GSU to use new tool against parking offenders

Repeat parking violators targeted in particular

By Dennis Smith

Staff Writer

GSU transportation officials will be cracking down on parking violators this year with a new immobilization device designed to force repeat parking offenders into paying outstanding tickets.

"What we're finding is that a lot of people will get a parking ticket for whatever reason, and they have not acquired the respect for law and penalties, so they either ignore it or they think that maybe we can't find them" said Bob Chambers, director of parking and transportation.

The new device, better known as an auto-boot, attaches to the wheel of an automobile and renders the vehicle immobile.

The auto-boot will only be used on those students' vehicles who have three or more outstanding tickets. Students will have to pay $15 plus the amount of outstanding tickets to get the boot unlocked.

"Very often [students] will be in a position where they can't afford to pay it [tickets] and then they can't register for next quarter" he said. "This immobilization device is designed to get the attention of those folks."

"They're going to have to come in and reconcile the problem. It keeps them from getting in over their heads" he said.

"I would rather boot people than tow them away because when you come out to get in your car and it's not there, it's a much bigger problem than if there is a boot on it" Chambers said.

The school will probably purchase two or three of these devices which cost about $375 each.

Chambers said that he hopes the new auto boots will be in use before the end of the quarter.

Other universities and municipal police departments around the country that have used the auto-boot have reported success with it.

Those students who are repeat offenders but pay their fines on time are also being targeted.

On the fifth ticket, whether fines have been paid or not, faculty, staff and students are eligible to be towed said Chambers.

He said some students will acquire as many as 20 or 30 parking tickets, sometimes totalling as much as $200.

Chambers said one of the biggest problems with parking is that students are parking in the visi-

GSU will soon introduce the "auto-boot" to its line of weapons to fight against habitual parking violators. School officials hope to begin using the boots by the end of the quarter. (Special photo)

Public college tuition rates increasing across the nation

By Anthony Flint

Boston Globe

Public colleges and universities across the nation raised tuition and fees an average of 12 percent to 13 percent this year, the steepest increases in almost a decade, according to an annual survey released Tuesday by the College Board.

The increases far outpaced those at private colleges and universities, which raised tuition and fees 6 percent to 7 percent this year, according to the survey by the education association, which is based in New York. The increases also dwarfed the increases at public colleges over the past seven years, which have averaged around 6 percent.

Public institutions increased charges to make up for budget cuts by state legislatures. In Massachusetts, the higher education budget was slashed by $109 million, or almost 24 percent. Tuition went up just 6 percent, but fees, which are set by the individual campuses, shot up as much as 135 percent.

"The pressure is really on us all," said James Appleberry, president of the American Association of State Colleges and Universities in Washington.

"State institutions have started the year with budgets smaller than the ones they started with last year, and at the same time, they've increased enrollments," Appleberry said.

The institutions were forced to increase revenues from students to survive, Appleberry said. Even so, many institutions took cost-cutting steps as well, he said, such as laying off employees, cutting construction and equipment expenditures and consolidating or eliminating academic programs.

Library lifts book buying freeze

By Dennis Smith

Staff Writer

Henderson Library officials lifted a book buying freeze and breathed a sigh of relief last Wednesday after university budget cuts weren't as bad as they had first feared.

Even with the new budget reductions in place, students using the library won't see any noticeable changes.

Last summer the library told the administration they would agree to freeze all acquisitions of new books until the state legislature had met and the new budget cuts were in place.

"We basically have not bought anything since mid-July, which is very unusual for us" said library director Julius Ariail. "For all intensive purposes we have been paying the bills that have come in but we have not ordered any new books."

The library receives an annual budget of $2.3 million. Over 60 percent of this goes to person-

Cuts reduced the acquisitions budget by $150,000.

Ariail said the library will start buying books again, but at a reduced rate.

Departmental budgets have been cut by 50 percent.

"If the department had a $10,000 budget, it will now have a $5,000 budget. That is not great but it is better than zero" he said.

Periodicals are the most critical in acquisitions.

Ariail said that the periodicals have already been renewed for January 1992 and if the library had to cancel these subscriptions, they couldn't be started up again until 1993.

He said the library would have lost a full year of periodicals "leaving a notch in the collection that would be devastating."

The library has lost one position in personnel but the position had already been vacant for a year.

Ariail emphasized that the easiest thing that could have been cut was the 24-hour operation, but because of its popularity among students it was left in place.

"This was a real wise decision that the administration made [for the library]. They really went out on a limb" he said.

Library officials expect students will not notice any negative changes in the operation of the library as a result of the budget cuts.

"What I'd really like to illustrate is that using the library this fall will be exactly the same as using it last fall" said Ariail.

Elizabethan-style dinner planned

GSU News Service

Celebrating the 400th anniversary of Shakespeare's writing of plays, the GSU Opera Theater will present "An Evening with Good Queen Bess, William Shakespeare and Friends."

A nine-course madrigal dinner will be served - complete with Elizabethan costumes and entertainment on Nov. 22 at 6:30 p.m. in the University Union Ballroom.

Based on an actual menu served by Sir Roger North to Queen Elizabeth I in 1578, the black tie optional dinner will feature entertainment by dancing, juggling, swordfighting and gymnastic Opera Theater performers.

Others clad in $40,000 worth of period costumes will perform excerpts from Shakespearean plays.

"This will probably be one of the most elaborate dinners ever served in Southeast Georgia," said Opera Theater Director Joseph Robbins. "Madrigal dinners have been popular in the last 20 or 30 years, but the cost of producing them has become nearly prohibitive. We have pulled out all the stops on this one. We want people to enjoy the Opera Theater while having a meal fit for a queen."

Music from the Elizabethan period will be provided by an ensemble directed by music director Susan Thomson and members of GSU music faculty and students.

The Shakespearean verse and other spoken parts of the entertainment were interwoven by Gina Allen, a music education and English literature major at Butler University in Indianapolis.

