Celebrating 65 years as Georgia Southern's Official Student Newspaper

NEWS BRIEFS

Governor cuts another $75 million from Georgia budget

ATLANTA (AP) — The governor said Monday he will cut this year's budget another $75 million as a precaution against possible red ink.

House Appropriations Committee Chairman Terry Coleman, D-Eastman, said the step followed discussions between Gov. Zell Miller and key budget writers over the need for deeper cuts.

"We had discussed it, and the governor agreed," said Coleman, adding that his committee planned to act Tuesday afternoon on the measure.

The budget under discussion covers the fiscal year that began last July 1 and ends June 30. It was cut $415.4 million during a special session last summer, and Miller said in January he planned to cut an additional $50 million from the measure.

Now he proposes a further reduction of $75 million.

That means that instead of expecting revenue collections of $7.47 billion for the fiscal year, a 2.8 percent growth rate, Miller now expects $7.39 billion in collections, a 1.8 percent growth rate.

The governor said the state would make the cut by borrowing, as it has in the past, from reserves for such programs as Medicaid and state employee health insurance. The money would be repaid in the budget for the year beginning July 1.

Professors turn to current events, say no to textbooks

SPOKANE (AP) — The frequent changes in the former Soviet Union and nearby countries have forced college professors to abandon textbooks in favor of newspapers, television and other sources of up-to-date information.

Matvei Finkel, an instructor at Whitworth College, will bring a television to his weekly course on the disintegration of the Soviet Union so students can watch the Cable News Network.

"Before, I could have my class notes ready a week ahead. Now, I have to keep listening to the radio on my way to the class," said Finkel, a Russian emigre.

Gonzaga University political science professor Michael Connolly will spend this spring and summer planning changes for his class, the politics of Communist nations.

Eastern Washington University government professor Shane Mahoney, who has taught a class on the Soviet system for more than 20 years, said his spring course may be the last devoted to that subject.

Not having an up-to-date textbook is just a minor reason for ending that course, entitled "Introduction to Soviet Politics."

"We had two reasons for studying the Soviet Union. It was the system that represented a form of government that had not existed before. And two, it was the single largest adversary of our system of government," Mahoney said this week.

Neither applies now.

He said the best option may be including the material on a course on totalitarian government.

Mahoney said he gets some satisfaction knowing that a government he considered inhumane has self-destructed.

Statesboro, GSU discussing Bird's Pond plan Former waste water treatment facility may be turned into recreation park

By Dennis Smith
Staff Writer

Bird's Pond, a former waste water treatment facility, may soon be converted into a recreation area for GSU students.

Dr. Jack Nolen, vice-president of student affairs, submitted a three-part plan to the Statesboro City Council last Tuesday for development of the proposed area.

GSU and the city have been negotiating a transfer of the land since last year.

Statesboro currently has the rights to the area.

The citizens of Statesboro will also have access to the recreation facility when it is completed.

"Funding is a key issue," Nolen said. "As far as state funds are concerned, right now we are limited."

He said much of the funding would have to come from outside sources.

Phase I of the plan would keep the natural state of the site. It would include nature trails and be used as an extension of activities.

Phase II would use the full 60 acres of the site, including re-filling the pond (which has been drained), adding more recreation sites and additional parking.

The final phase would include constructing more recreational areas and the development of the surrounding areas to become a full-fledged park.

The city has been asked to look into the matter and approve it. The city attorney is looking into the legality of the land transfer.

Nolen said that Bird's Pond is a wetland area, and that could be a problem with its development.

"We don't know about the wetlands regulations concerning that area," he said. "One of the first things we will do is ask for a wetlands evaluation."

Nolen said he expects the city to act on the issue soon. The matter is slated for the next council meeting.

City Council resolves beer/wine dispute

By Kevin Hudson
Managing Editor

The Statesboro City Council voted Tuesday to grant a beer and wine license to the Fast-n-Easy store to be constructed on Lanier Drive.

The decision was delayed for several weeks due to confusion over a Georgia law regulating beer and wine sales near college campuses.

The Fast-n-Easy's planned location is adjacent to the Clean Eagle Laundromat, located 47.5 yards across from a wooded area behind Stratford Hall.

The law states that "No person knowingly and intentionally shall sell or offer to sell any wine or malt beverages within 100 yards of any ... college campus." The controversy dealt with whether "college campus" referred to buildings or the actual property line of the school.

The Statesboro City Council granted a beer/wine selling license to the owner of the Clean Eagle Laundry. A beer & wine store is planned to be built adjacent to the building. (Photo by Jesse Stribling)

According to a letter sent to city council by the Georgia Department of Revenue, the law could be translated to denote either definition, and the department would stand by whichever action the council took.

City attorney Sam Brannen suggested interpreting the law to mean where people gathered, not wooded and open areas.

