Georgia Lottery bills bring controversy to senate

ATLANTA (AP) — A bid to place Georgia's proposed lottery up for voter renewal every four years failed in the state Senate, after a debate that dredged up senatorial involvement in some high-profile controversies.

Lawmakers defeated the idea of having the lottery expire every four years during the 1991 session, when the Legislature agreed to a proposed constitutional amendment to create a statewide lottery. Voters will decide this November whether the lottery amendment will take effect.

But Sen. Mac Collins, R-Jackson, revived the effort to put a sunset clause onto the lottery Friday.

He rattled off a list of senators involved in recent controversies and argued that Georgians don't believe the Legislature will spend lottery proceeds on education as promised.

"Is there no wonder that the people of this state question what we do up here?" Collins asked. "You can look at this bill as a check-and-balance clause."

But Sen. Harrill Dawkins, D-Conyers, the governor's floor leader, moved to send the bill back to the Finance and Public Utilities Committee.

"This bill deals with exactly the same issue we debated ad nauseum last year, that this body overwhelmingly defeated not once, but twice," he said.

The Senate approved Dawkins' idea 39-10. The vote fell along party lines, with Republicans voting against it.

The Legislature recessed later Friday for two weeks of budget hearings. The session will reconvene Feb. 3.

Dixie Dregs reuniting, plan new live album, tour

NASHVILLE, Tenn. (AP) — The Dixie Dregs, a 1970s and 1980s rock 'n' roll band that received four Grammy nominations, is reuniting to do a live album and concert tour in February.

The band disbanded in 1982 after releasing albums such as "Night of the Living Dregs," "Free Fall" and "What If."

Capricorn Records said their new album will be released in June. It will be recorded during concerts in Atlanta Feb. 14 and 15.

Reuniting will be founding band members Steve Morse on guitar, Rod Morgenstein on drums and Allen Sloan on violin, plus former Dregs' keyboardist T. Lavitz and bassist Dave LaRue, who now plays in the Steve Morse Band.

The Dregs, who were based in Augusta, Ga., mixed rock 'n' roll, country, classical and bluegrass.

Edgar Allan Poe remembered with roses, cognac

BALTIMORE (AP) — A mysterious man dressed in black left a half bottle of cognac and three roses on Edgar Allan Poe's grave early Sunday, a tribute that has marked the writer's birthday for the past 43 years.

The visitor appeared at Poe's grave at 3:45 a.m. Sunday, said Jeff Jerome, curator of the Edgar Allan Poe House and Museum in Baltimore.

"The three roses are for the three people buried underneath the Poe monument: Poe; his wife, Virginia, and his aunt Marie Poe Clemm, who was the mother of Virginia."

"The cognac is a mystery," Jerome continued. "We've looked through all of Poe's stories. We've done our best to read his biographies to find out if he was fond of cognac, and we can't find any connection," he said.

The gifts were first left on Poe's birthday in 1949, which was the 100th anniversary of Poe's death. Poe was born 183 years ago Sunday.

Health Center to decide on new policy

Sate investigators: Prescription repackaging procedure in violation of state laws

By Misty McPherson
News Editor

GSU is in the process of making a decision on distribution of prescriptions after an investigation by drug inspectors showed the Health Center was not in compliance with state law.

The Health Center has been following the same process for at least the last 12 years, according to John Nolen, vice-president of student affairs. "We've been telling them what we've been doing and how we've been doing it for all these years."

Up until fall quarter, the time of the investigation, the school had been contracting through College Pharmacy to have them come into the center and repackage the drugs according to the amount the physicians normally prescribe.

"That's against state law, you cannot repackage," said Nolen. The prescription must be filled after it has been written.

To comply with state law, the doctors at the health center are now packaging prescriptions after they prescribe them to students.

"It is slowing down the traffic flow," said Dr. Joseph Vinci, director of health services. "It has really put a burden on us, but we're doing the best we can."

Nolen asked for a recommendation from Student Government on how to best solve the situation and they submitted two suggestions.

The first recommendation was to hire a pharmacist for the school. Nolen said if need be and if the prescriptions were of such a large quantity, then they would hire a full time pharmacist. A part time pharmacist is also being considered Nolen said. If the school opts for the part time pharmacist, he would more

The other suggestion was to contract with a pharmacy off campus, but both Nolen and the SGA felt that this would not benefit the students as well as hiring a pharmacist. The problem with this is students would have to go to the pharmacy to pick up prescriptions and this creates an inconvenience for those students who do not have transportation.

According to Nolen, to hire a pharmacist, it would cost the students $30-$35,000 a year, plus fringe benefits to give a total cost of $40-$50,000 a year. The price does not include any work that may have to be done to the pharmacy at the Health Center.

According to Chris Clark, president of SGA, this money would come out of student activity fee. Clark said there is enough money left over in the budget, but in the future, the fee may have to go up by a $1.

"It may take us a while to employ a full time pharmacist, so we may have to come up with an interim solution," Nolen said. They may stay with the process they have now, with the doctors packaging the drugs.

Vinci doesn't fully support either solution, he feels the school should contract with a pharmacy service. Then, if a pharmacist was sick, it would be the service's responsibility to replace him, not the health centers.

As long as a pharmacist is on campus, Clark feels SGA will more than likely go along with it.

"My hope is that we get this thing resolved as soon as possible," Vinci said. "It is no picnic for us and no picnic for the students."

Because of these problems, the Health Center is unable to fill prescriptions from other doctors. "I see no reasons why we'll not go back to that," said Nolen, referring to when the problem with a pharmacist is solved.

Students arrested on drug charges

Brett Austin Jones, 21, of Bermuda run Apartment C-2 and Jan Allison Dougherty, 23, of 185 Park Place were arrested Monday at Blind Willie's nightclub and charged with various drug-related offenses.

According to the Bulloch county Sheriff's Department, Jones was charged with possession of cocaine (powder), possession of marijuana with intent to distribute, sale of marijuana and possession/distribution of marijuana near a public school.

Dougherty was charged with possession of marijuana and possession of cocaine.

At approximately 10 p.m. Monday, search warrants were executed for Jones' apartment and automobile.

Jones was approached at Blind Willie's on Old Register Road. He was reportedly found to be in possession of marijuana and cocaine.

Dougherty was also arrested at this location, according to the report.

Additional drug paraphernalia were reportedly found at Jones' apartment.

The sheriff's office was assisted in the brief investigation by the Georgia Bureau of Investigation RDEO in Savannah.

Jones and Dougherty have been released on bond.

Bulloch County to build new jail

By Stacy Graham

Staff Writer

The front yard of the Bulloch County Correctional Institute on Highway 301 North is the site for the new county jail.