Preparation of the meal, cooked with all fresh herbs, is under the supervision of Robert Miller of GSU Catering Services. "We really had to research to come up with an authentic menu for this event," he said. "People ate quite differently in Elizabethan times. I think everyone will be pleased and surprised by the food and style of service."

"Having this beautiful facility to use for large groups has been a great improvement for Catering Services," said Miller. "We're just pleased that we can be involved in an event such as this."

Tickets are $18 per person and will be available starting Monday.

Henry receives national honor

G-A Staff

GSU President Nicholas L. Henry has been elected as a fellow of the National Academy of Public Administration, the largest and oldest organization of its type in the United States.

The new fellows will be formally introduced to the membership at the annual NAPA banquet in Washington, D.C. on Nov. 8.

Henry is one of 15 new fellows including former U.S. Secretary of Defense James Schlesinger, U.S. Ambassador to Argentina Terence Todman; Manuel Pacheco, president of the University of Arizona; William F. Raub, deputy director of the National Institutes of Health; and Stephen

E. Higgins, director of the Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco, and Firearms, U.S. Department of the Treasury.

Henry has authored or edited a dozen books on public administration, and is frequently sought as a consultant on public affairs issues. His book, "Public Administration and Public Affairs," is the only American textbook on public administration to be translated and published in Japanese.

Henry received his Ph.D. in political science from Indiana University and also holds degrees from Centre College and Penn State.

The Academy is a private, non-profit corporation chartered by Congress to improve the effectiveness of government at all levels: federal, state, and local. The Academy works toward that end using the unique individual and collective experience of its 400 elected fellows, as practitioners and students of government, to provide expert advice and counsel to government leaders.

NAPA fellows are elected by their peers, who include cabinet members, governors, members of congress, mayors, prominent business executives who have served in government, professional government managers and scholars who specialize in public affairs and administration.

Europeans amused with Thomas hearings

By Juan O. Tamayo
Knight-Ridder Newspapers

BERLIN — As Americans were spellbound by the controversy surrounding Judge Clarence Thomas, many European newspapers were snickering at their obsession with the private sex lives of public figures and pronouncing it all "a grand psycho-drama, la Americaine."

Newspapers in male-dominated Spain hinted that Anita Hill was a spurned lover suffering from "galloping jealousy." French journals blamed the scandal on the Americans' "exaggerated moralism and inquisitorial passion."

Italian journalists also questioned the veracity of the Oklahoma law professor whom they called "La Hill" and noted that "puritan Americans ... have been transformed into television voyeurs, entertained by barracks language."

Only British newspapers dealt seriously with central issue of Hill's sexual harassment allegation against Thomas. Indeed, neither the French nor Italians appear to have a specific term for the crime: Their newspapers described Hill's charge as "sexual molestation."

And only one Spanish commentator, Dario Valcarcel of the ABC news magazine, saw anything positive at all in the scandal, which held up Thomas' nomination to the Supreme Court and gripped Americans' attention for a week.

"American society, one of the most harsh, competitive and violent, continues to keep itself at the head of the world based on certain values: truth, honor and personal dignity," Valcarcel wrote in Tuesday's edition.

"From this side of the Atlantic it may be worthwhile meditating on the case," he added. While Spain sweeps its scandals under the rug as "small comedies ... from America we see this duel on a supreme issue, this tragedy."

Europeans long have been baffled by the U.S. public's fascination with the peccadilloes of public figures. Even Watergate, the scandal that brought down President Nixon, was seen on the Continent as nothing more serious than the type of misdeeds that their politicians engage in regularly.

But Europeans become particularly puzzled when the U.S. scandals involve sex.

In countries where the sex lives of politicians are considered to have no bearing on their job and therefore are rarely recorded by the press, the Gary Hart and Sen. Edward Kennedy scandals were seen as entertaining glimpses into the puritan U.S. views on sex.

The Thomas case in fact received little attention in the European press until Saturday, when journalists began focusing not much on the allegations of sexual harassment but on the American public's obsession with the scandal.

The leading Paris newspaper Le Monde called the affair "a grand psycho-drama, la Americaine" and blamed it on "exaggerated moralism and inquisitorial passions, sordid muckraking and outdated political thinking."

Spain's ABC correspondent in New York, Juan Vicente Boo, said the televised Senate Judiciary Committee hearings on the Hill allegations had provided "drama a thousand times better than Perry Mason and 'Dallas' combined."

Boo said that "the great majority" of Americans did not believe Hill's allegations and added that she might be suffering from "schizophrenia or galloping jeal-

Teens eager to help and assist during hard times

By Eileen Ogintz
Chicago Tribune

America's oft-maligned teen-agers are, in fact, tuned in to the nation's problems, eager to help solve them and ready to make sacrifices to assist their parents in surviving hard economic times.

These are some of the findings of a new study on the family to be released Tuesday by the American Board of Family Practice, representing the nation's second-largest medical specialty. The study was commissioned, board officials said, to determine the impact of social and psychological factors on the health of America's families.

According to the board, the survey of 1,050 adults and 400 teens is the first to look at how adults and adolescents are coping with economic and social pressures of the '90s.

"This turns the image of the selfish teen on its head," said John Pollock, a New Jersey social scientist whose firm prepared the study.

"They are as concerned as adults — or more concerned — about every issue. And they are very clearly willing to shoulder responsibility to help their families survive economic challenges."

The study, which put the same questions to adults and teens, found that the two groups view the same issues as paramount. Both worry about:

—The deterioration of the environment, with its health-threatening consequences (72 percent of adults; 78 percent of the teens).

—The poor education being offered children (62 percent of adults; 75 percent of teens).

—A family member's becoming a crime victim (61 percent of adults; 75 percent of teens).

—A family member's getting AIDS (58 percent of adults; 74 percent of teens).

—The national economy's worsening into a depression (58 percent of adults; 70 percent of teens).