National Condom Week Planned

By Jennifer Booth
Staff Writer

Safe sex, sexually transmitted diseases and AIDS could be thought about more frequently next week by GSU students as National Condom Week approaches.

National Condom Week begins on Valentine's Day, February 14, but campus events will begin on February 12.

The week-long schedule of events, which will take place at the Student Union, is primarily sponsored by Health Services, but the Student Government Association, Union Productions and the Triangle Club are also involved.

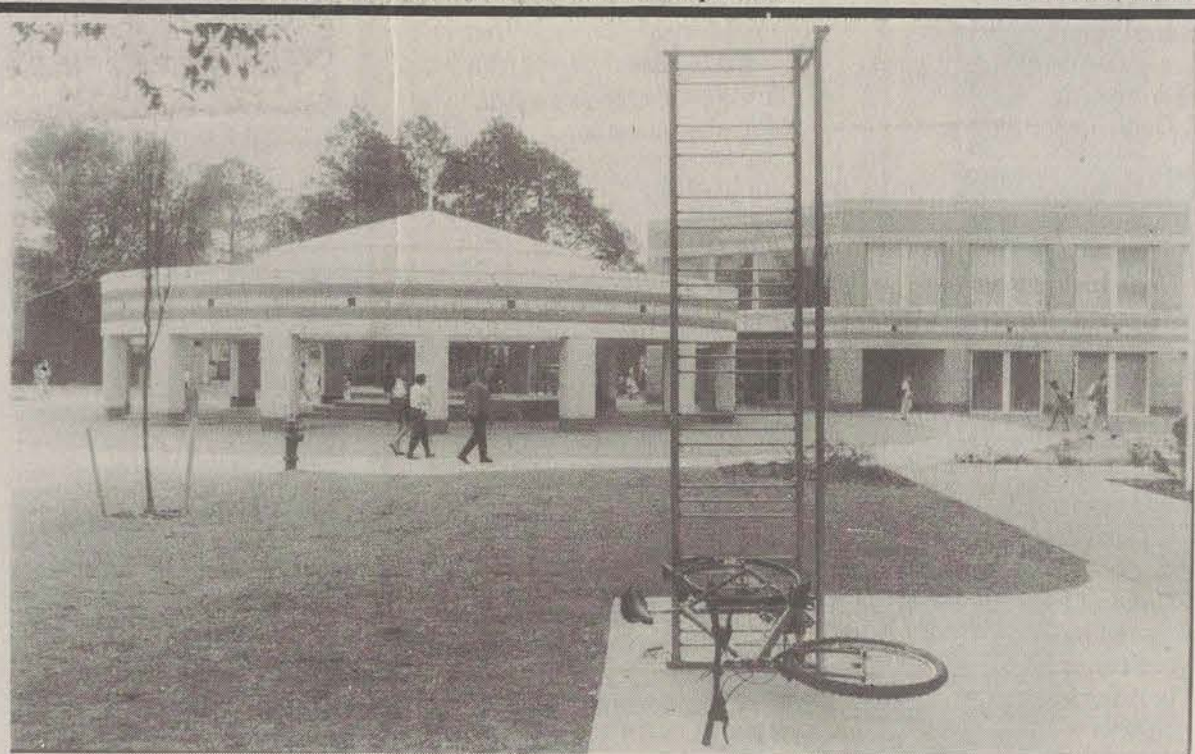

Two of the events that will take place are a banner judging contest and a condom toss. There will also be literature tables set up and videos shown on sexual responsibility.

Whitney Himes, GSU Health Educator, said she felt it was important to coordinate activities for condom week because most universities give some sort of recognition to the week.

Himes said, "We look at it as just another opportunity to promote sex education on campus."

Jeff Barker, publicity coordinator for SGA, said one of the reasons SGA got involved was to try and get condom machines placed in residence halls.

MBA degree no guarantee of job

COLUMBUS, Ga. (AP) — In the '80s, graduates carrying "master of business administration" on their sheepskins often commanded starting salaries of $50,000 or more right out of college.

But in the '90s, the luster of the MBA may be fading. Recent reports show that job prospects for college graduates, particularly those with MBA degrees, are at a record low.

University of Georgia student Mark Athey — one of the approximately 160 UGA students who will carry MBAs into the job market in June — describes his attitude during the current chaotic economic times as cautiously optimistic.

"What it requires is a lot more of your attention. ... You have to go the extra mile," Athey, 30, said of the formula needed for MBA graduates to find jobs now. "So far it looks pretty good. I've had seven interviews in the last month. I haven't heard anything positive or negative, so I guess I'm still in the ball game."

There aren't a lot of jobs waiting for this year's crop of MBA graduates, according to Northwestern University's Lindquist-Endicott study on job prospects. The survey revealed that this year's estimated 1 million college graduates will face the worst job market in 20 years, putting demand for MBAs on the decline.

But even in the face of mass layoffs and corporate downsizing, Athey said he sees no need for serious worrying yet.