The jail will cost approximately 2-3 million dollars and will house 100 beds with room for expansion for another 100 beds, said Gordon Alston, county commissioner.

The county advertised for jail builders and received over 20 responses, Alston said. The bids were analyzed and narrowed down to six.

Each of the six submitted a proposed design, and the Board of Commissioners are currently evaluating the designs.

The county has hired a consultant architect, and on Feb. 18 he will present his recommendation to the Board of Commissioners, Alston said. The Board then has 30 days to decide which plan best suits Bulloch county. "The commissioners reserve the right to refuse any and all bids," Alston said.

Currently there are two jails — the city and the county. According to Alston, the city has plans to discontinue operating their jail due to the cost and requirements for staffing.

The new jail will have an indoor and outdoor recreation center, dayrooms, and single and multi-bed cells. The jail will be built like a circle, with the control point in the center to provides for minimum staffing.

Currently the county rents beds from other county jails. "We're paying between 35-40 dollars a day," Alston said. The county will continue renting until the new jail is completed.

GSU to host model United Nations

GSU News Service

The 21st annual High School Model United Nations will bring more than 400 area high school students to the GSU campus Feb. 20-22.

Teams of students, each representing a different member of the UN, will debate resolutions in simulations of the Security Council, General Assembly, Organization of African Unity, and the Organization of American States.

Students will participate in bloc caucuses and attend workshops on world issues presented by GSU faculty.

Opening statements will be presented between 2-3 p.m. Feb. 20. The UN Conference on the Human Environment will be from 7-9 p.m. that evening. On Feb. 21, UN membership for Palestine and the African National Congress will be discussed from 9-10 a.m.; international conflicts from 10-11:30 a.m. and 12:45-2:30 p.m.; and human rights 2:45-3:45 p.m.

On Feb. 22, global economics and interdependency will be the topic of debate from 9-11:30 a.m., and disarmament, nuclear weapons, and

Reflector receives honors

By Doug Gross

Assistant News Editor

GSU's Southern Reflector magazine received national honors recently from the Columbia Scholastic Press Association.

The student yearbook magazine scored 925 points out of 1000, earning both "Medalist" and "All-Columbian" honors from the Columbia University organization which reviews college publications nationwide.

Nikki Shields, a junior printing management major and editor of last year's Reflector said "I think GSU is really lucky to have a magazine of such quality, and that we have the resources to come out with such a good magazine."

As a result of this placing, the Southern Reflector will go on to a second round of judging, competing for Gold and Silver Crown awards against other national finalists.

One judge, whose name was not released due to the rules of the contest, spoke highly of the staff's handling of the combination of yearbook and magazine.

"[The Southern Reflector] is a hybrid that is difficult to deal with ... [but] you've handled a unique challenge quite well - a little fine tuning and you'll be exceptional," the Columbia faculty member said in a review of the magazine.

"We established a new medium that will be well recognized," said Shields, "and due to the hard-working, well-diversified staff, the magazine was able to be well-rounded."

Shields commented on the help provided by Bill Neville, coordinator of student publications at GSU.

"Bill Neville was not only a director and adviser, but he was a good idea man, and was also receptive to new ideas. His involvement in contributions made the magazine possible."

The second round of judging is expected to be completed this month, and the winners will be announced in March.

PEOPLE IN THE NEWS

Timing is everything

NEW YORK (AP) — Actress Kate Nelligan's timing is off.

She married songwriter Robert Reale in 1989 and followed doctors' orders for having a baby. Now, two years after giving up, she's pregnant.

"The minute I found out I was pregnant, I was offered four film roles," the 40-year-old Nelligan said in this week's People magazine.

"Our sex life was turning into a 4-H Club meeting, prodded with something here, or told, 'Now it's 7:23 go,'" she said.

Nelligan played the wise-cracking, promiscuous waitress Cora in "Frankie & Johnnie," and the cold, destructive mother of Nick Nolte's character in "The Prince of Tides."

Brooks supports cerebral palsy victims with donation

NASHVILLE, Tenn. (AP) — Country singer Garth Brooks and his wife showed up at the close of a telethon for cerebral palsy and wrote a check for $25,000.

Brooks said he and his wife, Sandy, were watching the televised benefit on Sunday when they decided to donate 10 cents for each dollar raised locally.

"They say if you can give what you can afford it isn't really giving. It kind of made us feel good and we just jumped in the truck and got down here because we saw it on TV," Brooks said.

Brooks' quadruple-platinum album "Ropin' the Wind" won him a Grammy nomination this month for best country vocal performance. His hits include "Friends in Low Places."

The United Cerebral Palsy Association said it raised about $23.5 million nationally in pledges during a 21-hour telethon.

Kathy Bates was in misery

NEW YORK (AP) — Kathy Bates was in misery during filming of "At Play in the Fields of the Lord."

She and co-star Daryl Hannah went to Brazil's Amazon jungle.

"I was not a good camper," Bates said in this week's People magazine. "It's hot and sweaty, and there are bugs, and you want to go home, and it's day 1 of 120. You're at the Amazon. It ain't Rio."

Bates, who starred in "Misery," said Hannah had a good time.

"Daryl Hannah was a good camper. She loves being outside, the jungle, the animals. You could turn around and see Daryl with her lip being gnawed on by this strange little monkey, and she just loved it."

Connery not a coward

LONDON (AP) — A jury awarded libel damages of $63,000 to Jason Connery, actor-son of Sean Connery, over an article in a British tabloid that branded him a coward.

The Sun last January published an article that claimed the younger Connery said he was scared of being called up to fight in the Persian Gulf.

The article claimed Connery, 29, said in an interview he would "sooner bury himself alive" than fight for his country and that he was "a bit of a wimp on the quiet."

Connery told the High Court he said nothing of the sort, and the article did not reflect his views. His lawyer, George Carman, described the article as "a deliberately nasty and vicious attack."

Connery said after the jury's decision Monday: "Now I can get on with my life again. ... What concerned me was that people would believe this was the way I felt. Now, hopefully, people know I did not."

Shuman makes spectacles for the stars in Hollywood

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Cheryl Shuman has the eyes of Hollywood in her hip pocket. Jack Nicholson, Michael Douglas and Meryl Streep are in her files.

Ms. Shuman is optician to the stars and provides many of the glasses seen in movies and on television, including "Bugsy," "Thelma & Louise," "Barton Fink," "Terminator II," "Murphy Brown" and "Cheers."

The crew of "Grand Canyon" called Shuman on her cellular phone and an hour later she spread 4,000 frames across the floor of a hotel room for Steve Martin, Danny Glover and Kevin Kline.

"She's the best," said Peter Schindler, the film's co-producer. "She's able to come up with whatever frame you need."

