an aggressive Stetson team to beat the Hatters in overtime 4-2 Saturday at Eagle Field.

"They took it to us early and I think that kind of surprised them [the Eagles]," said Coach Tom Norton.

They certainly did take it to them. The officials called fouls on the Hatters over 20 times in the first 10 minutes.

Stetson got on the board first at the 12:36 mark. The Hatters' Lance Rodriguez tapped in a cross from Will Jackson for the 1-0 lead.

The Eagles responded with a goal of their own at the 35:56 mark, when striker Chris Martinez took a cross from midfielder Andrew Hansen and rammed it into the back of the net to tie the score at 1-1.

Shortly before the half, but in separate incidents, Stetson defender John Barna and Eagle midfielder Chris Chambers each received cautions for rough play.

This was indicative of the lax officiating throughout the contest. The teams went into the half tied at 1-1.

The Eagles took the lead 2-1 with a goal by striker Dak Woods. Woods put in a rebound of Steen Larson's shot after it bounced off of Stetson goalkeeper Kevin Johnson.

The Hatters would not die. Defender Will Jackson put a shot just out of the reach of the Eagles' Kevin Chambers to knot the score at 2-2.

Regulation time expired with the two teams tied at 2-2, so they went on to overtime.

"Stetson always plays us tough," said Norton. "We don't normally play well down there [at Stetson], but they played well against us here today."

In the first half of the overtime, the teams both had opportunities.

Only 6:23 into the first half, Hansen missed a header from the back post and Stetson hit a crossing pass off of GSU's Chambers chest that he lost temporarily.

In the second half of overtime, the Hatters' Chris Conte bounced a header off of the cross bar, but

Rod's Review

By Rod Swinson

Staff writer

Life as Deion Sanders must be extraordinary. Imagine how it would be to be one of the more loved yet hated person ever to grace the planet.

Contrary to popular belief, Deion does have his enemies. But tell me how can a person hate a man who labelled himself PRIME TIME?

Consider the following: Cincinnati Reds pitcher Jose Rijo was disappointed when Deion did not play in the last game he pitched against Atlanta. Rijo was quoted in Sport's Illustrated as saying, "I was hoping he'd play -- he's my idol. It's not that he plays two sports, but he plays them both very well. He's got a chance to be not just a good (baseball) player, but a great player."

Evidently, Prime Time has some international appeal, but that is not all, he's liked pretty well by the Jeffs and Marks in Atlanta.

Braves pitcher Mark Grant has changed his mind about Deion. Grant was quoted to say, "He's incredible. I admit I prejudged him at the beginning. But you get to know him, and you realize he has a heart of gold, he's fun and he plays hard."

Personally, I think that particular quote tends to voice the sentiment of a vast number of Deion fans.

Yes, even the Falcons know that quite a few of the fans who show up at Fulton County stadium are there for the Prime Time show. Remember, the Falcons are a business and are interested in making money, and Deion sells quite a few tickets.

But the question remains: Is Deion Sanders worth all of this attention?

I recently read in Sports Illustrated about a day in the life of Deion Sanders before he became Prime Time.

You be the judge of his ability and sincerity.

In 1987, at the Metro Conference spring championship, Deion was scheduled to play rightfield for FSU in a 3 p.m. baseball tournament game, run the third leg of the 4 x 100 relay at 7:15 for the track team and then play another baseball game at 7:30. After helping the Seminoles win the first baseball game, Deion helped the relay team to win the conference track title, and then jogged back to the baseball stadium for the night game. His two-run single gave him the game winning RBI as FSU won the conference baseball title.

There was just something about the presence of Deion that seemed to mean success.

Deion is considering playing the full baseball season next year. His decision will depend somewhat on the outcome of the Otis Nixon situation.

Personally, I feel that Deion has a bigger impact in the NFL. I mean if it wasn't for Deion, there would be no highlights of the Falcons on ESPN.

I know Prime Time has a major influence here at GSU.

As I was leaving the Communication Arts building I asked a young lady who her favorite player was in professional sports? You guessed it, she said Deion Sanders.

When I asked her why, she replied, "He's just great, and has a lot of ability, and to top it all off, he's cocky."

True, I'm a Deion fan, but when he can capture the hearts of young women, the man must be doing something right.

I agree that he is over paid, but I feel that virtually every multi-million dollar athlete is over paid.

How can we support paying people more money than they can spend in a life time, and yet pay the builders of society (educators) such pitiful salaries.

No, I'm not endeavoring to become an educator (and that's one of the major reasons why), but my logic does not suggest that I support people getting paid by the millions for their ability to handle a ball.

For that matter, why am I endeavoring to become a journalist, when that salary is not going to buy me a mansion?

Because I like it!!

Volleyball team places second in tournament

By Michael Strong

Sports Editor

The Lady Eagle volleyball team placed second in the Savannah College of Art and Design (SCAD) Tournament over the weekend in Hilton Head.