"It's a long recession, but it's a shallow recession. The companies in the '80s grew faster and grew too fat, but now I think we're just seeing a slimming down of companies. They're getting leaner and meaner."

GSU student sentenced to 3 months of shock incarceration

By Misty McPherson
News Editor

A GSU student received 90 days shock incarceration (boot camp), after pleading guilty and being charged with two counts of stealing bicycles and four counts of breaking into automobiles.

James Haskins pleaded guilty Jan. 31 to all charges and was sentenced to 90 days shock incarceration, three years probation, ordered to pay a $1000 fine and retribution to the victims. Haskins was also banished from the judicial circuit for three years.

He left for boot camp in Soperton Feb. 4.

"We're happy to see that some people finally have to pay dearly for ripping off GSU students," said Ken Brown, chief of police at GSU.

The charges against Haskins stem from three arrests: Oct. 1, Nov. 14 and Dec. 5.

Prior to one of these arrests, Haskins stole an eight year-old's bicycle that the child had received two days earlier as a birthday gift.

"I hope for the next 90 days when [Haskins] looks in the drill sergeants face ... I hope that drill sergeant sees some of those same tears rolling down his cheeks," said Brown referring to the tears the eight year old probably cried after his bike was stolen.

"The University's Police Department's stance is to aggressively prosecute all criminal offenses that occur within our jurisdiction," said Brown. "I will push for a minimum of shock incarceration and I would like to see more severe punishment."

Brown said there has been an increase in car break-ins in the past and urged students to keep their valuables locked in their trunks and record the serial numbers of any valuable items inside the car.

Students produce TV show

GSU News Service

A 15 minute student-produced television show highlighting campus community events has begun airing on Northland Cable Channel 3 every Friday at 6 p.m.

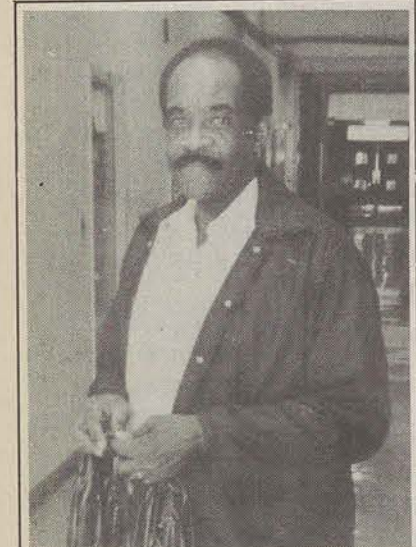

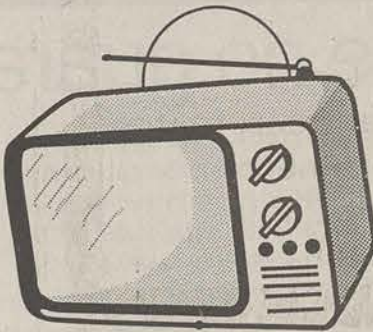

The show, "Collegiate Calendar," is a student produced show designed to inform residents and students off-campus about university programs and activities. It will detail up-coming campus events and profile key individuals in the community and university.

"I wanted to develop a show that gave the students a unique educational experience, and at the same time serve Statesboro and the university," said David Burns, an instructor in the Communication Arts Department and the developer of the show.

"There are a lot of people who have retired to Statesboro to take advantage of the cultural and academic activities a university town has to offer."

The show is rebroadcast over the weekend and will run through winter quarter.

Watch those hand signals!

What's friendly here can be rude over there

By Alfred Borcover
Chicago Tribune

When President Bush swung through Australia on his 10-day trade blitz Down Under and in the Orient earlier this month, he flashed a V-for-victory sign to an Aussie crowd. What he obviously didn't realize was that when he flashed the sign with his palm toward him, he gave the Australians the equivalent of our rude single-finger gesture.

Richard Nixon once stepped off his airplane in South America and gave the waiting crowd an OK sign with his thumb and forefinger forming a circle. The only problem was in that culture, it meant the same as the single-finger gesture.

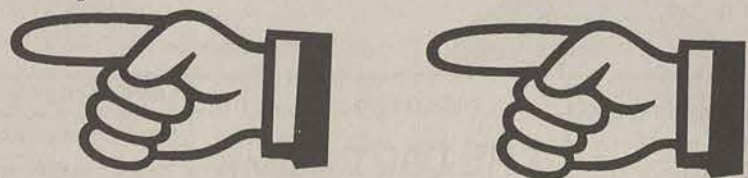

Those two public figures are not the only ones who have conveyed the wrong messages through body language. Anyone who has traveled overseas undoubtedly is guilty of at least one wrong gesture.

In this era of high-fives, low-fives and raised fists, it's difficult to know what everyone's hands are trying to say.

