NEWS BRIEFS

MADD to use buggy case to fight for stiffer sentences

COLUMBUS, Ohio (AP) — Mothers Against Drunk Driving planned a campaign to point out what it calls a lenient sentence against a man whose pickup truck struck and killed six Amish family members in their buggy.

Douglas Lyons, 26, of Fredericktown, was sentenced earlier this month to 18 months in jail for the deaths. He also was sentenced to 6 to 10 years for injuring three people in the accident last year.

She said it was insane that Lyons should get more prison time for injuring three people than killing six. The 18-month sentence is the maximum allowed by law.

Lyons' sentence for the six deaths was "no worse than a driving-while-intoxicated conviction," Hall said.

Lyons was indicted on felony counts of aggravated vehicular homicide for the deaths but was found guilty of the misdemeanor charge.

He also was convicted of three counts of aggravated vehicular assault for injuries in the accident.

A drunken driving charge filed against Lyons was dropped.

Malcolm X, Confederate flag banned at school

ATLANTA (AP) — Peachtree Junior High School students who want to wear clothing bearing the Confederate flag, the likeness of Malcolm X or a black Bart Simpson will have to do it at home.

Principal Lawrence Williams has forbidden students to wear the so-called message clothing to school after both sides — those who wanted to don the Confederate flag and those who wanted to wear the emblem of black nationalist Malcolm X — said they were offended by the symbols.

The heavy metal group Guns N' Roses also made the list.

"Some students get caught up in wearing things because it's a fashion," Williams said. "We have to help students understand the meaning — not just the fashion but the meaning."

But Williams said he would allow shirts or other paraphernalia with the name or likeness of Martin Luther King Jr.

"Freedom of expression is not shed on the doorsteps of the school, but when these expressions degrade or offend others and interfere with the educational process, then that right must be questioned," he said in a written statement.

An estimated 450 of the 1,200 students at the school on North Peachtree Road are black.

Former Senator McCarthy visits GSU

Cites misuse of U.S. military as main cause of country's economic woes

By Doug Gross
Assistant News Editor

Former U.S. Senator Eugene McCarthy spoke in the Union Ballroom Monday to a group of students and faculty members about issues facing hopefuls in this year's presidential election.

McCarthy, a Democrat from Minnesota who challenged Lyndon B. Johnson for the 1968 presidential bid, cited misuse of the U.S. military as a main cause of the country's economic woes.

The former senator referred to the fear of Communism as an "ideology that ... controlled us" for the past two decades, driving military spending continually upward.

Much of Japan and Germany's economic success was attributed by McCarthy to the fact that these countries have spent little on defense since World War II.

McCarthy suggested increased taxes for the wealthy as a means of reducing the approximately $4 trillion national deficit.

"In order to do away with debt, you have to have some source of income or wealth with which to do it," he said, citing that ten percent of the nation's population controls over seventy percent of its privately owned wealth.

McCarthy pointed to the end of the Cold War as an opportunity for the nation's leaders to turn their attention more closely to the U.S. domestic situation, which he compared to that of Rome shortly before its fall.

"We have an opportunity now, and I hope we don't fail to use it," said McCarthy, who as a senator during the sixties was one of the first national politicians to speak out against the Vietnam War.

He called for a redistribution of available jobs to combat unemployment, which he stated as a problem, especially for young adults.

"Unless they go to college, ... into the military or work for Ronald McDonald in fast food, ... there isn't much of a place for them," McCarthy said.

He also cited a need for education improvement for the nation's youth.

"We treat [teens] pretty much the way lions do ... let them wander around in the desert, then we're surprised if they don't turn out very well or cause trouble," McCarthy said.

The Senator made a call for students and teachers to become active in a political atmosphere which he described as more complex than that of the Vietnam era.

"It's more of a challenge ... this year than it was in 1968, when things were rather obvious," he said. "You didn't have to be much of a scholar to see what was going on in this country in '68, in '92 things are more complicated."

"I think if McCarthy were elected president, we wouldn't be worried about national health care today," said Dr. Beverly Merrick, an associate professor of journalism at GSU. "We wouldn't be worried about widespread poverty and unemployment. He is a true statesman who knows where the politicians are coming from ... we need somebody like that in our government today."