The vast majority of those surveyed, 84 percent of the adults and 79 percent of the teens, believe that drinking and drunken driving are the most serious problems facing teens. Abuse at the hands of parents, teen suicide, the temptation to use drugs, the fear of pregnancy and the pressure to have sex at an early age are other top concerns of both groups.

The study concludes that the most pressing problems facing today's teens are "not those of finding satisfying activities or relationships with friends. ... Rather, teenagers and adults agree that the danger lies in the possibility of self abuse or the tolerance of abuse by others."

Dr. John Hayes, an Indianapolis psychiatrist who serves as a director of the Board of Family Practice, said the fact that teens and adults voice the same concerns suggests that Americans are communicating better across the generation gap.

"Parents need to know that a majority of teens say they would help if they knew the family was struggling," he said. "And if the teens do help, that's likely to increase their sense of belonging."

The study shows that the care-free time of childhood no longer extends through the teen years and that teen-agers' level of awareness of social and economic problems is more akin to that of young adults. Concern among teens about crime is so high in fact that, in some cases, they are taking more precautions than adults: 77 percent of teens and 66 percent of adults say they avoid unsafe areas, and 58 percent of teens and 43 percent of adults say they wear less expensive clothing, for example.

The findings of the survey, carried out by J.C. Pollock Associates of Princeton, N.J., are based on 30-minute phone interviews in May and June with adult and teen subjects throughout the country.

The study confirms that in the wake of the recession, significant majorities of Americans are buying fewer clothes, eating out less often, taking fewer vacations and even going to fewer movies. Within their families, 73 percent of adults and 58 percent of teens report talking more about how to spend less and save more.

Yet despite the difficulties of cutting back in their own lives, those questioned in the study say government and corporations should do more to help the unemployed and to stabilize the economy. Most, 83 percent of adults, believe the government is under-reporting unemployment figures.

More than 60 percent say they would be willing to pay more taxes to help retrain those who were out of work.

"People are not confident about the security of their lives, of whether they can continue to en-

What's the matter with men today?

By Randy Brown

Knight-Ridder Newspapers

WICHITA, Kan. — You've heard about the growing men's movement. Guys are heading into the wilderness, beating on drums, getting in touch with their feelings, sharing their pain. Beer sales may never be the same.

Actually there's a serious side to the male movement.

It's true that we men have been knowingly, willingly, systematically and happily oppressing women since the first male slug struggled out of the primeval slime, looking for the TV remote-control device.

So what do we have to show for spreading all this abuse? Bad stomachs and quick trips to the graveyard.

Men have the worst of both worlds. We are the oppressors who created this foolish, materialistic society, with all of its ridiculous expectations and demands, and we are victims of it, as well.

We feel guilty. Not only that, we have no claim to the feelings of righteousness and rectitude that go with real victimization.

Delicious, if pathetic, irony, rugged feminists might say.

Anyway, this running-the-world business isn't easy. Actually, it's depressing. Actually, it's a killer.

It's ugly, guys.

Let's go to the big, grim scoreboard with its big, ugly picture:

—Suicide. Men kill themselves at a rate four times higher than women.

—Alcoholism. More than two-thirds of all alcoholics are men.

—Drugs. About 50 percent more men than women are drug abusers. Men commit nine times more drug and alcohol violations than women.

—Education. About 60 percent of high school dropouts are men.

—Homelessness. More than 80 percent of America's homeless are men.

—Disease. Stress-related diseases, the real killers such as heart disease and some cancers, are far higher in men than women.

—Death. And, of course, the life expectancy for men is 10 percent less than women.

Brothers, we're a mess.

As the Utne Reader, that bastion of the alternative press, put it a few months ago, "Even men who think they've got it made spend most of their lives taking orders at work."

The magazine's point:

Society exploits virtually everybody. Our economic and political system may empower many more men than women, but it doesn't really empower very many of either. So most men are in confusion and anguish about their roles and their lives, just like most women.

And even men who have real power over their lives and destinies are dying for it.

No wonder guys are heading into the wilderness, beating on drums, getting in touch with their feelings, sharing their pain.

A couple of beers wouldn't hurt, either.

Andrew Kimbrell, writer, attorney and economist, suggests founding a national Man's Action Network.

Kimbrell thinks men of the current generation have a unique opportunity in history to escape their destructive new image: "autonomous, efficient, intensely self-interested and disconnected from the community and the Earth."

Over the past 150 years, he writes, "the demands of the Industrial Age have forced men off the land, out of the family and community and into the factory and office. The male as steward of family and soil, craftsman, woodsman, native hunter and fisherman has all but vanished."

Thus men have lost touch with the most important things in their lives, and their roles and virtues, as well.

We have fallen, Kimbrell says, into a terrible trap: the "cerebral, desiccated world of our competitive corporate culture."

He has a male manifesto to heal the wandering beast.

—On the personal agenda, men need to reconnect with their wives, children, neighbors and friends.

—On the social agenda, they need to become involved with their children's education, with their own communities and with the environment.

—On the political agenda, they need to work to eliminate racism. Minority men have it worst of all and they need to fight threats to male health: suicide, drug and alcohol abuse, AIDS and stress-related diseases.

And wild-man weekends in the woods, intense male bonding beyond the football scores, are great picker-uppers, paths to self-discovery and personal empowerment, says Kimbrell.

In short, men should stop competing for worthless prizes, and pull together.

OK, Kimbrell works out of Our Nation's Capital yes, inside the Beltway so what would he know about men living in harmony with themselves, one another and nature?

Maybe nothing. But men are obviously experts at meaningless work and self-destruction, and the manifesto's a dandy one.

Now, if we guys will just throw away our TV remote-control devices, we'll have time to accomplish some of these things.

Fly high with..

Sexual harassment is hard to define

By Karen Heller

Knight-Ridder Newspapers

In the last few months, it seems we've heard more accusations about the private lives of public figures than ever before. Now Anita Hill has pointed a long finger toward Clarence Thomas, accusing him of something for which there is no evidence, no record and no other witnesses.

