Rap Star to Peddle Chicken

LOUISVILLE, Ky. (AP) — Kentucky Fried Chicken will introduce its newest product — Honey BBQ chicken — in a television commercial featuring rap star Hammer.

The 60-second spot, which begins airing nationwide next Monday, shows Hammer's tour bus breaking down in the fictional town of Lake Edna. The misfortune is eased when a youngster offers Hammer and his band buckets of honey-flavored barbecue chicken from KFC.

The commercial featuring Hammer and his entourage on tour not only promotes the new chicken product, but it also reminds viewers that KFC is sponsoring the entertainer's 130-city tour. A song from Hammer's latest release is featured in the spot.

19-year-old Ga. Tech graduate to attend Yale

MARIETTA, Ga. (AP) — Jenny Rooke, 19, wants to get in some sun tanning time this summer before going off to college at Yale.

First, though, she will get her bachelor's degree in physics from Georgia Tech.

While she's sunbathing, she will study five languages and read a backlog of published research in genetics. Then she wants to get her pilot's license — all before packing to go to Yale.

The daughter of Sharon and Kenny Rooke of Marietta learned the alphabet before she learned to walk, skipped high school and entered college as a 13-year-old. Two years at Southern Tech rounded out her home schooling.

She will receive her degree in physics from Georgia Tech in June. Now she has a full scholarship from the National Science Foundation to get her doctorate in genetics.

Beach officials say Spring Break was calmer than usual

NORTH MYRTLE BEACH, S.C. (AP) — Revelers carried beer and mixed drinks in public despite a police crackdown, but students on an annual pilgrimage to North Myrtle Beach for Easter weekend were much calmer than in past years, officials said.

"I have to pinch myself to make sure it's real," said North Myrtle Beach City Manager Bill Moss while he surveyed the boisterous, yet controlled crowd near The Horseshoe in the Ocean Drive section of the city.

Despite the crowd's restraint, many beachgoers were unhappy about the beach's new no-alcohol policy.

"We think this sucks," said Randy Floyd, a longtime North Myrtle Beach visitor from Gastonia, N.C. "A lot of my friends didn't come because they couldn't drink on the beach. They said they wouldn't have any fun."

Floyd remembers the days when the police didn't bother people with beer on the beach because the crowds were too dense to move through.

However, some visitors disagreed.

"A lot of people stayed home," said Mike Bolognesi, a University of North Carolina-Chapel Hill senior. "This is a younger crowd down here one weekend a year. They should be more cooperative with us and relax the laws."

Officials said they had more luck enforcing the rules this year.

GSU 'guilty' of discrimination

Department of Education: Terminate contracts with Forest Heights

By Misty McPherson

News Editor

In a split decision, the Department of Education, ruled April 9 that GSU was discriminating against blacks by contracting with the Forest Heights Country Club, but found no evidence to support the allegations that GSU discriminated in the selection of student trainers.

"I've been saying all along these people are wrong and they know it," said Richard Peters, complainant and former GSU maintenance worker.

"Those people have hurt me for no reason.

"The days of racism and Jim Crow tactics are over and they might as well get use to it."

Over the past three years, Peters has filed complaints with the University System of Georgia Board of Regents, the Office of Fair Employment Practices and Equal Employee Opportunity Commission and the Office of Civil Rights (OCR), charging GSU for discriminating against blacks because of the school's association with the country club and for discriminating against him and firing him for his complaints.

Each agency rejected Peters' allegations. Peters' filed an appeal with the OCR claiming their findings were inaccurate and won the case.

GSU was found in violation of Title VI of the Civil Rights Act of 1964, which prohibits discrimination on the bases of race and sex in any program or activity receiving Federal financial assistance.

The university was guilty of breaking this because the GSU golf team is under contractual relations with the country club.

The team uses the golf facilities for practice and tournaments.

GSU must show proof to the OCR by June 30, that all contracts with the country club have been terminated. The school claims it will not renew the contract once it expires June 15.

"Both the University and the Forest Heights Country Club are interested in leaving open the possibility of working together again in the future for the benefit of the golf program," said Ruth Ann Rogers, compliance officer, in a prepared statement. "In the meantime, Georgia Southern will seek other practice facilities for the golf team, including expansion and improvement of the University's practice range on the Paulson Stadium grounds."