What you do with your hands, fingers and feet can win you friends or a punch in the mouth, depending on what country you're in. The art of gesturing sometimes gets so delicate that perhaps it's best to keep our hands at our sides at all times.

Americans, not known for their linguistic skills, tend to gesture with their hands when abroad, a sincere effort to communicate. That being the case, it pays to know what's right and what isn't when using body language.

Or, as Roger Axtell calls it, "cross-cultural communications." Axtell, retired vice president for worldwide marketing for Parker Pen Co., recently wrote a book called "Gestures" (Wiley & Sons, $9.95).

"Any book on understanding human behavior is tricky stuff," Axtell admitted. "No two people behave in precisely the same way. Nor do people from the same culture all perform exactly the same gestures and body language uniformly."

Axtell's objective: To help people learn "right from rude, to help avoid misunderstandings."

Besides the V-for-victory and OK signs, two other gestures that get misinterpreted are the "thumbs-up" and "Hook 'em, horns." The aforementioned OK sign can mean "worthless" in France, or a certain part of the female anatomy in Brazil, Axtell said in an interview.

"Thumbs up" is perfectly all right, except in Australia, because there it means roughly the same as the OK sign in Brazil," he continued. "In certain other scattered areas, it's also a rude gesture. You don't want to hitchhike in Nigeria with that gesture. It's a rude signal. If you want to hitchhike there, you just flap your hand up and down."

The "Hook 'em, Horns" sign, formed by making a fist and extending the index and little fingers, commonly is used by fans of the University of Texas Longhorns. Use that gesture in Italy, said Axtell, and you're in trouble. It signifies impotence and stupidity. In Wisconsin, however, the sign means "bull-bleep." In Brazil and Venezuela, however, the horns signify good luck.

Besides hand gestures, Axtell warned of two other common things Americans should keep in mind: The simple shaking of hands and physical closeness.

Even handshakes can get you in trouble. "It's a very Western gesture, but it's not the only way to greet people," Axtell said. "The Japanese bow is not an act of subservience, but a symbol of respect and humility. In Southeast Asia, people press their palms together and bow their heads. Maori tribesmen in New Zealand rub noses and Tibetans stick their tongues out."

But handshakes have their nuances. Americans, he said, are big on firm handshakes. "None of that limp-fish stuff. But in Japan, parents teach kids not to give a firm handshake because it's aggressive, impolite. Kids also are taught not to look the person in the eye because that's intimidating, rude."

"So a lot of Americans go to Japan, shake hands, get a limp handshake and the person won't look them in the eye. It makes the American feel uncomfortable and vice versa. So that's where cultures collide."

On spatial relationships, the proximity in which people stand when conversing, Americans are in the middle.

"Americans like to stand about an arm's length from someone. If I got closer to you, you would instantly know that I am penetrating your space," Axtell said. And thus begins what Axtell calls the conversational tango, with one person moving closer, the other stepping back.

Axtell said people in the Middle East and Latin America have smaller "bubbles" and move in close during a conversation. Not only do they move in, but they have a tendency to touch your arm or lapel, and for most Americans, that's uncomfortable.

So what's safe? "According to anthropologists," said Axtell, "there's one main gesture that has never been misunderstood. The smile. They claim it's the only universal gesture."

For American women traveling alone, Axtell said there are a lot of general rules they should follow. Women, he advised, should be careful about touching, under any circumstances, lest it be interpreted the wrong way. He also suggested very conservative dress. "Don't do anything that could ever be considered flirtatious."

What's particularly helpful about Axtell's book is his country-by-country listings of what people should do and shouldn't do.

Axtell cited a communications expert who estimated that humans can produce up to 700,000 physical signs.

Avid sports fans may have seen most of them.

When a baseball manager or third-base coach signals for a hit-and-run or a pitch-out, or a football coach signals in plays to a quarterback or linebacker, it boggles the mind to think what they might be saying to foreign visitors watching the game.

FROM OUR FILES

Strict room inspection will include 12 points

The following story appeared in The George-Anne Jan. 7, 1950. It is a prime example of how GSU, then Georgia Teachers College, has changed in the past 40 years.

Well Girls, more regulations. This time it is room-cleaning. Room inspections will be made in all three women's dormitories, plus Sanford between the hours of 11 a.m. and 1 p.m. A check will be made of 12 points: (1) Beds Made, (2) floors swept, (3) trash cans emptied, (4) window sills cleaned and uncluttered, (5) "Coke" bottles returned to crates, (6) kitchen dishes returned, (7) lavatory and mirror cleaned, (8) dresser and desk dusted and straightened, (9) clothes and shoes put away, (10) trash not swept into halls, and (12) any other reason.

In addition to the room cleaning regulations, new changes and additions found in the "T" book [student conduct code], page 37, have recently been set up by the administration.

Dress (women) to be added to page 58: Until arrangements are made for dressing and undressing in the gym all girls are to wear their raincoats or other long coats when going to and from the gym. Girls may go to the post office for their mail provided they wear their coats buttoned up and do not sit down and visit while so dressed.