Sexual harassment is an ugly, fuzzy mess. It's hard to prove, hard to prosecute and even harder to shake off once the charge is made — for both the accuser and the accused.

In a land where people live to litigate, the first known court case didn't surface until "six years ago;" it wasn't until 1986 that the Supreme Court ruled that sexual harassment was equal to sexual discrimination. This is "one of those issues that makes our stomach hurt," as Patricia Ireland, National Organization for Women vice president, succinctly put it.

Harassment, like obscenity, is difficult to define. But, just like Potter Stewart, many women will tell you "they know it when they see it."

The problem is, men often see something else entirely.

Look at Sen. Arlen Specter, R-Pa., who dismissed Hill's allegations due to, among other things, "the absence of any touching." Look at all those confused senators charging that the basic problem with Hill's accusation is its tardiness, neglecting to mention that it was the FBI who contacted Hill (rather than the other way around, as some senators led people to believe), neglecting to mention that the Senate Judiciary Committee basically neglected her comments in the FBI report.

From Oct. 1, 1989, until Sept. 30, 1990, the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission, which Thomas once supervised, received 5,694 sexual harassment complaints, up 52 percent from 1981. But studies show that as few as 6 percent of all incidents ever result in filed complaints. As we all know, whistle-blowers, of any ilk, do not tend to win popularity contests.

I asked around. I asked women if they had ever been sexually harassed on the job. Many of them said yes, but then paused and added, "Well, it depends how you define it."

Who does the defining? The woman who doesn't like her superior talking about dirty movies, or the man who says touching should be involved?

Something else has got me worried, besides the harassment charges and the men-will-be-men attitude of the Senate.

The Thomas confirmation process was almost 100 days old when the judge asked for a reprieve to clear his name. And during this endless investigation, Thomas' character — his triumph over poverty, his ascent into the inner sanctum of power — was discussed far more than his experience.

There's a line in Chekhov's "Uncle Vanya" where the beauteous Yelena turns to plain Sonya and says, "You have lovely hair," to which Sonya responds, "They always say you have lovely hair when they can't think of anything else to say."

And they tend to talk about character when they can't refer to solid judicial experience, important decisions or landmark cases. You didn't hear senators going on about character when Scalia, O'Connor or Rehnquist were submitted for their approval.

In a land of 724,000 lawyers, almost 700 federal judges and more state and municipal judges than you can buy, George Bush has nominated a man with a total of 17 months on the bench and a rocky history at the EEOC. Last year's Supreme Court nominee, David Souter — although a Rhodes Scholar and a judge since 1978 — hails from New Hampshire (where cases don't tend to get national scrutiny) and is so private about so much that who knew what he thought about recycling, let alone capital punishment and "Roe v. Wade?"

Guess the prevailing White House wisdom is that it's better to nominate someone who has been on the bench for three minutes or has been hiding his opinions in New England than suggesting a jurist with a long, established record that — egad! — might reveal the person's views on abortion and other issues.

I would settle for a little less emphasis on character for a national reputation for judicial and legal excellence. They started all this business talking about Thomas' character and, apparently, that's the way it's going to end.

But at least one good thing has come out of this mess.

People have more contempt for United States senators than ever before.

Students should vote on senate replacements

Last week, three senator-at-large positions were filled by the vote of the Student Government Association senate.

According to the SGA constitution, "...applications will be taken one week following the vacancy of the position ... appointments will be made by majority vote of the senators present."

Suddenly, an elected position becomes decided by SGA alone. And a major constitutional weakness is shown.

No publicity is required. No student vote. No campus participation is required.

In addition, it would seem that the senate position vacated by Jonathan Brown, who was elected vice president of auxiliary affairs during the same week, had no week-long period of taking applications. SGA just used the applications received at the beginning of the quarter to fill the position.

According to reports, the position was filled the same night Brown resigned to take the higher position.

All this in a week that students - in record numbers - voted to fill a single executive position. It would not have been any more trouble to hold an election for the senatorial positions at the same time.

On Nov. 1, the period of time begins when amendments may be made to the SGA constitution. Perhaps the SGA should review the rules - change the rules to a fair and reasonable method of replacing senators - then follow them.

An open letter

To the students who vandalized the Williams Center last weekend,

You can't imagine what an impression you made on your fellow students Sunday when both the men's room and the hall were found trashed. Quite frankly, your reasoning and dubious sobriety were questioned.

What were you thinking about when you tore apart the towel dispenser, and stole the mirror? Were you attempting to show your engineering skills when you disassembled a toilet tissue holder and left half of it in the toilet?

Or perhaps you were attempting to prove your superior intelligence when you urinated on the floor.

Were you comfortable sitting in the makeshift seats you made out of two High Hope recycling boxes? We are still not sure of the significance of the shredded toilet paper in the hall and the beer cans in the toilet.

And we wonder why the citizens of Statesboro look upon college students as irresponsible, childish alcoholics.

Other voices...

May we have a little sanity, please?

Apparently not. The Aldine School District has joined a growing list of Houston-area schools banning Halloween costumes because they supposedly promote satanic worship.

This danger will be news to the millions of Americans who have grown up having kiddy fun with Halloween, spooking and being spooked, without ever taking up satanism. The incidence of human sacrifice among American adults is remarkable low.

But the Houston-area district have decided that kids dressing up like witches and devils and other things that go bump in the night are, in the words of a district spokesman, "indicative of satanic circles."

The hysteria seems indicative of certain other circles, too. Like the little ones folks make with their index finger up by the side of their head.

Thomas should not have been confirmed

The universe seems bankrupt as soon as we begin to discuss the characters of individuals.
-Henry David Thoreau

It seems incredible to me that in this nation of 250 million people our president couldn't find a Supreme Court nominee who: 1) is qualified and experienced from the legal standpoint, and 2) has a character greater than the average Ogeechee Fair roadie.

The things Clarence Thomas allegedly said to Anita Hill made even Ted Kennedy blush. Among other things, he is supposed to have bragged to her about the size of his...uh...willy.