On Friday the ladies defeated Maryville in three straight 15-7, 15-12, 15-16-14.

The team was led by freshmen Alexis Dankulic and Nicci Borisek, who had 11 and 10 kills respectively.

Senior Dee Cardell passed out 27 assists and freshman Jennifer Petelle had seven digs.

Borisek also added four aces and the team had 13 overall. The win increased GSU's winning streak to ten games.

On Saturday, they faced a scrappy Newberry team that gave them fits, but they beat them in three straight: 15-13, 17-15, 15-8.

The ladies' winning streak was stopped at 11 in their next match against South Carolina-Aiken.

GSU took Aiken to the limit, but lost in five games: 12-15, 15-5, 11-15, 15-10, 15-11.

Sophomore Julie Ciezowski led the team with 13 kills. Dankulic and Petelle added 20 and 19 digs.

For the day, Cardell had 82 assists and Dankulic clubbed 38 kills. The Lady Eagles had already qualified for the semifinals on Sunday and made the most of it by defeating South Carolina-Spartanburg in four games: 15-12, 15-13, 7-15, 15-12.

Dankulic led the way with 21 kills and nine digs. Ciezowski added 10 kills. The victory put the team in the finals of their second straight tournament. They won their first tournament ever last weekend in the Paine Tournament. They defeated South Carolina State for the title.

The Ladies' winning streak was stopped at 11 in their next match against South Carolina-Aiken. GSU took Aiken to the limit, but lost in five games: 12-15, 15-5, 11-15, 15-10, 15-11. Sophomore Julie Ciezowski led the team with 13 kills. Dankulic and Petelle added 20 and 19 digs. For the day, Cardell had 82 assists and Dankulic clubbed 38 kills.

The Lady Eagles met S.C.-Aiken again in the finals and were looking to do onto Aiken, as Aiken had done onto them.

But, it was not to be as Aiken cruised through the match in three games: 15-4, 15-8, 15-11.

Dankulic rang up 33 kills, Cardell dealt out 59 assists and Lori Dattollo had four aces for the two matches.

Dankulic was named to the All-Tournament team for her ef-orts. It is the second straight tournament that a GSU player has been named to an All-Tournament team.

In the Paine Tournament, Ciezowski was named to the team and Cardell was the MVP.

The semifinal victory gave the Lady Eagles 14 wins for the season: a new record. The ladies improved to 14-10 overall.

The ladies will be in action tonight against Augusta College in Hanner Fieldhouse at 7 p.m.

Cardell leads the way for youngsters on the team

Out with the old and in with the new, but not just yet for the Lady Eagle volleyball team.

Senior setter Dee Cardell has seen both the early failures of the team and its newfound success of the past two seasons and had a big hand in the latter.

"She is really the leader out there," says Coach J.B. Claiborne. "She's in charge of the offense and does a really good job."

This is not an easy task as she plays with four freshmen and a sophomore, all of whom are adjusting to playing with one another.

"I view myself as a mediator [on court]," says Cardell. "I have a lot of admiration for the people doing the passing. They're the one's who have all of the hard shots smacked at them. I think my job is pretty easy really."

Cardell, a health and physical education major, has come a long way since her first season. She didn't even play her freshman year because she was told that GSU didn't have a team.

"Actually, it was just founded and had only been around for about two years," she said.

Cardell is from McDonough, just outside Atlanta and attended Woodward Academy.

"It was pretty strict," she says. "We had to wear uniforms. But, they were really strong on college prep."

She lettered in volleyball, basketball and track while at the academy.

"She's really a team leader," says Claiborne. "She's smart and makes things easier for me."

Cardell sees why this is the case. "It's probably because my dad's a coach and I understand what he needs," she says.

The team has an extensive travel schedule, but has one of the highest grade point averages of all the teams competing for GSU.

"He [Coach Claiborne] makes sure our studies are good," says Cardell. "Like at the Paine Tournament, we got there and he gave us a study hour. It also helps that we really don't have any hellions [on the team]."

Cardell is in the process of breaking the team record for assists in a season. She set the record last season with 324 and has already surpassed that total this year with over 400.

The team has seven more matches and the Trans America Athletic Conference Tournament left on the schedule which may allow her to put the record out of reach for a while.

She will graduate at the end of winter quarter, but hasn't decided if she will enroll in graduate school or get a job, but in any event there is going to be a big hole in the middle of the GSU line-up.

that would be Stetson's last big threat.

Less than a minute after the missed shot by Conte, the Eagles' Ryan Welch popped a shot in off of a rebound of Martinez' shot for the 3-2 lead.

The Eagles were not done. Hansen headed a ball in off a corner kick from Jeff DeSandre for the 4-2 lead.

The Eagles controlled the ball for the rest of the period for the 4-2 victory.

The win was the first in the TAAC this year and improved the Eagles record to 4-6-3. The Hatters fell to 2-6.

If the Eagles can win three of their next four games against TAAC opponents, they have a good chance of making the conference tournament and defending their conference title.