Girls are never to go to the dining hall or to class, other than Physical Education, in gym suits or blue jeans. Exceptions are made for field trips.

Girls are not permitted to go to classes, to the dining hall, or to town with their hair rolled up.

Raincoats, or other long coats, must be worn (buttoned up) over bathing suits when going to and from the swimming pool.

Attending athletic events (women)

All girls are permitted to go to varsity basketball games, veteran's games, laboratory high school games.

Girls attending local football games off-campus are expected to be back in the dormitory by 10:30.

To be added under Senior Dating: Senior girls have the privilege of staying out until 11:00 during the spring quarter.

Under Junior Dating 10b, page 54, entire paragraph changed to read as follows.

Juniors may have dates on or off campus on Saturday and Sunday afternoons, but only on campus Saturday and Sunday nights. Church dates are permitted Sunday evenings. In addition, they may have three dates a week at night, on or off campus.

Used jeans are hot commodity

By Nancy Ross-Flanigan
Knight-Ridder Newspapers

Buttoning your fly may not seem like a big deal — unless you live in Russia, Wales, West Africa or another part of the world where Levi's 501 jeans are hard to come by.

The worldwide passion for comfortably worn, button-fly jeans gave 29-year-old Stacy Flower of Seattle, Wash., an idea for a hot new business.

With $10,000 of her own cash, Flower set up collection sites around her state and started a toll-free phone line customers can use to find out where to convert their old jeans into cash.

Three months later, she's doing so well she's about to expand into California and New York and maybe Michigan.

Flower started with a store near the University of Washington campus where you can get cash on the spot for jeans.

Then she worked out a fund-raising deal with her old high school in which students get $7 or $8 per pair of jeans (no holes or stains, please), and the school gets to keep a dollar for every pair collected.

She also has set up fund-raisers with a support group for families of missing children and with other schools and youth organizations.

Most of the denim duds she collects go to Japan or Great Britain, where they retail for around $100.

"But I don't get anywhere close to that," Flower quickly adds.

The jeans-for-cash caper is just the newest phase of Flower's 1-year-old export business.

Ethical problems causing crimes

Give me a minute to get up on my moral soapbox.

Okay, here we go. A disturbing trend here at GSU is the lack of morality among the students. I attended a seminar on campus violence last week where I heard about a recent rise in the violence of crimes on campus. Included among the perpetrations was an incident in which a sawed-off shotgun was pulled on a student.

A friend of mine works in the University Store and he's always telling me about some theft or another occurring there. Some students steal books and then try to resell them. Others steal expensive clothes, including GSU jackets. Now I know times are tough (especially for college students), but if you're going to steal, at least make it something you really need.

If you haven't eaten for a couple of days or if you can't afford a text you really need for a class, lift a honey bun or a book. But if you haven't spent you money on things you didn't need, this shouldn't be necessary.

Some have suggested that an increase in crime can be expected with the continued growth here at GSU, and they're right. But that's not the only problem.

The ethical fiber of this nation seems to be slowly deteriorating. I'm not talking about anything religious here. You don't have to be a Christian, Jew or Muslim to have basic values.

The main cause for this is the breakdown of the family structure in America. I happen to have been brought up in a Christian home and I still cling to most of the tenants of that religion, but I'm not a terribly religious person. My values come from what my family - through their words and actions - taught me was right and wrong.

I believe that we're about 90 percent sponge at birth. Most of what we become depends on our environment.

POINTS TO PONDER...

Jason Lewis

If my mother hadn't read to me long before I understood the words, I probably would've never known the satisfaction that comes from writing.

If my father hadn't tossed me a ball long before I could catch it, I might have never known the exaltations of sports.

If my brother hadn't beat the crap out of me before I could defend myself, I might have never accepted the concept of passive resistance.

My point is that our developmental environment determines who and what we are and will be. It's no surprise that so many young people turn to crime when they have no other model to emulate.

A child raised in an environment where the most successful people are criminals have very little choice in life. They can follow the patterns of dishonesty they've seen lead to wealth or they can defy tradition and try to achieve success honestly. It's hard to do the latter.

Of course, the "upper class" can be just as crooked as a drug dealer on the street. If a child is raised in a home where his parents cheat on their taxes and his dad embezzles money from his company or cheats his customers, he's just as likely as a poor street kid to turn out bad. Except, he'll probably do it in a coat and tie.

Worse yet are the role models that teach violent means of dealing with people. If a man beats his wife and abuses his kids - physically, emotionally or sexually - only an unusually strong child will be able to defy his legacy.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Adoption, not Abortion, should be the alternative

Dear Editor,

I am responding to your article in the Jan. 28 issue of the George-Anne. The piece was entitled "The problem with 'pro-life' arguments." This particular article held my interest more than any other that your paper has ever printed since I have been here at GSU. I am a third quarter senior and have seen most every issue of the George-Anne for the past three and a half years.