P.A.W.S. founded out of love

Natzke has improved lives of many animals

GSU News Service

St. Simon's Cindy Natzke had always been interested in animals, but when she became a student at GSU, she had no idea she would become so involved with them so quickly.

"I wanted to do something with animals, like join an animal organization," she said. "Since there were none, I went to the Humane Society to volunteer—that's when I saw the conditions."

The animals at the Bulloch County facility were living in crowded and unhealthy conditions, she said, and lacking not only in space, but heat and fresh air as well. "I just knew if I turned my back on these animals I would never forgive myself. I couldn't leave them in those conditions."

She decided that it was time for a change, and formed a new group with a new attitude. Cindy is the founding president of Providing Animals With Support (P.A.W.S.) to assist the Bulloch County Humane Society.

"I wanted something that would continue—not just a one-time thing," she said. "I had so much cooperation, I just knew this was meant to happen."

"I just prayed. I was so nervous at the first meeting. I was thinking, 'Now, if ten people come that will be a good start.'"

The first meeting drew 72 interested individuals.

"We got a tremendous response. I just couldn't believe that many people showed up. After the meeting, so many people came up to me and said, 'I'm so glad you did this.'"

"None of this would be happening if God didn't want it to. I have a strong faith in God. I feel that I am like a voice for the animals and think this was God's purpose in my life. They are his creatures and we've taken advantage of them. So he put me here to educate people and remind them that animals should be treated with love and kindness," said Cindy.

P.A.W.S. sponsored an Adopt-A-Dog day in Nov. where 17 dogs and puppies were adopted. It was the highest number of dogs adopted in one day for the county animal shelter. The group plans to hold another adoption event during spring quarter.

P.A.W.S. has helped the Humane Society landscape the grounds, clean the outside of the building, and install ceiling fans. "This creates a new awareness for the community—things are being done about the facilities and the quality of care for the animals. Hopefully, people will feel better about adopting animals from the shelter," she said.

The main goals of P.A.W.S. are fund raisers, animal rights education and a spay, neuter, and vaccination program. "Those services would cut down on disease at the shelter and also on returns of animals."

Cindy graduated from Brunswick College with an associate degree in biology. She has served as a volunteer at the Glynn County Humane Society.

"I have met so many wonderful people and made new friends. When I came here I only knew one person, but I really wasn't intimidated by a different county and new people," she said.

Cindy eventually hopes to work with some sort of education program dealing with animals and children such as an animal sanctuary. "I hope to try to start a new generation of compassionate people," she said.

Caffeine: is it your drug of choice?

By Carolyn McWilliams

Staff Writer

Caffeine comes in many forms in our daily lives. While caffeine is present in nonprescription painkillers, cold remedies, diet aids, "wake-up" pills, coffee, cola, tea, chocolate cake, and candy bars, it is considered a drug. Caffeine is a chemical which is responsible for much of the lift we get from these products. It is a quick pick-me-up, an aid to concentration, and it's the best home remedy for grogginess on the job or on the road. But, are these uses of caffeine bad for you?

Caffeine comes from plant sources such as coffee beans, tea leaves, cacao beans, and kola nuts. Pharmacologists classify caffeine as a mild stimulant of the central nervous system. It increases alertness and speeds up the heartbeat and the breathing rate. Caffeine's level in the blood peaks after 15 to 45 minutes, but its effects last for at least 2 hours—up to 12 hours in some people.

As a drug caffeine is addictive because it makes people feel good. Withdrawal from caffeine causes physical reactions such as headaches and exhaustion. These symptoms begin 12 to 24 hours after the last dose of caffeine. Another dose of caffeine will banish these symptoms. If a person quits entirely, the symptoms may persist for about a week. Too much caffeine causes nervousness, irritability, insomnia, trembling and ringing in the ears. Fortunately, it's hard to kill yourself from an overdose of caffeine.

Researchers have tried to determine what health problems caffeine may play a factor in. Some studies exist on caffeine's effect on heart disease, infertility, mental disorders, and even cancer. But research also shows that caffeine can produce many desirable effects. Caffeine improves mood and boosts performance. It may also help with weight loss and asthma relief.

With all the questions over caffeine's effects, many people worry about whether they should change their habits where caffeine is concerned. While it may be a good idea to cut out some of your regular caffeine intake, only a few people need to cut out caffeine entirely. For example, experts recommend that people who have heart disease or high blood pressure, suffer from os-

Cradle and Rush are worth seeing

THE HAND THAT ROCKS THE CRADLE

Starring: Rebecca De Mornay

The idea of an evil nanny seemed, at first, like something out of a Jack MacClane novel: stupid.

I went to see it with my girlfriend, and was expecting to sleep through it. By the end I was sitting in the theater wondering why in the world I had waited to see it.

Rebecca De Mornay stars as a young woman who befriends a family and then begins to look after their children.

She soon takes control of the family by seducing the husband and playing mother to the children. She causes the death of a close friend, and soon her motive is found out.

She has so much power over the family that the real mother begins to wonder if she is fit to be a mother.

The storyline is a bit like the Robert R. Maccmon novel Mine, but is right up there with the Silence of the Lambs.

The climax of the movie just goes to show you that you can't take something away from somebody when they consider it theirs, too.

Starring: Jason Patric and Jennifer Jason Leigh.

I'll admit that it was the Eric Clapton song that made me want to go see the movie. I wasn't expecting anything better than the average drug movie.

But RUSH seemed to have something that other drug movies lack—a plot.

The basic storyline is a drug narc (Jason Patric—yes, that guy who was seen with Julia Roberts after her disengagement with Kiefer) who trains a new partner (Jennifer Jason Leigh) and brings her into the world of drugs.

Leigh is a nice, suburban girl who volunteers for the journey into the drug world, but she soon finds out that she cannot escape.

Remembrances of Desert Storm

At this time last year, I was at the Saudi Arabian port of Jubail with my Army unit, waiting on our Bradleys from Germany. The Bradley is an armored personnel fighting vehicle.

When the air phase of Desert Storm began, many nights were spent waking up to incoming Scud alarms.

Our Bradleys arrived in late January. We painted them tan and began our movement to the Iraqi border. As I was driving my Bradley, I thought of going into combat and dying. I couldn't believe I'd joined the Army and chosen Infantry.

Ground War

When the ground phase began, I nervously drove through a defensive berm into Iraq. As we moved deeper into Iraq, I could see a few burnt tanks through my periscope. I knew the enemy was near.

At midday, I could hear "Call for Fire" commands on my radio. The words "Target Destroyed" came next. Through my periscope I saw smoke rising in the distance. On the radio I heard that Iraqis were surrendering.