Roads to stadium, campus planned

By Brent Parrott
Assistant News Editor

In the future, traffic might not be so bad after GSU football games if a planned access road is built. Also in the works, is an access road to the GSU campus.

There are several problems facing construction of the access road to the stadium according to David Hainley, landscape architect with GSU Facilities Planning and Space Utilization.

"GSU does not own the land to build the road, and would have to get permission from the Georgia Department of Transportation for the right of way and would have to get a wetlands permit from the Army Corps of Engineers," said Hainley.

"A no on any of the three would kill the deal," Hainley said.

The road would be located past the water tower and would improve access out of the stadium. The road would be an exit-only road that would be open during football games and other special events. It would be closed the rest of the time.

The budget for the road has not been established and there is not a time-table for completion of the project.

According to Hainley, GSU is working on building an access road to the campus. Unlike the stadium access road, the land has been acquired for the campus access road.

The campus access road would be an entrance-exit road open all the time.

Popularity of poetry growing at GSU

By Doug Gross
Assistant News Editor

The following is an interview with Malone Tumlin, former editor of the Miscellany, GSU's magazine of the arts, and current editor of the Ogeechee Poetry Journal and the Southern Reflector student magazine.

Tumlin is a senior English major.

Q: How long have you been involved with poetry workshops on campus?

"I began attending a poetry workshop in my freshman year which was the 1988-89 academic year. At the time it was headed by two talented writers, Adam Hills and James Perdue. Since then I have either attended workshops or helped organize them."

Q: Do you feel that there is a growing interest in Poetry at GSU?

"Yes, I believe so. Last year I started a workshop that met once a week and the attendance ranged anywhere from five to fifteen members. This is almost double the attendance from the previous two years."

Q: What do you do at a Poetry workshop?

"Basically we begin by having one person read his or her poem aloud and then the rest of the group comments on it. The group usually has about a week to look over the poem and make constructive comments. After this the writer of the poem is free to add his or her own statements about the poem."

Q: Do you think that work shops are helpful?

"Yes, very. Besides reading as much great poetry as possible and attending poetry readings, the workshops are a great help in that they energize a writer to further revision and inspire the writer to keep writing."

Q: What other poetry activities are there on campus?

"The University English Department offers three creative writing classes. An introductory class is offered fall quarter, an advanced creative writing poetry class is offered winter quarter, and spring quarter there is a short fiction creative writing class."

Q: Who teaches the classes?

"The classes are mainly taught by Eric Nelson. Mr. Nelson recently won the Arkansas Press award for poetry which enabled him to have a book of poetry published last spring. Eric Nelson is also the recipient of the Georgia Poetry Circuit award which is awarded annually to two poets of outstanding talent. As the winner of the award he will travel to about ten different places around the state and read his poetry."

Q: When is the next work shop?

"Feb. 6 at 6:00 p.m. in room 101 of the Williams Center building. Everyone is welcome to attend they just need to bring about 10 copies of a single poem."

Rainy days in the 'Boro

UGA linebacker suspected in Athens shooting

ATHENS, Ga. (AP) — Police say a drive-by shooting at a University of Georgia fraternity house may be related to charges against a football player.

Police are trying to determine if a gun found in the car of

All-SEC linebacker Dwayne Simmons belonged to the player and if it was used to fire shots over the Kappa Alpha Psi fraternity house Saturday, said Sgt. Hilda Sorrow.

Simmons, 21, was arrested on misdemeanor charges of carrying a concealed weapon and marijuana possession Saturday. He is free on $2000 bail.

Simmons told police the gun belonged to a friend he wouldn't identify, Sorrow said.