Gary, you can take pride in the fact that you have written one of the most annoying articles I have ever read. I have a strong feeling that your article was simply meant to provoke. It seemed not to have a great deal of research to support the views contained in it. This letter speaks directly to Gary and any other person who might hold his view of the 'pro-life' movement.

I want to first shed light on my reasons for writing this letter. It is not a letter to gain some sort of revenge against Gary Witte. Rather, this letter is to shed some light on the cause of the groups who are against abortion.

My wife and I attend the First Baptist Church of Brooklet and am one of the many people who helped to display the "ugly propaganda" on Highway 80. I would like to say to you, Gary, that this is not the propaganda that you claim it to be. It is a statement by a group of people that believe greatly in the sanctity of life - every life.

Granted, I do not go along with people who would make threats against those in the 'pro-choice' movement. This is answering one wrong with another. I do, though, believe greatly in the right to free expression. The crosses are simply an expression of love for every life that God has created and will create.

We are Christians who want to make a statement about the blessed gift of life that God has given us. Even a person who has no belief in God, must hold some value to the rights of an innocent baby to live.

I would like to now address the actual issue at hand. This being the subject of abortion. Gary, you stated in your article that women forced to have their children go through "Nine months - and more - worth of punishment."

Have you ever gone to a couple who have been blessed with children through adoption and asked them about their punishment? How bad do they despise their situation of being "forced" to raise a child that some woman decided she could not raise?

Though by blood it may not be their child, I have direct witness to the fact that adopting parents love their

King was a real leader

Dear Editor,

I was deeply disturbed by the letter in your [paper] stating that Martin Luther King does not deserve a holiday. The writer vehemently expressed his reasons for resenting the celebration of the holiday.

This individual "rests his objection on two main points: (1) we don't give equal shrift to more of the country's real leaders, and (2) we are asked to honor an orator who, in the overall scheme of things, was not the figurehead while he lived that he has become since he died."

First of all, Martin Luther King, Jr. was a real leader. He dedicated his life to civil rights in order to help mankind to live with, and respect each other. You say that we should honor George Washington, our first president, and Abraham Lincoln, our sixteenth president. I feel that we give them just credit by placing them in the many history books in our nation's schools.

These men were great, but Martin was equally great. If you feel that these two men aren't honored enough, then why don't you have your own celebration for them? You complain, yet you offer no solution to what you perceive to be a problem.

Secondly, you say that

Martin is more famous dead than alive. What is your problem with this? Isn't it better to die an honorable death than to live a shameful life?

You also want to know why we don't have a John F. Kennedy Day. We don't have one because you haven't put your nose to the grindstone to work for one. If you really desired a holiday for JFK, you would petition for it. Remember, this is America and you have the right to do as you please.

You also state that you "have a third reason for opposing the holiday: MLK's plagiarism on his dissertation." I do not condone plagiarism, yet no man is perfect. I am quite sure that you have done some unethical things in your lifetime. People in glass houses should never throw stones, as the old cliché goes.

I know that you have every right to state your opinion on any subject, but when you have to make excuses for an attitude of bigotry, then maybe you should just keep that opinion to yourself.

Lastly, you concluded your letter by saying that "the only King I respect is Elvis, and the only January holiday I respect is New Year's." Well, I hate to disappoint you, but Elvis IS

Whites aren't only racists

Dear Editor,

I am writing this letter in the hope that it will make someone open their eyes to the reverse prejudice that is going on and has been going on in this country for a long time. Before I go any further, let me say that I am NOT prejudiced.

I am neither a member of the "KKK" nor am I a member of any white supremacist group, past, present or future. What I am is tired. Tired of hearing about the "Negro College Fund." Tired of hearing about the "Miss African-American" contest.

Tired of hearing about black leaders in some of the larger cities in this country accusing the white population as a whole of conspiring against all blacks by putting a majority of the pawn shops (where it would be easier for blacks to buy guns to kill each other with) and liquor stores (so that all blacks would become alcoholics) in the black neighborhoods.

I'll admit the third gripe sounds so outrageous that some people will think it is a lie. This is not just some hideous story that I made up. I only wish I had recorded the news the night this story ran about six months ago. I realize these are some touchy subjects, but I have to say something because obviously no one else has the "BALLS" to.

The Negro College fund, correct me if I'm wrong, was organized a long time ago when it was harder for blacks to obtain funding for college than whites. There is no more need for this since it is just as easy for a black student to get financial aid as it is for a white, yellow, red, green, purple, blue, or chartreuse student.

Don't believe me, do you? Well, just stop by your friendly financial aid office and pick up a copy of the 1992-93 financial aid form. Nowhere in these forms are you asked anything about race or color. If someone attempted to organize a "Caucasian College Fund," be an all-star?