We moved forward to meet the Iraqi soldiers marching toward us. Some waved white bed sheets. They looked scared and underfed. An order came over the radio to keep moving, someone else would round up the prisoners.

Nightfall came, we continued moving, stopping only when our artillery fired at unseen targets ahead. The Iraqis we had encountered earlier were militia forces. The Republican Guards were somewhere up ahead. As I drove, I could see artillery flashes through my night vision device.

Tanks

When morning came, we were moving very slowly. I could see what our artillery had fired at earlier. A few burnt tanks, some bodies of dead Iraqis. A few lucky survivors wandered around in a daze. We continued our movement into Iraq.

That night we attacked the Republican Guards. Sometimes the Iraqis fired their artillery at us. Our counter-batteries could pin-point the exact location of the Iraqi artillery when they fired their rounds. Most of the enemy rounds impacted harmlessly ahead of us.

The next day, I saw the results of the night's battles. Bodies of Iraqis were scattered around tanks and vehicles. Some bodies were still smoking. I saw so many dead Iraqis, it was impossible for me to count them all. Iraqis who had survived the destruction were on their knees crying, begging to be taken prisoner.

We continued moving. I could hear fire commands for M1 tanks on the radio. Tanks battled somewhere. In the distance, I could see little black dots moving in a line toward us. The gunner identified them to be Soviet-made T72 tanks. Chatter on the radio. Everyone in my unit could see the tanks.

The order came to engage the tanks. A Bradley has only one weapon effective against a T72; the TOW anti-tank missile. Each Bradley was assigned a target, then took turns firing. Most of the TOW's hit their targets. Black smoke and flames rose in the distance. The targets were destroyed.

Aftermath

That night we moved again, but the stress and lack of sleep was starting to take its toll. I thought about home to keep myself awake.

In the morning, a cease fire was ordered. I saw more scattered bodies and destroyed vehicles. I remember seeing a leg with a boot on. No body, just this lone boot and leg standing straight up. That image often comes back to haunt my mind.

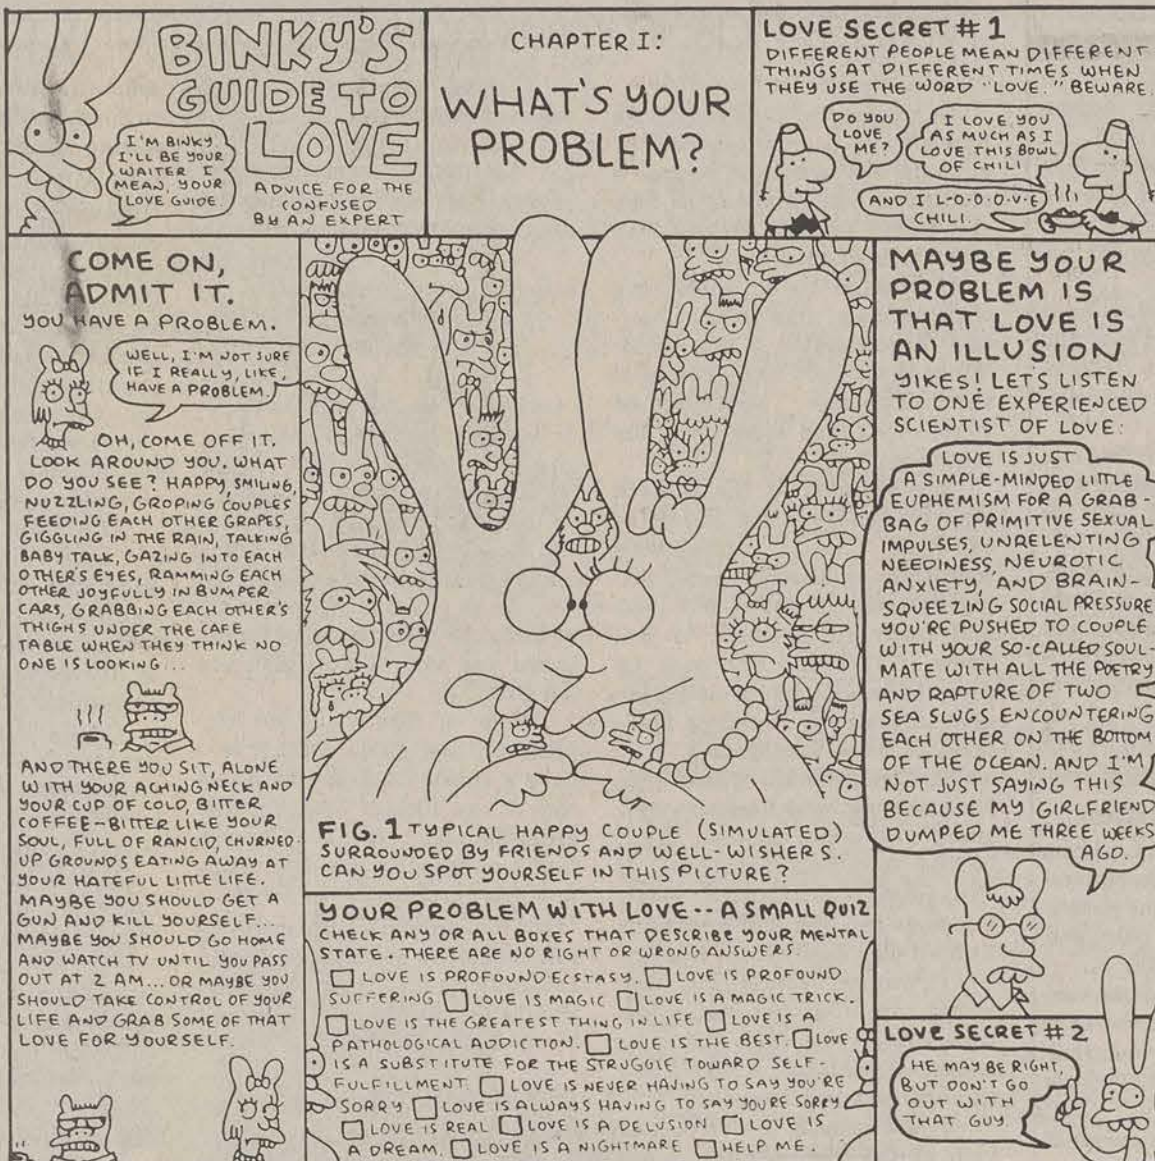

During the cease fire, we occupied southern Iraq. My unit moved to a road intersection near Basra. At the intersection we searched vehicles and gave out food and medical aid.

I saw firsthand how war affects civilians. I saw children starving from lack of food. Some vehicles came in loaded with coffins we had to search. I hated that. Often the deceased's loved ones stood by while I searched the coffin.