"Sex and Death" a success

Miscellany, Performance Works, and Midnight Sun do it right

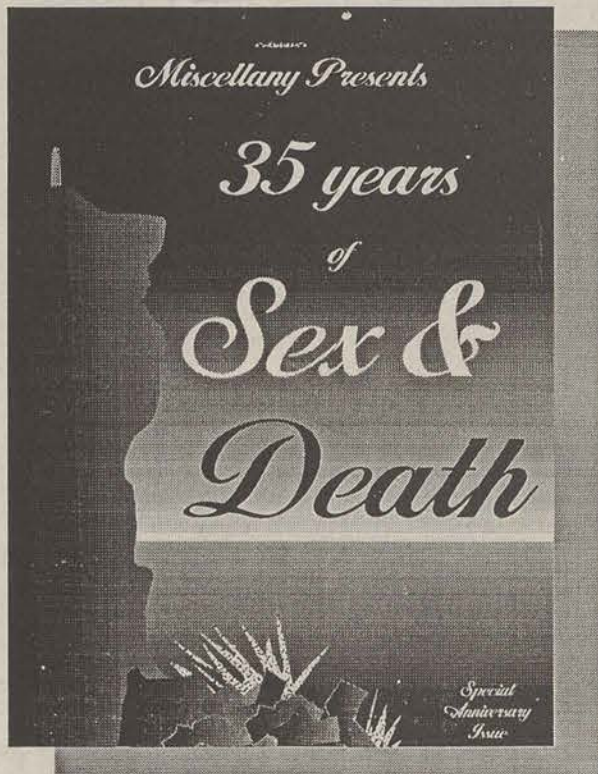

By Teresa Roach
Features Editor

Sex and death: powerful topics. What words could provoke more conversations, spark more debates or induce more thought? Miscellany was right on target when it chose to focus on these ever-popular subjects, judging from the standing-room only crowd it received during both its performances last Monday night.

"An Evening of Sex & Death: 35 years of poetry and prose" was a sensual supplement to the compilation of poetry provided by Miscellany and selected by its Editor Angela C. Whitlock and Assistant Editor Andy "Freedom" Akin. The poetry booklet, which contains an arrangement of poetry concerning sex and death that has appeared in Miscellany over its 35-year span, was included in last Tuesday's edition of the George-Anne.

The evening began with a few acoustic tunes by Midnight Sun, a pleasantly harmonious local band with Chris Wilkerson on guitar and lead vocals, Jonathan Palmer on guitar and vocals, Joe Thomas on bass guitar and Mason Tromblee on guitar and vocals.

Eric Nelson, an assistant professor of English at GSU and a published poet, spoke about the evolution of poetry during the past 35 years. He emphasized the fact that "poetry clearly parallels societal changes," an important factor to consider while reading poetry from the past.

The 50s were an era "characterized socially by conservatism, ... domestic tranquillity, ... [and] the nuclear family," Nelson said. The poetry of the time reflected the conservative standards in its formality and meter and emphasis on the external world.

In the 60s an "absolute flip-flop of values occurred," Nelson said, and with this change also occurred a "revolution in the fabric of society and in poetry." Poetry became less formal and more personal.

These changes in society and poetry are evidenced in looking through the different poems written in Miscellany's anthology.

Performance Works, a group who acts out interpretations of previously published literature, provided their interpretation of a selection of poems from the anthology. The performers, Renee Stewart, Allison Lind, Jeannie Kelly, Clint Horne, Frank Reed, and Rohan Quince, did a wonderful job of providing a feel for the poetry through sight, sound, and scent.

The first work performed was a poem from 1957 by Karen Gernant, entitled "Sheila Robbins." It is the true story of a four-year-old girl who lost her life while saving the lives of her younger sister and brother. Jeannie Kelly credibly performed the bravery of young Sheila and the other performers were unstoppable as they enclosed her as the flames.

Another remarkably effective poem was "Dogs" by Larry England from 1972. Clint Horne took the voice of an American soldier in Vietnam who has obviously been desensitized to the reality of the war, but makes us realize that in his situation it is a necessity.

The final poem that was performed was "The Happiest Day of My Life (for James Joyce)" by Adam Hills, written in 1990. This poem showed the dramatic changes in expression that have taken place in the past 35 years, for it takes the subjects of religion and sex and confronts them head-on, leaving us with the writer's impression that sex was much more satisfying.

The performance was adapted and directed by Kenny Hill, and the costumes were designed by Cindy Mallory.

Fried Green Tomatoes a must-see

FRIED GREEN TOMATOES

Starring: Kathy Bates, Jessica Tandy, and Mary Stuart Masterson.

I guess to understand the art of acting, you would have to see Kathy Bates and Jessica Tandy together in Fried Green Tomatoes.