Should Magic

Earvin "Magic" Johnson has decided to play in the NBA All-Star game and in the Olympic Games this summer in Barcelona, Spain - lovely.

I don't have a problem with Magic playing on the Olympic team. He will practice with them, travel with them, he will actually be a part of that team. He deserves to play on the team.

What he does not deserve is to play on the All-Star team. He doesn't have All-Star statistics this season. Actually, he doesn't have ANY statistics this season - he's RETIRED!

The All-Star team is supposed to be composed of that season's best players. Magic is not one of this season's best players. He couldn't be, he's RETIRED!

Baseball had a similar problem a couple of years ago when Mike Schmidt was elected to the All-Star team after he retired. Mike did the honorable thing and declined to play.

Admittedly, Schmidt retired for a different reason (he got old) than Magic did, but that isn't the point. The point is they are RETIRED!

It's not Magic's fault that he got elected, stupid people with All-Star ballots are to blame for that part of the situation. However, it is his fault that he has decided to play.

I have a problem with perennial All-Stars as well. In other words, I have a problem with anybody on a team that doesn't deserve to be there. If you aren't having a great year, you shouldn't be on the team. Unfortunately, we've seen it happen so many times in the past in every sport. Fans should not elect All-Star teams - coaches should elect the All-Star teams in every sport.

True, you won't always get a perfect team, but you'll be a hell of a lot closer than we are now.

Magic is a great player - just not this year. Since he wasn't a great player this season, he shouldn't be in the All-Star game. Tim Hardaway, the player Magic is replacing in the starting lineup, has been very gracious about the whole thing, according to Magic.

Like poor old Tim had much of a choice. NBA Commissioner David Stern added Magic to the team and basically said that he would start.

I guess Hardaway has taken be screwed over pretty well, especially since if he had protested he would've been vilified by everybody on Earth, but me and there's little solace in that.

If Magic wants to be on the Olympic team, that's another story entirely. Great players deserve to be rewarded with being picked to be on Olympic teams. Magic is a great spokesman for the sport and the country. He deserves to be on the team.

Some would say that the All-Star team is a great team as well and he deserves to be on it. True it is a great team, but the point of that team is to honor the best players of that season, not the best players overall. This may seem a bit contradictory, but it's not.

The best players do not always have the best seasons. They may be having a good season, but there is always someone having a great season that deserves to be honored for his achievements. That is what the All-Star game is for, not to honor retired players.

That's what the Schick Legends Game is for.

The GSU Eagles take the floor Saturday night against the Georgia State Panthers in what is being billed as the grudge match of the season.

The Eagles who are undefeated in the Trans America Athletic Conference (7-0) and 16-4 overall will try and move a little closer to the road to the FINAL FOUR.

The game against Georgia State holds extra motivational factors besides moving toward the NCAA Tournament.

Neither team is very tall, so both rely on a high speed style play to win.

The Eagles take the floor with a balanced attack with four starters averaging double figures.

Tony Windless leads the Eagles in scoring averaging 18 points a game followed by Dexter Abrams with 16.

In addition, Charlton Young is averaging 13, Calvin

7:30 p.m. Saturday at Hanner Fieldhouse

Sinkfield 15 and Wendell Charles with nine, round out the Eagle's starting five.

The Panthers, however, have had an up and down season.

The Panthers, who are 4-4 in the TAAC and 9-11 overall, are paced by senior forward Phillip Luckydo, who is averaging 22 points, and junior Zavian Smith averaging 16.

Despite being in fourth place in the conference, the Panthers still have a shot at hosting one of the TAAC tournament brackets. This makes the trip into Statesboro almost a must win situation.

The Eagles lead the series 34-9, but have lost two of the last three meetings.

The Eagles have compiled a 17-4 mark against the Panthers in Statesboro.

GSU went into the Panther's cage earlier this season and captured an 88-87 victory led by Windless, who scored 28 points.

The Georgia State home crowd was large in number and not very receptive to the Eagle team, coaches, cheerleaders or mascot.

Last year, the Panthers came in and squeaked out a victory as well as vandalized the GSU campus by defacing Hanner Fieldhouse with bumper stickers reading "Georgia State University ... the REAL G-S-U."

The Eagles are in pursuit of an unblemished record in the TAAC which is a feat that has not been accomplished since the home-and-home format began.

The Eagles now has the second best start in TAAC history at 7-0. Arkansas -Little Rock holds the current record with a 9-0 conference start in the 1986-87 season.

The Eagles hope to surpass this feat.

Windless, who has assumed the leadership role on the team, said the Eagles are focused on their task.

"We know everyone wants to knock us off, but we are determined to work harder and harder to maintain our place on top," he said.

The Eagles season has been very impressive with five of their seven victories in the TAAC coming on the road.

The Eagles will host five of their seven remaining conference games.

GSU is 9-1 this season averaging 102 points at home while averaging 83 points on the road.