The bodies were bloated and stank so bad, I had to wear a scarf. After days of seeing so much misery, I would go off by myself and cry. Seeing little children suffering hurt me the most. They had nothing to do with the war. I wanted out of this foreign land.

I finally made it out of that foreign land and I'm now a freshman at GSU. I hope time will heal the painful memories. I'm only 21. I have a lot in life to look forward to. During my anniversary I'll be thinking of my past, but my thoughts will be of the future.

Date rape is when she says 'No'

LET ME SEE IF I GOT THIS STRAIGHT

D.J. Smith

I just don't understand it. I've seen two articles on it recently, so I guess the bad news is that despite the negative publicity it has gotten in the past, it is still going on. I'm talking about date rape.

The consensus of opinion is that there is a lot more of it than anyone suspects. There is certainly more of it than gets reported.

Now this is going to sound like an attempt at justification - it certainly is not - but I would have to say that date rape, as I understand it, is the ultimate in crossed communications. She says "no," he hears "yes."

In studying this problem, I'd have to say that there is a certain amount of blame on both sides of the communications gap. Let me hasten to add that there is a much greater portion of the blame resting squarely on the shoulders of the guy.

What happens quite often is that the girl not only knows the guy, she likes him and doesn't want to hurt his feelings, etc. So when she says "no" she doesn't say it very emphatically. That's what I mean when I say that part of the blame rests with the girl. Ladies, if you're going to say "no," say it like you mean it. Don't leave any room for doubt.

And guys, "no" means "no," even when it's softly whispered in your ear. That's the bottom line. Ethically, morally, and legally, to continue after being told "no" is to commit rape.

Of course, having the young man ignore a negative response on the assumption that the young lady is merely playing "hard to get" is not the only kind of date rape.

Consider the situation that has been taking place probably since right after the first horse was hitched to the first wagon. The young man picks his date up in his vehicle, and later that evening they end up on a backwoods road miles from anywhere.

Then he delivers that infamous ultimatum, "Put out or walk home!" Even if the young lady only protests feebly before complying, I think most legal systems around the country would find the guy guilty of rape. At the very least, it's a slimeball thing to do.

Another situation is one in which there is alcohol involved, and as one young lady described it, the girl is "out of it." I'm not exactly sure what she meant by that, but let me explore a couple of possibilities.

First, the girl drinks too much and willingly goes along with the guy's suggestions, but decides it was a mistake after she sobers up. Juries have decided both ways on whether or not it was rape. It depends on the details of the situation.

However, if the girl has too much to drink, passes out, and the guy decides he can't pass up a golden opportunity like that, then we have a whole different situation. While it's true the girl didn't say "no" or resist, she also didn't consent, so it's rape. It's also a lowlife thing to do.

I'm sure there are other situations that could be considered date rape, but it boils down to this: if the girl says "no" or resists in any way, and the guy goes on to have sex with her anyway, a rape has been committed.

Ladies, I am aware that after such a situation as I have described, you will be having feelings of confusion, betrayal, shame, guilt, and a sense of having been violated in a very personal way.

You may also be feeling that the last thing you want is for someone to find out, that you just want to put the event behind you and try to forget it.

Please put these feelings aside for a moment and report the incident to the authorities. By reporting the incident you may be preventing some other girl from having to go through this in the future.

As for the guys, this situation exists today because too often in the past we have rationalized such behavior with such statements as, "Sure she said no, but she didn't really mean it. She was just playing hard to get." Too often we hear of such an incident and pass it off with "boys will be boys."

Maybe it's time we stopped being boys and started being responsible adults. Maybe it's time the male half and female half of the world's population started trying to figure out how to get along together.

We keep portraying the relationship between men and women as a confrontation. We even refer to it as the "Battle of the Sexes." Personally, I think it's time we declared a truce and started negotiating a peace settlement.

Well, I think I got all that straight. If I messed up on anything, y'all be sure to let me know about it.

There is no way to peace.
Peace is the way.

- A. J. Muste

The young civil rights activists of today seem to be moving away from the pacifist techniques of years past.

Is it because they've forgotten what Dr. Martin Luther King Jr. was all about? After all, it has been nearly 24 years since his death. Or do they simply believe peaceful means are no longer the most effective way to bring about change?

I was watching a talk show Monday (MLK Day) on which several people were debating the validity of having a national holiday in memory of King and the civil rights movement he led. What surprised me was that the opponents of the holiday were black.

These people were young and militant and have become frustrated with the continuing racist patterns of this nation. They felt that King's dream was just that - a dream, and that his non-violent means for change are ineffective.

That night on the news I saw footage of the MLK Day "celebration" in Denver, which got out of hand when some revelers attacked a group of Ku Klux

POINTS TO PONDER...

Jason Lewis

Klan marchers. While such an attack is understandable, what happened next was uncalled for.

A few idiots - who were probably there just to raise hell - proceeded to overturn and destroy a police car. It was as if the Braves had just won the pennant. All this on a day honoring a peaceful movement and its leader.

I watch MTV as seldom as possible (it rots the brain, you know), but I heard about a music video that was supposed to be controversial, so I tuned in. The video is for the song by Public Enemy entitled "By the Time I Get to Arizona."

The video is basically a fantasy sequence woven with reenactments of the struggles of King during the civil rights movement. The fantasy scenes involve the efforts of a militant black organization to assassinate the newly-elected, David Duke-inspired governor of Arizona, which doesn't have a state holiday honoring King.

Public Enemy has been in the spotlight before regarding their militant attitudes toward racism, and I've often agreed with their points of view. However, I believe they're off-base in this case. It's painfully ironic that PE suggests violent means of assuring the recognition of King's peaceful movement.

One of the group's members claimed that, toward the end of his life, King was becoming more militant and, if he were still around, he might agree with PE's point of view.

In fact, the man who PE seems to have patterned their beliefs after, Malcom X, was actually becoming less militant. That's part of the reason he was assassinated.

These three episodes point to the sad fact that portions of the black community feel so desperate as to advocate the use of violence in the struggle for equality.

Instead, I think they should rediscover the roots of the civil rights movement. The peaceful tactics of the early years may seem obsolete to some, but it's the only truly effective and moral means of gaining equality.

If the proponents of minority rights become violent, they will lose the support of many moderates who will feel threatened. The only way to enlist the support of the masses for the cause is to gain empathy through non-violence.

Other tactics of the early movement would also be very effective today. The Montgomery bus boycott, led by King, demonstrated the enormous economic power of blacks. Today, blacks (and whites) should refuse to patronize any store, company, state or country that continues discriminatory practices.