The university would red no other comment on the situation besides the prepared statement.

Despite a statement by the country club in the contract with GSU, saying they don't discriminate "on the basis of race, color, national origin, handicap or age in programs

Stratford Hall should be open by this fall

By Stacy Graham

Staff Writer

The $1.2 million renovation of Stratford Hall should be complete and ready to open by September said Pat Burkett, director of housing.

Stratford Hall, which burned in January of 1989, will hold 130 beds and is intended to be co-ed, Burkett said.

Instead of tearing the building down, it was rebuilt because of insurance reasons. "The building was insured, and we could not use the money for demolition," said Burkett.

Almost everything in Stratford will be renovated. The room walls were intact, but the rooms and bathrooms were gutted, floor lounges were made, the wiring and plumbing will be redone, and each room will have individually controlled heating and cooling.

In addition, there will be phone jacks at each room desk, cable TV, and microwaves and televisions in each lounge area.

Stratford will be co-ed by sides. One side will be male, the other side will be female. "It will be the same floor, but opposite sections," said Burkett.

Also in the works is the groundbreaking of the new residence halls to be built behind Johnson Hall. This residence hall will be the first new residence hall added since 1971,

State phone system changing

G-A Staff Reports

Statesboro Telephone Company customers recently were notified of a change in the way Georgia long-distance calls will be made starting May 3. However, what residents of Statesboro may not know are the reasons behind the new dialing procedure.

Since the 912 area code was introduced to Georgia in 1954, "the state has experienced unprecedented growth," said Statesboro Telephone President Harry S. Mathews.

Along with a steady gain in population, Georgia has seen continuing demand for new communications services such as FAX machines, second telephone lines, computer modems and cellular telephones. The expanding use of this equipment has in turn increased the amount of telephone numbers needed in this area.

According to Mathews, there will be a national shortage of telephone numbers by 1995. To combat this problem, Georgia is implementing the new dialing procedure and a new 706 area code in north Georgia, creating a new supply of numbers.

"While the new procedure will change some long-standing habits, it should be relatively easy for Statesboro Telephone's customers to get used to," Mathews added. Georgia's 404 area code implemented the 10-digit dialing system in October, and "all went smoothly," according to Southern Bell representatives.

Additionally, "10-digit dialing has been required in many areas of the country for a long time but has been optional in this area," said Mathews.

"The change is a connection to the future," he continued. "It's a means of keeping telecommunications services available to support south

'Habitat' to hold Charity Dinner

By Doug Gross

Assistant News Editor

The GSU chapter of Habitat for Humanity will hold a charity dinner at 5:30 Monday evening at Pizza Inn. Habitat for Humanity is a non-profit organization established to build housing for families in need.

Speaking at the dinner will be Jim Rutledge, president of the Statesboro Habitat for Humanity chapter and Katherine Hunter, whose family was the first to receive housing from Habitat in the Statesboro area.

Hunter's husband, John Hunter, is currently a GSU student and a university employee.

According to GSU chapter president Mary Beth Johnson, any help from the public will be greatly appreciated.

"We are in need of new volunteers, as well as additional ideas for fundraising," Johnson said.

Tickets for the dinner are $10. For additional information contact Johnson at 489-1770.

Dosier named advisor of the year

GSU News Service

Associate Professor of Management Lloyd N. Dosier has been named the GSU's Advisor of the Year in recognition of his outstanding contributions to student advisement.

Dosier was nominated for the award by his department head and was selected by a committee of university deans, chaired by the associate vice-president for academic affairs.

As advisor of the year, he is GSU's nominee for the Ninth American College/National Association of Collegiate Academic Advisors (ACT/NACADA) Region 4 Outstanding Advisor Award to be named in October.

"Professor Dosier is one of the most dedicated advisors I have ever observed," said William W. McCartney, head of the Department of Management. "He advises about 50 human resource management majors annually and clears about 20 to 30 for graduation."

He regularly volunteers for Summer Orientation and Visitation Day and is the coordinator of the Management Department Honors Day. He is also the faculty advisor for the Society of Human Resource Management," said McCartney.