The Eagles are urging all of their fans to come out to "Jam the Gym" Saturday and show Georgia State what a real GSU crowd is like.

Ladies Eagles fall to USC

By Eric Weisenmiller
Sports Editor

The Lady Eagle basketball team suffered a crushing 67-24 defeat at the hands of the Ladies of the University of South Carolina last Monday evening in Columbia.

GSU shot a dismal 9 for 64 (14 percent) from the field to score a record-setting low 24 points.

The Lady Gamecocks surrendered the first two points of the game then went on to grab a lead which increased as the game went on.

USC lead by a 30-10 margin at the half. In the second half the Lady Gamecocks outscored the Lady Eagles 37-12.

USC sustained an impenetrable force inside the paint. Michelle Murray and Marsha Williams were responsible for 34 points and 24 rebounds.

Gwen Thomas, Jill Dunn, Beverly Copeland and Tara Anderson each scored four points for GSU.

The defeat was the worst Lady Eagle loss since a 97-47 drubbing by the University of Georgia in 1986.

Coach Drema Greer cited the intimidating play of the USC post players as the cause for the disappointing play of her team.

The Lady Eagles dropped their overall record to 10-11 (2-5 in the TAAC) will face Georgia State in a conference game on Thursday at 5 p.m. in Atlanta.

'Jam the gym'

By Rod Swinson
Staff Writer

The GSU Eagles are inviting everyone to JAM THE GYM Saturday night when $100 dollars will be given to the most spirited group of basketball fans.

Celebrity judges will vote on the loudest most spirited group at the game and award the prize following the feature event held in Hanner Fieldhouse at 7:30.

Introducing in one corner, a heavy weight from Statesboro Georgia-- "The Georgia Southern Eagles.

Introducing in the opposite corner, from Atlanta --The Georgia State Panthers.

Hanner will be the sight of the grudge match of the season between the Eagles and the Panthers.

The Eagles are urging the entire campus to come out and help defend the campus' integrity by jamming the gym to the rafters and showing their opponents that Statesboro is the home of THE REAL GSU.

Last year Georgia State arrived on our campus and managed to steal a victory and also left their mark "on" Hanner Fieldhouse.

Hanner was defaced with bumper stickers reading "Georgia State University... the REAL G-S-U."

This year the Eagles went to Atlanta and pulled out a victory in front of a huge Panther crowd.

The victory was not taken well by the Panther fans, as they expressed their sentiments to the team, coaches, cheerleaders and Eagle.

The Eagles are urging all campus organizations and fans to come out and show their support and take home the prize given after the final buzzer.

University of Georgia, said it is virtually a coin toss in trying to decipher what will be the fate of MBA graduates this year.

"I think we have experienced what every other school in the country has experienced, and that's that companies just aren't hiring like they have in the past," she said.

Britt Shirley, MBA director for Columbus College, said job placement isn't a major problem for the 120 MBA students there. The reason is simple.

"We don't anticipate any problems because 80-85 percent of our students are already employed," Shirley said.

"They're getting their MBA because their employers told them they would be more attractive to them. I think the problems we're seeing now is that too many people tried to put an MBA degree in place of experience."

And experience is exactly what companies are looking for today, said Joyce Fowler, recruiting manager for Total System Services Inc.

"In terms of an entry-level position, we look at the (MBA) degree in a limited amount. We look more at the person's skills, what they can do," Ms. Fowler said.

Cable TV rates questioned

Lee Johnson of Statesboro CATV was invited to attend the city council meeting to discuss the reasons for the recent $1.50 per month increase in standard cable TV rates.

Johnson said the reason could easily be justified easily. "Two words - program cost," he said.

Johnson said the 28 standard channels were the ones that have been increasing in cost. CNN, in particular, had increased its charges because of the cost of the Gulf War coverage.

He also mentioned the $1 million expansion of the system that would allow a greater selection of channels.

Annexation plan presented

The city council also heard the first reading of the revised city annexation plan. This plan, would place much of the GSU community within the city limits.

According to the new proposal, a referendum on the proposal would go to voters during the summer of 1993, and if passed the areas in the plan would be incorporated into the city Jan. 1, 1994.

The original proposal was scrapped due to time feasibility problems highlighted by a University of Georgia study.

The license was granted by a four to one vote, with councilman John Newton casting the dissenting vote.

Several questions were raised during the debate. Newton said Oxford Field, which is within the 100 yard legal limit, could be built up in the future. He asked if that could pose legal problems.

Brannen replied that the law deals strictly with the present since there is no way to know what could happen in the future.

The building is located only 86 feet from GSU's Job Network Center, as opposed to the 100 yards required by law.

The request was unanimously denied.

Another license was requested and granted for Valentino's, which is now the Peking Restaurant.

City councilman Eddie Rushing asked Brannen about the legality of selling across from a nearby church.