This wonderful film, which earned three Golden Globe Nominations, is a story within story.

Kathy Bates (Misery) is a middle-aged woman, who is unhappy with her marriage and is scared about where her life is going. Jessica Tandy is an old and mysterious woman who meets Bates and tells her a story that changes her life.

The film is filled with emotion, suspense and humor that only a film with Jessica

DECKER'S DECISIONS

Trey Decker

Tandy could possess.

The movie is pretty long, but when you think you're about to get bored, a scene comes up that jerks the boredom right out of you.

Tandy (Driving Miss Daisy) is certainly the perfect cast for the part of the old and uncared-for lady, whose story causes Bates to reexamine her life, and make a change.

The film tells not only the plot, but also tells about the changes that we all go through, and the help we sometimes need when we go through it.

Jessica Tandy is my favorite actress and her performance is worth a million academy awards.

The film does not just center around what Bates needs, but the friendship that both Tandy and Bates need from each other.

The reviews that the movie has already spawned are surely not enough. One of the things that prompted me to see it was Tandy's beautifully acted performance in Driving Miss Daisy and her ability to play a number of roles. She shines from the moment she is introduced and Bates holds her own as beautifully as Tandy.

A friend of mine sat through the movie with me and came up with a number of things that were wrong. Fallacies, he called them. I guess he just doesn't know how to enjoy a movie and look at it with something other than stupidity. Well, I know he knew it was good, or he would not have tried to prove all sorts of things wrong with it. You never did get up and get that Coke, Russ.

You can bet that every middle-aged woman in America will be trying to outdo the young, then say, "Face it, young world, I'm older and I have more insurance."

Of course, that's not the real line, but if you understand the plot, then that's safe to say.

Fried Green Tomatoes is one of those films that makes you wonder about your life, and shows you just what best friends are all about. And you know, if I didn't like Jessica Tandy, then I would have probably seen it just for the mystery of the name: Fried Green Tomatoes. Catchy, isn't it?

Blind may soon be able to identify dollars

MORGAN CITY, La. (AP) — J.F. Oswald wants to make his mark on the world — or at least on the world's money.

He has a plan to help the blind tell the difference between a $100 bill and a $1 bill.

After nearly three years of research, Oswald goes to Washington on Tuesday to try to sell his idea. His plan is to add a small star to dollar bills so the blind can feel their numbers.

Braille money does not exist in America, although there are 1.6 million who must literally use blind faith in accepting change from store clerks. Attempts to manufacture Braille bills for trouble-free use in other countries has met with limited success.

Oswald, who was disabled in a 1980 auto accident but is not blind, is acutely aware of the needs of the disabled.

"When I was hurt, I had an awful lot of good people help me. My rehabilitation was a success, as far as could be reasonably expected," he said.

"If I can pull this off, a national project, this is for them. And maybe other people can look at me, a disabled person, and say, 'If he can do that ...' and maybe they'll realize a new goal they didn't think they had the potential to achieve."

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Dr. Martin Luther King fought for rights of all, black and white

Dear Editor,

I was deeply appalled to have read the [letter to the editor] editorial in the Jan. 28 edition of the George-Anne that opposed the observance of a national holiday for Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr. Without the unwearied efforts of Dr. King and others what state would we be in now?

I don't have any gripes with one's right to exercise freedom of speech or expression; however, he or she should not hide behind an anonymous label. The Ku Klux Klan has a right to march; however, its members should not hide behind those hoods of racism and ignorance. The individual who wrote the article opposing the MLK holiday is no better than the Klansman who poisons our society.

Furthermore, freedom means accepting responsibility. If one exercises his freedom to murder, rape or steal, he must be responsible for his actions. The individual who chose to murder, rape and steal from Dr. King's legacy and achievements, should also be responsible for his or her actions. He or she need not feel intimidated by the 3,000 African American students at this prestigious institution that boasts an enrollment of over 12,000.

Also, to imply that Dr. King was not a real leader is blatant ignorance. Unlike George Washington, Abraham Lincoln, and John F. Kennedy, King represented ALL mankind. He did not advocate the belief that there was a superior race. George Washington owned slaves, and Abraham Lincoln signed the Emancipation Proclamation, not out of the best interest of the oppressed, but to unite the Union and Confederacy.