He also allegedly described pornographic movies to her, including some involving animals. Although it's encouraging to hear that he - like myself - has an affection for critters, that sounds a little extreme.

Some people I've talked to think Hill just plain lied.

What did she have to gain by lying about this? Nothing.

What did she have to lose by coming forward? Her privacy, her

Points to ponder...

Jason Lewis

career, her connections in the legal world, and most tragically, her dignity.

It's unfortunate that most people formed their opinion of Hill without knowledge of the facts. Many believe she must have been lying because she waited so late to come forward.

How it actually happened was that the FBI approached her in September to investigate incidents occurring several years ago.

The Senate Judicial Committee had access to this FBI report, but agreed to keep it confidential because Hill did not want to go public with the allegations.

However, the information was leaked to the news media (probably by one of the liberal senators' staff). Then the press questioned her about the case and she cooperated, because she - like myself - believes this is not the type of man that should be on the Supreme Court.

A couple of people told me that some special interest group payed Hill to accuse Thomas of sexual harassment. If this is true, the National Organization for Women or the NAACP must have some psychics on their staffs.

Witnesses have testified that Hill told them of the harassment as early as 1983.

Strangely, most females seem to be among the most strongly opposed to Hill. But I think this is good news because it indicates they probably haven't been victims of harassment.

One senator said Hill should have had the burden of proof, and the benefit of the doubt should have been given to Thomas. Had this been a criminal trial, I would agree.

However, when it comes to determining the make-up of the Supreme Court, the benefit of the doubt should have rested with the American people.

Anyway, back to my original point. Why could Bush not come up with someone possessing at least the minimal qualifications I listed earlier?

Thomas was never seriously touted as the most qualified for the job of Supreme Court justice. Bush made a shrewd political move by nominating a black conservative.

Throughout the nomination hearings Thomas refused to give any concrete statements about his opinions. Instead, his platform was built on his character as a minority who came from a disadvantaged background.

He lived by his character, and, in light of the allegations, he should have died by his character.

Sexual harassment can be caused by anyone

The news is full of it, the magazines are full of it, there's hardly anything else on TV, and folks in the workplace are getting kind of nervous about it.

That's right, I'm talking about sexual harassment. Since all the flap started about Judge Thomas allegedly subjecting a co-worker to sexual harassment, a lot of folks have been wondering about what is and is not OK.

First of all, who can be harassed, and who can do the harassing? The answer to both questions is just about anybody. While most incidents of sexual harassment are cases of men making heterosexual advances toward women, it could involve either gender with either gender. The only thing necessary is that one person be in a position to sexually coerce or offend another.

Let's say that a man asks his secretary out on a date. Is he guilty of sexual harassment? Yes and No. See how quickly I cleared that up? But seriously folks, this is how it works.

If he asks her out, does it in a genteel manner, and makes it clear that she has a choice in the matter, it is not sexual harassment. If he is rather rude and

Let me see if I got this straight

crude in his proposition, and he hints - or flatly states - that her career is on the line, then it is harassment.

Going one step further, if she says no, and he continues to annoy her with requests for dates, starts making her life on the job difficult, etc., then it is harassment.

Let's consider the case that she says yes, they start dating, and develop a relationship. When they are at work together, he puts his arm around her, calls her "sweetie", and pats her on the fanny when he walks past her. Is this sexual harassment? Yes and No. Right back where we started.

It is now a few months later, and the lady tells him one evening that in light of their very special relationship she expects a promotion and a pay raise. Now she is sexually harassing him.

So the most commonly recognized form of sexual harassment is the use of rank or position in the company to gain the sexual favors of another, or the use of sexual favors to gain rank or position in the company.

But that's not the only form it can take, and here's where a lot of guys start getting nervous. The other form of sexual harassment most often encountered in the workplace is generally termed offensive language.

A group of guys tell an off-color joke in the presence of a female co-worker. Are they guilty of sexual harassment? Yes and No. You knew I was going to say that, right?

If the lady doesn't mind the joke, the language, etc., then it is not harassment. But if she is offended, and says so, and they continue, it is harassment.

A guy can be a victim of sexual harassment under exactly the same circumstances.

This rule also extends to offensive slogans, pictures, desk decorations, coffee mugs, etc. If someone acts offended or states that they are offended, you'd better get rid of the offending item. If you don't, you are sexually harassing that person.

Both parties in an incident of sexual harassment have a certain responsibility.

The person feeling harassed has a responsibility to let these feelings be known in a clearly stated manner, informally at first, and in the form of a formal complaint if it continues.

The person doing the harassing has the responsibility of discontinuing the offensive acts if a complaint is made known.

If you suspect that you may be committing an act that could be seen as sexual harassment, here are some simple guidelines to examine:

1. Has anyone complained about it?
2. If your acts were witnessed by a third party, would they be likely to be impressed by your professionalism?
3. Would you want your wife, sister, or daughter subjected to the same treatment?

People in the news

Salman Rushdie's latest short story has Christopher Columbus discovering and exploring a whole new world: Queen Isabella's bedroom, to be specific.

"On his saint's day (Isabella) summons him into her inmost boudoir, dismisses her girls, permits him to braid her hair and, for a moment, to fondle her breasts. ... Toying with Columbus pleases the Queen," reads an excerpt from Rushdie's tale, which Newsweek reports will appear in the November issue of Esquire magazine.

And just what was it Columbus was really looking for? In a word, "consummation," he breathlessly tells the queen of Spain.

To the explorer, Isabella's "face is a lush peninsula set in a sea of hair. Her treasure chests are inexhaustible," writes the "Satanic Verses" author. Meaning that the world isn't flat?

Martin Sheen talked up another arrest in his activist career. The actor and 32 other environmental protesters scaled a fence Sunday around a hazardous-waste incinerator under construction in East Liverpool, Ohio, and ended up in police custody. "I don't look forward to this kind of activity, but you do what has to be done," said Sheen, who was released after posting $250 bail on the criminal trespassing charge. Greenpeace was one of the organizers of the protest.