Blacks should also be sure to maximize their political power. It may be impossible to elect a black president in the U.S. today, but we should at least ensure that our president will protect minority rights and appoint Supreme Court justices who will protect everyone's civil liberties.

The nonviolent methods of King's movement may appear outdated and irrelevant to today's activists, but they're still the most effective way to ensure protection of everyone's rights.

The NCAA has passed new standards regarding college athletes and everyone is in an uproar. I can't see anything wrong with having a 2.0 and 900 SAT score or a 2.5 and a 700 SAT to get into a school. Nor is there anything wrong with the requirements requiring athletes to have 25 percent of their work done within two years, 50 percent after their third year and 75 percent after their fourth.

They are in school to learn, playing sports is the way they got their and how they pay for it. Black educators are crying foul over the new regulations, saying that it discriminates against minorities who might not have a chance at a college education because of this. Too bad. If you don't have the grades, you don't need to be in school.

An athlete should be held up to the same admission requirements as any other student. If minorities want a college education and see that basketball or football is the only way that they will be able to get it, then they should work hard at both ends: sports and school.

A 2.0 is a "C" average. If you're an average student all through high school and get a 900 on a test in which they give you something like 200 points just to sign your name on the form, then you can meet these requirements.

An average student should be able to score an additional 700 points on the SAT. As far as a 2.0 GPA is concerned, minorities, generally, go to schools that are not as academically rigorous. They can't be, due to the fact that the dropout rate is so high in urban areas, standards have to be dropped so that students will stay in school.

The student athlete is just that: A student-athlete. And they should be required to do things that are students that aren't on scholarships are not. They are being given an education to play a sport and they should be subject to rules ensuring that the school is getting their money's worth out of that student.

On another level, if a student decides that they have a legitimate chance at becoming a professional athlete, the NCAA will not allow them to test the waters without losing eligibility. This is a regulation I cannot stand. Because they are students, they should be allowed to see how they would do in the real world.

While pro sports isn't exactly the real world, they should be allowed to see how they would fare without penalty. A student who sends a resume off to a company before he graduates isn't told that he cannot come back and neither should an athlete.

In addition, if a high school graduate wants to become a professional football player or basketball player he must go to college. Why? Some of those kids cannot go to college, yet college has already stopped them without them even stepping foot on a campus. This is unreal. Baseball and hockey both draft kids straight out of high school and have been doing so for quite a while without major problems. But apparently, football and basketball players aren't able to make the adjustment, grasp the system, etc. I can't stand bureaucratic garbage like this. Give them a shot, if they don't make it then they haven't lost anything they didn't have.

The NCAA is a strange and misguided institution. Their intents are good (the recent raising of standards are one of the few things they've done right in recent years), but their methods and results leave much to be desired.

Rugby club to host "Black Rose"

GSU News Service

The whistle blows and the two teams walk off the field. The game is over. In the crowd, two spectators look at each other puzzled about what they just saw. This is a common scene for those who attend rugby games for the first time.

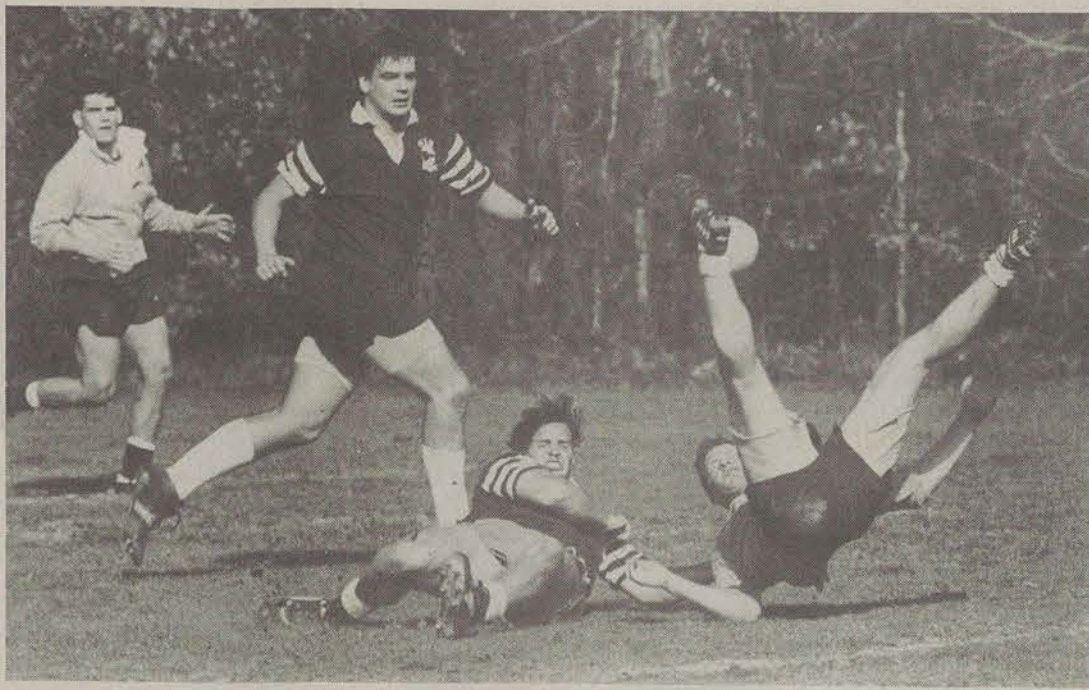

What is the mystery behind this game?

Rugby's roots can be traced back to England, as far back as the end of the 19th Century. It is a sport that is a result of the evolution of soccer. It is the forefather of what is now American football.

There are many similarities between rugby and American football. One of which is the shape of the ball, which is oblong. It is unknown as to why and how the ball design ended up the way it is.

Another area of similarity is the way that points are scored. Points are scored in rugby by carrying the ball across the goal line (there's one at each end of the field) and physically touching the ball to the ground. This is known as a "try" and is worth five points.

After the ball is touched to the ground, it is carried out by the referee toward the center of the field (the 50-yard line in football) and set up to be kicked through the goalposts. If the kick is good, it's worth two points. Sort of like the extra point in football.

GSU's Rugby Club is a member of the Southeast Union. Since rugby is not a varsity sport at most colleges, they play a schedule of varsity, intramural and club teams. They play all year around.

Some of the collegiate teams GSU plays include: the University of Alabama, Auburn, Georgia Tech, Clemson and Savannah College of Art and Design. Club teams from Hilton Head, Atlanta and Jacksonville.

The annual Black Rose Tournament is being held this year Feb. 15-17. The Eagles did not take last season's title and will be looking forward to the tournament this year.

"It is something they look forward to participating in," said Keith McHugh, a team captain.