Furthermore, Dr. King's achievements are far more phenomenal than those of Washington, Lincoln or Kennedy because King did not have the luxury of being "President of the United States" or the mentality that he was superior to others. He changed the course of America, and was the drum major in a band of leaders both black and white, who fought for the rights of all mankind.

If our government has created the MLK holiday out of political reasons only, then I certainly pray for more "political" decisions such as economic sanctions against South Africa and more economic aid to our nations' homeless. The MLK holiday was constituted because our government finally realized

Choice should not be legislated

Dear Editor,

The anniversary of Roe v. Wade has brought out the militants again. I went to a RUF [Reformed University Fellowship] meeting and picked up some pretty offensive literature. I'm intelligent, and can imagine what the suctioned remains of a fetus would look like; I do not need to see it.

And the pamphlets were somewhat confused; when they talk about how few pregnancies result from rape because the doctors take steps, they are saying O.K. to abortion.

The "steps" that the doctors take is to orally administer a dose of hormones to flush a fertilized egg out of the unwilling host. What is that, if not abortion?

I am pro-choice, because as a woman I cannot permit my reproductive choices to be legislated. I then cease to be a functioning citizen and become a reproductive unit.

When abortion was illegal, they went on at hospitals anyway. You merely have to talk to the older nurses, and compare the much, much higher D and C rates of the pre-legal abortion era.

LIFE IN HELL

State of the Union address pathetic

You don't have to fool all the people all of the time; you just have to fool enough to get elected.

-Gerald Barzan

It's only two hours from my deadline and I want to thank President Bush for saving my ass. I'm finally pissed off enough about something to write about it.

For the past few days I've considered writing about everything from sex and death to blondes. But these ideas were promptly rejected because I have relatively little experience in these particular areas.

Bush gave his State of the Union Address before Congress and the nation Tuesday night. A brief summary: first he took credit for winning the Cold War and Desert Storm. Then he made some lame proposals and demanded that Congress and the nation follow his lead.

He encouraged the "patriots" of Congress to attack our nation's domestic problems with the tenacity that led to the defeat (?) of Saddam Hussein.

First he called for less government regulation in all aspects of life. This at a time when everything from unregulated savings and loans to breast implants are causing problems for the nation.

Next he called for passage of his pet project, a capital gain's tax cut. Despite his repeated insistence that this would benefit everyone, most of congress realizes he's pushing this for the benefit of his rich, Republican cronies who made him what he is today.

Bush did finally call for a $4.4 billion extension of unemployment benefits - something Democrats proposed months ago.

The president insists that Congress pass all his proposals by March 20th - something he knows is not likely to happen. After that date, he says, "the battle will joined."

So look out you babulumpkin, liberal Democrats. Commander in Chief Bush, veteran of the Cold War, the Panama Invasion and Desert Storm, will be coming after you if you don't do what he wants. His strategy? Blame it all on Congress.

For those of you who might have missed Bush's speech, here's great news. He's pro-choice! That's right he wants parents to have complete freedom in choosing where their children attend school. He would like to instigate a program that would surely lead to segregation and inequality in education.

He also wants everyone to continue to be able to choose where they attain health care. This, of course, ignores the fact that many people have no choice at all because of lack of health insurance. South Africa and the United States are the only two economically advanced nations in the world that do not guarantee adequate health care for all its citizens.

Of course, he didn't mention that he was absolutely anti-choice on some matters. He supports a Constitutional Amendment to ban abortion. It's amazing how that little document (the United States Constitution) has done so well for 200 years without Bush's help.

At one point Bush went into a tirade about welfare reform. He says he wants to "empower the poor" of this nation. Translation: "Let's get those lazy welfare cheats off our back!"

He can thank one of his speech writers for that one. Yep, that Dave Duke can really get a point across, can't he?

George Bush's problem is that he raises everyone's expectations, but never fulfills them. Four years ago he promised to be the president who would take care of all our problems: education, environment, crime, drugs, etc., etc.

Luckily, the voters get a chance to make a change every four years.

At the capital with Uncle Zell and the boys

Well, Uncle Zell and the boys are hard at work up in Atlanta.