"Married ... With Children" star Katey Sagal suffered a miscarriage and was hospitalized Monday in Los Angeles. Sagal, who was seven months along, was listed in satisfactory condition and will remain at Cedars-Sinai Medical Center for several days, said a studio spokesman.

"Jack White, Miss Sagal's partner and father of the child, was with her throughout the night," said a spokesman for the actress, who plays the housewife of the Bundy brood.

Sagal's pregnancy had been written into the rude and crude sitcom as well, but it remains to be seen how the show will deal with the miscarriage. "There's been no discussion, let alone any decision, in connection with the storyline in the series," said Don DeMesquita of Columbia Pictures Television.

Veteran newsman Roger Mudd will undergo reconstructive knee surgery at Johns Hopkins University Hospital, an operation expected to keep him off the "MacNeil-Lehrer NewsHour" for about a month, the Washington Post reports. The 63-year-old journalist, who had similar surgery last year on his other knee, says the goal is to "keep me on the tennis courts for another 10 years."

Ronald and Nancy Reagan, who arrived in Morocco on Saturday for a five-day visit, had a Sunday dinner date with King Hassan II in Rabat, the capital. The Reagans' itinerary includes stops in Marrakesh and Fez. The former first couple leaves Wednesday for London.

The following is a letter to the editor and the editor's reply from the October 10, 1949 edition of the George-Anne. Reading this should help freshmen appreciate the fair treatment they receive today.

Dear Editor:

I am a freshman staying in Sanford Hall who wishes to protest against the cruel and unfair treatment we are getting. To begin with, this business of having to wear rat caps is awful. I can't get a date because this old rat cap makes me look so silly and all these upperclassmen are getting priority.

And I got rather angry last week when we had to go to that football game and chase after that pig. It was unfair because I don't like anything but softball and golf, not football, and also:

Chasing a pig is beneath my dignity. You said in last week's George-Anne that rat caps should be "worn with dignity"-who can be dignified running his pants off after an old greasy hog? Most of us couldn't catch him anyway, and just got dirty and sweaty.

Well, I better quit before I really get steamed up. It all makes me mad. This is the one agency thru which I can speak my mind.

A FRESHMAN

Reply:

Be a sport! Most schools have far worse initiations. This is the first form of initiation that has been imposed on the Freshmen class since before the war. You are one of a class that is helping rebuild a tradition here at T.C. [Teacher's College]. (You will appreciate being an upperclassman more next year.) Also if wearing your rat cap and running your pants off after greasy pigs help build up school spirit, it's worth it at least it gives you something to talk about.

Always look at the bright side of college life and you'll find that rat caps and greasy pigs can be fun. Later on, you'll look back on your freshman year and you'll be glad you were treated "cruelly." Can't you just see yourself making next year's Freshmen "step around." Scores of us upperclassmen regret that we didn't have some type of initiation; it would have given us more school spirit and a feeling of "belonging."

I don't know the situation concerning the lack of dates, but the fact that there are more men on the campus than women might have something to do with it. ...surely you can't blame that on your rat cap.

Think your problems over and look at them in an optimistic way; I'm sure you'll change your mind. I repeat "... Wear your rat cap with dignity, and be proud you are a Freshman."

Of men and movements: a dangerous combination

By Dave Barry
Knight-Ridder Newspapers

I got to thinking about the Men's Movement recently when our bathroom ceiling collapsed.

Maybe you've heard about the Men's Movement. It consists of men who feel they've lost touch with their fundamental masculinity because of the restrictive pressures of the modern world, with its industrialization, neckties, fireworks regulations, etc. So these men are forming groups that only men can belong to, similar to the U.S. Senate, except that they engage in virile ritualistic male-bonding behavior such as shouting and roaring and hugging and pounding on drums. I'm not making this movement up. It was on the cover of Newsweek, so you know it's not just a passing fad. It's a fad that will probably be around for MONTHS.

The movement first caught on in (surprise!) California, but has spread widely. I have here a newspaper article, clipped from The Indianapolis Star by alert readers Judy Voynow and Glenn Woodruff, concerning a gathering of a group called the Indiana Men's Council. The article, written by Joseph T. Hallinan, states that, before the group members started drumming, they formed a circle, and each man introduced himself by giving his name and the names of his father and paternal grandfather, as in: "I am Bob, the son of Fred, the son of Norbert." After each man spoke, the other men shouted

For alert readers only...

Dave Barry

"HO!"

Here's my favorite section of the article:

"Sunday's gathering was the first time that women had been allowed to attend a meeting of the Men's Council. The women stood in the circle, with their men, and when it came their turn they, too, were asked to cite their male lineage.

"After the first woman did so, the men around her shouted, 'HO!'"

"She looked taken aback by the response, and then one of the men explained they were not calling her a 'ho,' that it was just something they said."

Maybe the men should yell something less ambiguous, such as "ROGER!" or "NICE SET OF PATERNAL NAMES!" But I think the Men's Movement is a fine idea. I'm definitely out of touch with my own masculinity, a fact that was driven home when our bathroom ceiling collapsed. This of course happened at 1 o'clock on a Sunday morning, which is when, as you homeowners know, the House Destruction Satellite, orbiting high above the Earth, beams down its powerful Decay Ray. We heard a loud crash, and we went into the bathroom, and the ceiling was lying on the floor in a sodden mass, with water pouring down on it from somewhere in the attic.

"Ho!" I said, drawing on three years of junior-high-school Industrial Arts training. "Something is wrong!"

A virile man would have known how to fix it. But I am totally out of touch with my masculine nature, so all I could do was call a plumber. He went into the attic and, following his natural masculine instinct, knew immediately what to do: call for more plumbers. Soon there was a whole tribal gathering up there, virile men who were not afraid to crawl around the attic and confront naked plumbing and shout and roar and pound on things. They might also have been hugging. I stayed downstairs, making coffee and keeping the checkbook warm.