The team decided to host the Black Rose Tournament as a way to establish themselves as a prominent force in the Southeast Union. The tournament takes its name from its proximity to Valentine's Day.

"We wanted to start a tradition with the tournament," said McHugh. "It was a good way to bring all the teams competing in our union to GSU to play on our turf."

GSU's rugby team has been ranked as high as fifth in the nation in recent years and is consistently rank as one of the top teams in the union.

Paladins stop the Eagles

By Eric Weisenmiller
Sports Editor

In an extremely physical game, the Furman Paladins (9-6) halted the GSU winning streak at six games by edging the Eagles 76-70 Wednesday night at Greenville, South Carolina in a non-conference game.

The game was closely contested and saw many lead changes, but the Eagles were unable to keep pace with their 94.4 points per game scoring average which is fourth in the nation. They fell to the Paladins of the Southern Conference for the second time this season.

"Overall I felt that our guys gave a good effort," said coach Frank Kerns. "Down the stretch we didn't execute as well and just got some tough breaks."

Two free throws by Joby Powell put the Eagles on top 65-63 with three and a half minutes remaining, but the Paladins were undaunted and became increasingly aggressive.

Hal Henderson's three pointer from the top of the key in the last 30 seconds of the game put Furman up 73-69 and enabled them to ice the game.

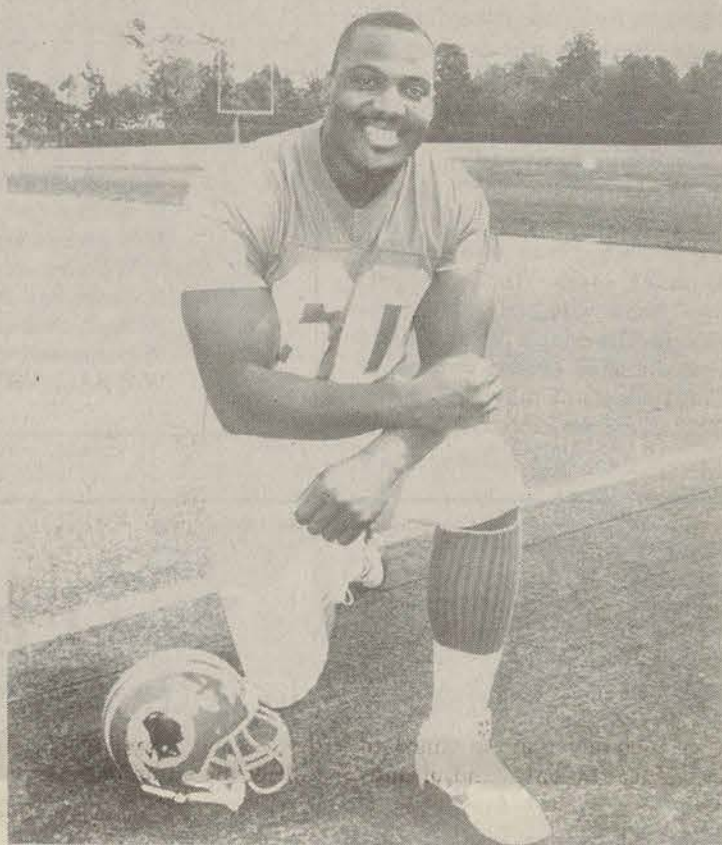

With two minutes remaining in the first half the GSU had built up a seven point lead, 38-31, when the Eagles were forced to turn to their bench due to foul trouble. This gave the Paladins an opportunity to come back and tie things up at 38-38 by intermission.

Tony Windless was the top scorer for the Eagles with 17 points. Calvin Sinkfield had 12. Young had 11 and Dexter Abrams added 10.

David Stamie lead the scoring for Furman with 17, and Hal Henderson had 13 points.

The Eagles remain tied for first in the TAAC with an unblemished conference record (4-0). They travel to Macon to face TAAC rival Mercer (5-11, 2-3) at 4:00 p.m. on Saturday.

GSC alum to play in Super Bowl XXVI

By Eric Weisenmiller
Sports Editor

Former GSC offensive lineman Fred Stokes will be suiting up in a Washington Redskin uniform this Sunday as his team faces the Buffalo Bills in Super Bowl XXVI in Minneapolis, Minnesota.

Stokes played for GSC from 1982 to 1986 and was a member of the 1985 and 1986 National Championship teams coached by Erk Russell.

Amazingly enough, his road to professional football didn't begin until his senior year of high school in Vidalia, Georgia when he stepped out of the ranks of the marching band and, with only one year's experience, earned a scholarship to GSC.

He played tight end and tackle for the Eagles, but his large frame caught the eyes of several pro scouts who envisioned him as a defensive player.

After leaving GSC in 1986 he earned a spot on the Los Angeles Rams' roster. That year Stokes made the transition to the defensive line. He played in 11 games as a pass-rushing specialist. The following year he was hampered by an ankle injury which took him out of the line-up in the fifth week of the season.

In 1989 the Redskins noticed his potential and picked him up in the Plan B draft.

During his five years in the NFL Stokes has been forced to overcome injuries to his ankle and shoulder. Despite these setbacks he has worked his way back into the line-up as a defensive end and has built a reputation as a menace to opposing quarterbacks.

He is currently a part of the Redskin's notorious "National Defense" which will be taking aim at Jim Kelly and the volatile Buffalo offense in Sunday's championship showdown.

Fencing tournament celebrates 20 years

By Gary A. Witte
Editor

The GSU Fencing Club celebrated its 20th year on campus by holding its annual fencing tournament last weekend.

The 20th annual Geoff Elder, named for the GSC student who founded the club, featured fencers from about 61 different clubs and schools. Georgia State University, Fayetteville, Charleston, Mt. Airy High School, Nellya, and Jacksonville were all represented.

Several Atlanta Fencing Club members made it to the weekend tournament despite the sudden snow in their area. However, "Some of the people from Atlanta were snowed in and weren't able to come," said Dr. Frank French, the GSU Fencing Club's advisor.

According to Dr. French, the tournament is the only thing the club had planned to celebrate the 20th anniversary.

"I suppose we'll have a bigger bash for our 25th [anniversary]," he said.