Georgia's legislative session has gotten underway and the first thing Uncle Zell has on his mind is how to go about raising more money without raising taxes; how to cut administrative costs and program expenditures without cutting program services or elected officials' salaries; how to cut manpower without cutting his own staff; and mostly how to stick all that to us and still get our vote in the next election.

One argument he is using to justify this to us is to tell us how important it is to increase our spending on education. Maybe that means he plans to increase next year's education spending level back to what it was last year - before he cut it.

As for raising more money, that slippery sleight-of-hand artist sure has something up his sleeve this time. He proposes that the "service fees" be increased. That means it will cost more to get a driver's license, fishing license, tags for your car, etc.

Now, as I understand the use of service fees, the money

LET ME SEE IF I GOT THIS STRAIGHT

from service fees goes into programs related to the service provided. Hunting and fishing license money goes to the fish and game section of the Dept. of Natural Resources, etc. So how does Uncle Zell plan to get that money into the general fund along with the tax money so he can use it for welfare, and state officials' parking tickets, and important things like that?

And along with this proposal goes an interesting little game in semantics. Since it is an increase in "service fees," Uncle Zell claims it is not an increase in "taxes," even though it is estimated that these increases will cost each Georgian an additional twenty dollars per year, on average.

An old saying tells us that if something walks like a duck, quacks like a duck, and looks like a duck, it probably is a duck. Well, this service fee increase quacks like a tax, gouges the wallet like a tax, and smells like ... well, I'm not sure what a tax smells like, but Uncle Zell's proposal sure stinks, so I'll leave the rest up to your imagination.

And speaking of semantics, Uncle Zell has adopted a strategy commonly employed by politicians when they're trying to make a shaky program seem a lot better than it really is.

He has wrapped all these proposals up in a neat little package and given it a real catchy name. I can't remember exactly what it is, but when I heard it I remember thinking what a catchy little name it was. It was "Jump Start Georgia," or something like that.

Of course, "Jump Start Georgia" had to take a back seat for a while, because our esteemed legislators had something far more important on their minds - putting an end, once and for all, to unethical practices on the part of state officials!

About a week before this legislative session convened, one of those esteemed state legislators I spoke of was indicted on federal charges of extortion. Most of the other legislators agreed, in public at least, that extortion is probably unethical. So they took the only action known to legislators in the face of wrongdoing - they proposed a law against unethical behavior.

I think it's just a shame that they waited so long to pass such an important law. At least one man's life has been ruined by their neglect in the field of ethics.

I'm sure that had such a law been on the books earlier, that esteemed politician and lawmaker would never have engaged in acts of extortion, right?

But better late than never. Once that law is passed, I'm sure that no politician from the state of Georgia will ever engage in unethical practices again, right?

The nurse I refer to reveres human life, and is a Christian. What she wants to see is every pro-lifer spend their hundred and thousands of dollars on taking care of pregnant women.

Feed them, house them, take full financial responsibility.

Oswald has talked to government officials and has consulted with blind people. He and his friends have even produced a five-minute video "designed to get my foot in the door in Washington," he said.

He notes a federal study, presented to Congress in 1983, has already determined that Braille bills are needed. Four agencies -Treasury, Engraving, Secret Service and American Council for the Blind - were involved.

But there are still no markings to help the blind count their money.

Oswald's plan calls for a small star on the bottom left side of the bill. The star could be felt and location of the star would designate the value of the bill.

"If you're a blind person and someone provides you a way to distinguish between a $1 bill and a $20 bill, you're going to bility for every pregnant woman who would rather not have an abortion. And they must pay all the medical costs. Even if it is retarded, addicted, or deformed.

Then they can talk about what is morally right.

learn in a hurry," Oswald said.

It is common practice among the blind to store bills of different denominations in separate compartments in their billfolds. The Braille identification would provide a new level of capability for them.

He said he thinks a star would be an easy identifying mark because of the five points, which would be easy to find for a blind person's Braille-sensitive finger tips.

Oswald's research indicates that as the bill wears out, the star would become more "visible" because its five points would begin to "fluff" instead of deteriorate. That's because money is cloth, not paper, he said.

Oswald said the American Disabilities Act is on the Congressional front burner this year and he hopes to link his project to it.