The problem turned out to be the hot-water heater, which the previous owner, apparently as a prank, had located over the ceiling, so that it could do the maximum possible amount of damage when it leaked. The plumbers wanted to put the new heater in a downstairs closet.

Here's what a virile man would have said: "OK."

Here's what I said: "I'll ask my wife."

My wife said no. My wife is completely in touch with her basic femininity, and she is not about to give up something precious, something that women have struggled for centuries to obtain, something that they value more than life itself: storage space. You want to know why, 20,000 years ago, nomadic Asian peoples made the brutal, dangerous trek across vast expanses of barren wasteland to come to North America? Because nomadic women heard that there were caves here with plenty of room for kitchen implements. Archaeologists are still finding ancient stored pots.

So anyway, the plumbing tribe, roaring and pounding, put the new water heater up in our attic, right next to the old one. Soon the two heaters will start bonding, with the old one passing along ancient water-heater lore and wisdom ("Sunday at 1 a.m., that's the time"). And one night we'll hear two distinct metallic voices shouting "HO!" and the bathroom ceiling will collapse

The legend of Eagle Creek

By Carolyn McWilliams

Staff writer

Recently, a friend and I were discussing the Eagle Football team and how their wins and losses fluctuate each season.

"I believe a lot of it has to do with superstition," says Mike Lightsey, senior. "And the last time I looked, Eagle Creek was dry."

While the Eagle Football team's record is almost spotless, and the winnings are based on hardwork and determination, some people believe that the magical creek waters have to do with the spirit of the team.

Other sports teams have legends similar to Eagle Creek. "One that was told to me when I was younger is based on the Auburn tiger football team," says Chuck Herbert, sophomore. "At an earlier game, the tigers were losing when an eagle started circling the stadium. The crowd began screaming 'War Eagles' and the team won the game. Supposedly, that's how they acquired the name used today."

"At the University of Georgia after our victories we ring a bell which is heard all over Athens," says Mickey Daniels, a junior at UGA.

"Sometimes we ring it until midnight. It becomes an inspiration to our team and to our fans because they are proud to hear that bell ring."

Eagle Creek has become a tradition at GSU dating back to the first football team in 1981. In the book, Just One More Time by Jim Halley and Mark McClellan, a brief history of the Eagle Creek legend is given.

On an away trip to northern Iowa, it says, "Erk Russell had been concerned about how his players would feel so far away from home. A little psychology was in order."

Russell had spoken often and passionately of a little drainage ditch beside the team's practice fields."

Before the game, Russell took a jug of the Eagle Creek water and poured it on certain parts of the field. "The Eagles were probably hoping for a little magic." Needless to say, they won the game.

In a 1986 game against Nevada-Reno, Erk Russell brought a jug of "Beautiful Eagle Creek Water. It was his jug of magic and the players would occasionally gaze at it as if it were a golden idol or a national championship trophy."

Before the game he "walked

Strong Points

By Michael Strong

Sports Editor

It's getting close to that time of year, actually it has already begun.

The Division I-AA playoffs loom on the horizon, at least for myself and my staff.

Once again we will put out a special playoff edition featuring the teams that are in the semifinals of the playoffs.

Excuse the shameless self-promotion, but you gotta do it when you can.

With every championship game comes the poster that promotes it and for the last couple of years, the controversy that surrounds it.

Two years ago, the poster showed two shadowy football players lined up across from one another in front of what was supposed to be an old Southern mansion.

Well, the house turned out to be in Indiana or someplace above the Mason-Dixon line and many took offense to "racist overtones" in the picture. Whether or not they were intentional or perceived is not an argument I care to engage in right now, but the NCAA does have a track record of promotional posters that stir up controversy.

Well, this year isn't going to be much different in regards to the poster.

It's not racist or insensitive - it's stupid! I don't know what the people in Alfred White's office (it's his office that is in charge of the poster) are thinking, but it sure as hell isn't about the best way to promote the championship game.

This year's poster has a blurry picture of someone in a marching band and the title is "Georgia on my Mind." The concept is good, the results are awful.

The band member is from the University of Georgia! What can they be thinking? The University of Georgia's band used to promote a football game held in Statesboro for the Division I-AA Championship!?!?

It would seem that in an attempt to avoid something controversial, as the last two posters have been viewed, White has managed to do it again.

Golf clap everyone. Someone on campus had a great idea for "Georgia on my Mind": peaches on trees with a lush green orchard in the background.

I'd like to know where the NCAA is getting their ideas for these posters from because it sure as hell is not anyone (I hope) from this institution or part of the state.

If they want to continue to make money on this game, which hasn't been the case until they held it here in the 'Boro, they need to include this university in planning the promotional poster.

Will we ever get out of the shadow of the University of Georgia? Welcome to the fastest growing, most underfunded and now the most overshadowed university in Georgia, if not the region or country!

Things just have a way of working themselves out and White has continued the tradition of insensitive, moronic and idiotic posters.

Golf clap everyone.

Volleyball team fights past Armstrong State

By Michael Strong

Sports Editor

The Lady Eagles volleyball team almost walked the plank against the Armstrong State Lady Pirates in Hanner Tuesday, but prevailed in five games 15-12, 6-15, 15-9, 14-16, 15-6.

"We went five [games] against them last time," said Coach J.B. Claiborne. "But, we shouldn't have had this much trouble this time."

The Lady Pirates were out to prove that the last time was no fluke.

After fighting the GSU to the end in the first game, only to lose 15-12, they came back in the second game, led by Kareena Kaminski, to swamp GSU 15-6.

But, the Lady Eagles righted themselves and took the third game fairly comfortably at 15-9.

The fourth game was a battle.

The Lady Eagles go up for a block against Armstrong State. They defeated ASC in five games. (Photo by Robby Weatherly)

The Lady Eagles took an early 9-5 lead, but ASC crept back into the game behind Kaminski's hitting.

She had four kills and two blocks during the game.

"We just couldn't stop her," said Claiborne. "She's a good all around player. We're just lucky they didn't have two or three of her."