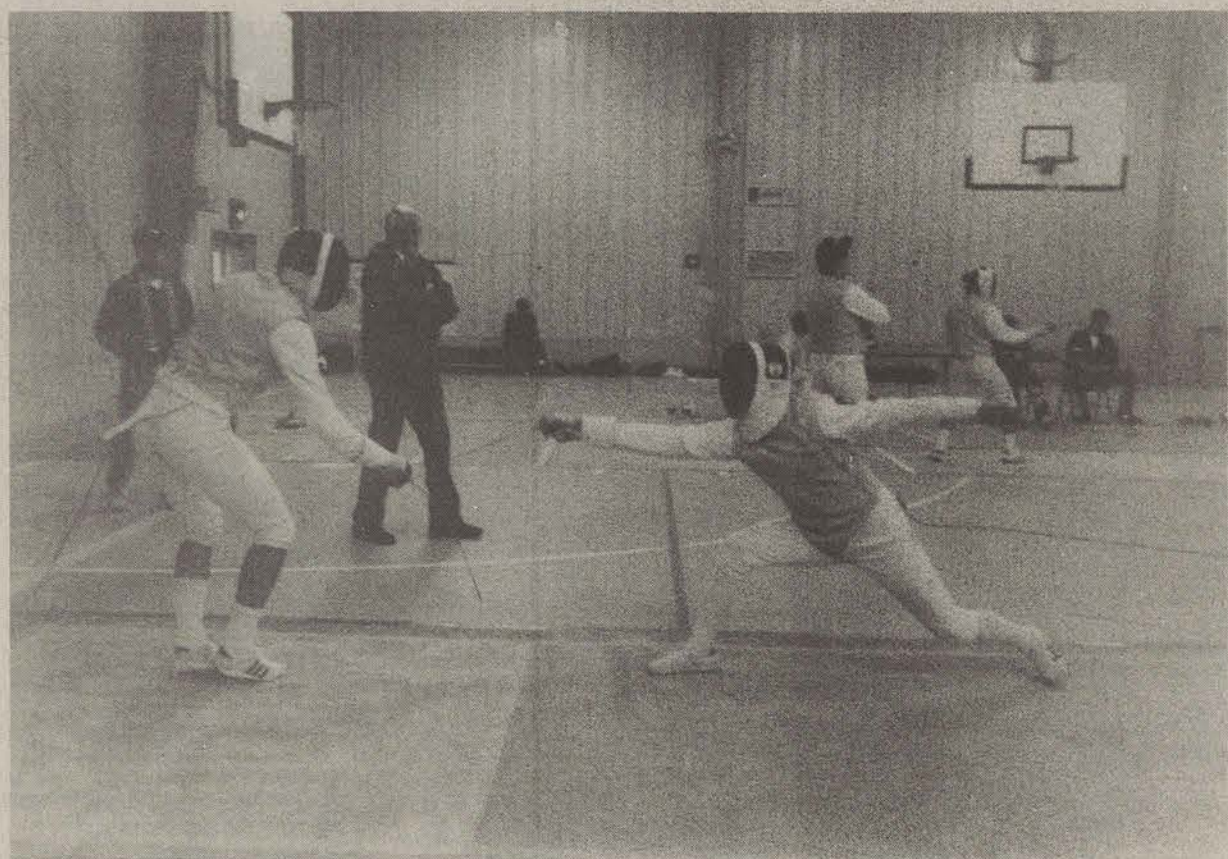

T-shirts commemorating the event sold out during the tournament, causing the club to order a second run because only two members of the club got one, according to Dr. French.

Some friendly rivalry was shown early Saturday when the Georgia State fencers signed in as the "real" GSU. Some Georgia Southern fencers remarked that they could be the "first GSU" and Georgia Southern would be the "best GSU."

Because of some trouble with the "quality and quantity of scoring devices," Dr. French said that the tournament ended up running about 30 percent slower. Finally wrapping up around 8 p.m. Sunday night.

The first event of the tournament was the Men's D and under Foil, with 34 entries. Scott Highnote, from the Atlanta Fencing Club, won first place and a D rating.

Both Kenneth Sweatman from the Charleston Fencing Club, and Walt Mooney from the Mt. Airy

Khalid Mezel and Scott Highnote engage in a duel while Dr. Frank French looks on. Mezel won the foil competition and Highnote won the "D" level foil. (Photo by Robert Cooper)

Fencing Club earned E ratings in the competition. Sweatman and Mooney finished second and third respectively.

Women's Open Foil was held next with only four entries. Kristin Ward from Baylor finished first. Lynn Harris from Charleston gained second place, and Princess Simpson from Georgia State finished third.

Nellya Fencing Academy dominated Men's Open Sabre with each of the three finishers being from Nellya. Boris Sokol, an internationally ranked fencer, finished first in the event, defeating all of his competitors in the final round.

Chris Akeman followed with second and Chip Crane was third. Both are of pre-high school age, and defeated many older fencers in their round.

The last event of the day was originally scheduled to be the Women's Open Epee, but was combined with the next day's Men Open Epee because of too few entries.

Second day

Roy Youngs, a junior history major, is this year's GSU Fencing Club president. Looking around on the second day of the tournament, he said, "It's a good turnout, especially with the snow [in Atlanta]."

The first event Sunday morning was the Open Foil competition, won by Khalid Mezel, a GSU freshman and B ranked fencer. Mezel, a native of Kuwait, has not yet joined the GSU Fencing Club because of his classwork and the fact that he does not have a car.

"This is my first quarter and I need to study," he said.

Finishing second and third respectively were David Cali of the Fayetteville Fencing Academy and Scott Highnote.

Also showing a strong finish were Ruben Burbois, GSU, and Princess Simpson from Georgia State. Burbois, who is unclassified, finished fifth but was named Best Novice because of his high scoring. Simpson, who finished sixth, was named the Best Woman.

Open Epee and an accompanying D rating was won by GSU alumnus Mark Wood. Kenneth Sweatman, who had finished second in the Men's D and under Foil, finished second once more. Third place was taken by another GSU Alumnus, Randy Weitman.

GRIMM "THE WEASEL" SECRETLY PLANS TO MAKE HIS ESCAPE THROUGH THE PRISON VENTILATION SYSTEM.

INCH BY INCH HE CRAWLS THROUGH THE TINY AIR DUCT.

SUDDENLY HE REALIZES THAT HE'S STUCK.

MAM, I FOUND OUT WHAT WAS CLOGGING UP YOUR CHIMNEY.

GET YOUR HANDS OFF ME, COPPER.

SORRY, GRIMM, BUT YOU FORCED ME TO LOCK YOU UP HERE IN THE BACK YARD.

SEE? IT'S NOT SO BAD, GRIMM.

MAYBE NOW YOU WON'T BE TEMPTED TO RUN OFF.

THERE AIN'T A PRISON BIG ENOUGH TO HOLD GRIMM "THE WEASEL".

ATTILA, I'M GOING TO TRY TO ESCAPE TONIGHT, SO DO EXACTLY AS I SAY.

GET ME A BOWL OF DOG FOOD AND PUT A FILE IN IT.

ZIP

LIFE, I'M GOING TO BE IN HERE FOR LIFE.