The Lady Pirates slowly

crawled back into the game finally knotting the score at 13-13.

The teams traded kills for 14-14, then Kaminski hit a big spike and GSU's Dee Cardell mishit a set and the Lady Pirates pushed GSU to a fifth game again.

Apparently, the ASC left something in the fourth game as GSU's Nicci Borisek ran the score to 8-0 to begin the fifth.

Julie Ciezowski hit a quick set for a kill down the middle of the court for the easy point and a 3-0 lead. Alexis Dankulic hit a couple of spikes hard enough to dismember an ASC player to help during the 8-0 run.

However, the Lady Pirates went on a run of their own when they got the ball back.

They tried to make a game of it by taking the next five points, cutting the lead to 8-5.

GSU got it together after that and cruised to the 15-6 win and the match victory.

Claiborne was a bit puzzled about his team's performance.

"They were flat, but I don't know if it was because they were tired from the weekend or if it was because it wasn't USC-Aiken or Spartanburg," he said.

Cardell finished the evening with three kills and 33 assists.

Jennifer Petelle had nine kills, three aces and was all over the court.

Hitters Dankulic and Borisek 13 and 15 kills respectively. They also had eight and tens digs.

The win gave the Lady Eagles a 16-10 record and ASC dropped to 9-9.

The 16 wins already surpasses the previous high of 13 wins from last season.

They have a week off until their next match against Paine College in Augusta.

Football team to face James Madison away

By Eric Weisenmiller

Assistant Sports Editor

This Saturday GSU travels north to Harrisonburg, Virginia to face James Madison University in their final regular season road game.

The Dukes (5-1) are currently riding on a five game winning streak which includes two impressive wins on the road over Appalachian State and William & Mary.

The Eagles evened up their record at 3-3 last week as they walked all over Western Carolina.

The 44-6 victory came at a very opportune point in the season. The win gives the Eagles an added measure of confidence and alleviates some of the pressure resulting from this season's slow start.

Last week, the Eagles began to show signs of improvement in their offense racking up over 400 yards in total offense.

Quarterback Charles Bostick had an impressive performance gaining 104 yards rushing and completing seven of nine passes for 135 yards.

"This was the first time all season we've really put four quarters together on offense, on defense and on the kicking game. Our offense is really beginning to gel," said Coach Tim Stowers.

This week's game will match the strengths of both teams. The stingy GSU defense will have to contend with James Madison's offense which is has the ability to put a lot of points on the board.

James Madison runs an option-based offense out of the

I-formation which is similar to GSU's offense.

First-year coach "Rip" Scherer implemented this offense - the third new offensive scheme in as many years - and has used it with great effectiveness this year. The Dukes have out-scored their opponents 89-39 in their last two games.

JMU quarterback Eriq Williams has developed as an effective leader of their offense this season. Williams, in combination with 6'5" wide-receiver Dwayne Hayes, provides the Dukes with a balanced offensive attack.

GSU will have to continue its strong defensive play and guard against the big play this week.

The offense must also eliminate turnovers. JMU has only turned the ball over six times this season as opposed to GSU's fifteen. This factor may prove to be the difference in the game.

The Eagles will also have to overcome a number of injuries on the offensive side of the ball. Albert Huntley, Shafton Fraley and Danny Smith will not play this week. Shane Maxwell is "questionable" with a neck injury.

"This will be a big tone-setting game for us," said Coach Stowers.

After this game, the Eagles come back to Statesboro for the remaining four games of the season. This game may be crucial to the secure any hopes of reaching the playoffs.

Kickoff is scheduled for 1:30 p.m. (EDT) Saturday at Bridgeforth Stadium in Harrisonburg, Virginia.

Pollock said: "Teens are our major resource for revitalizing the American family. Still, we need to make it clear that we're not throwing all of the responsibility of the world on their shoulders."

Young noted that the two generations seemed to be talking more to each other and trying harder to make families work.

"People believe poor communication is the major problem that can happen in a family," he said. "The hopeful thing is that American families feel if they talk to each other, they have a chance."

New York correspondent Arturo Zampaglioni called the scandal "a national drama," a "collective catharsis" and "a soap opera" in which prudish Americans were titillated by the "barracks language of sexual molestation."

Zampaglioni concluded by reporting that video shops on New York's 42nd Street pornography strip were experiencing a run on X-rated movies by a character whom Hill said that Thomas repeatedly had compared himself to: Long Dong Silver.

Tuition

As states hurt by the recession continue to cut higher education budgets, the trend toward higher tuition at public colleges and universities is expected to continue — shifting the cost from taxpayers to students.

For in-state students, tuition and fees at four-year public colleges and universities average $2,137 and rose 12 percent this year, according to The College Board survey. At public two-year institutions, such as community colleges, tuition and fees average $1,022 and rose 13 percent.

Those increases are the highest since 1982-83. The rate of increase for tuition and fees at public institutions never hit double-digits from 1984 until this year.

The story was different for private colleges and universities, which over the 1980s increased tuition and fees at a steep rate. Private institutions, some of which now charge more than $23,000 for tuition, fees, room and board, have toned down increases, responding to consumer anger about price tags.

At four-year private colleges and universities, average tuition and fees are $10,017 this year, an increase of 7 percent over last year. At private two-year colleges, tuition and fees average $5,290, an increase of 6 percent.

"My understanding is that some institutions will hold it to 5 percent next year," said Clare Cotton, president of the Association of Independent Colleges and Universities of Massachusetts. Cotton predicted that more institutions will reduce expenses rather than raise prices.

"The competition is extremely strong for good students," Cotton said, noting the dwindling number of 18-year-olds in the United States. "And many colleges have done about as much as they can with their financial aid budgets."

Anticipating the trend, many private colleges and universities had already started cutting back on expenses.

The College Board, which conducts a college-cost survey every year, based its results on responses from 2,742 institutions nationwide. For statistical consistency year-to-year, the figures are weighted to reflect different enrollments.