Dosier earned his bachelor's and masters degrees from Georgia State University in 1965 and 1966, respectively. He has been a member of the GSU faculty since 1968.

Blood Knot a success

By James R. Nichols
Guest Writer

Seldom are first efforts by new playwrights as powerful and insightful as Athol Fugard's Blood Knot, first performed in 1960 in South Africa. And seldom have two actors more perfectly fit their roles and discovered their characters as did Mical Whitaker and Rohan Quince Tuesday night in Communication Arts Room 101, a small theater on campus rapidly becoming known for superbly innovative and imaginative productions. If you miss this play, you will have missed first-rate theater in every sense.

Blood Knot is actually two plays. There is the first play, the political one we might all expect about racism in South Africa, about blacks, whites and colored (mixed race), about the South African Registration Act of 1950 and the separation of human beings by bigotry and power. This is Fugard's necessary historical play — timely, full of withering ironies about prejudice, injustice, and the inhumanity of human beings. This is a finely wrought, almost poetic play ("All they need for evidence is a man's dreams"), the moral and philosophical background upon which Fugard then displays his rare genius for character and human drama.

The second play, Fugard's real story, is the human one. It is a story about two colored brothers, one dark and the other light enough to pass for white, who transcend the timely and, in spite of themselves, discover their own humanity. Morris (Quince), the light brother, lives for the future. He saves and plans for a farm in the country. His whiteness, however false, allows him that luxury. Zachariah (Whitaker), the dark brother, lives for the present — "I want woman." His blackness allows him few options in a repressive society. And behind them both is their unseen mother, their heritage and past which constantly insinuates itself into the harsh present and unfulfilled future. "What am I? What do they think I am? What do they think I am when they know what you are?" question Zack and Morris. It doesn't matter who begins the lines. Their significance, their meaning, and their ironies are the same.

Out of frustration Morris and Zachariah take a white woman for a pen pal, and the seven scenes of the play revolve around the poignant comedy and heart breaking tragedy associated with the correspondence. Throughout the action Morris' clock constantly signals the hours in a pathetic and useless mechanical ordering of the chaos of human emotions. Desperately attempting to deny the moral surrealism around them, the brothers read themselves to sleep at night with randomly chosen lines from the Bible.

Zack's real world and Morry's dream world interchange. The brothers chase their future by remembering their past. Like the beautiful butterflies that populate their fantasy future, they transform themselves into what they are not but would be. Morry and Zack discover their own love and hate, guilt and pride, jealousy and anger, power and weakness, fact and fantasy.

Eventually the brothers transcend the black and white world around them. Morry dresses in a white man's suit, and Zack plays the black boy until they both experience the very hate and rage that could destroy them. Then the clock rings reality prime, and the bloodknot that binds all humanity reasserts itself in brotherhood.

Fugard's play must be seen and heard. It is rare theater deftly and accurately directed by Leslie Gordon upon a powerfully designed set by Gary Dartt. At opposite sides of the stage Morry and Zack sit and sleep on separate beds, then meet in conflict and understanding around a simple table at center stage. It is here that Whitaker and Quince perform their magic in Athol Fugard's parable of human desire and vulnerability.

Ear damage possible from everyday activities

HEALTH AND FITNESS

Donald Jordan

The ringing of a telephone, the chatter of a printer and the screaming of thousands of basketball fans are all potentially damaging noises. Although a printer or a telephone may not compare to the noise of a screaming crowd, the damaging effects exist and tend to affect library workers and users more than many may consider.

Before the library incorporated computers and photocopiers, the main source of noise was people. The noise from people conversing and moving about is still more discussed than equipment noise in the library literature, and when the issue of equipment noise is addressed, only the annoyance factor — not the auditory factor — is considered (Wilson Library Bulletin, February 1991).

One thoroughly-studied effect of noise is hearing loss. According to Occupational Safety and Health Administration research quoted in the November 1987 issue of Safety & Health, eight hours of continual exposure to noise greater than 85 decibels can result in hearing loss. For the reader's reference, the decibel (dB) is a unit for expressing relative intensity of sounds on a scale from 0 to about 130, with 0 representing the average least perceptible sound and 130 the average threshold of pain for humans. The scale is also logarithmic, meaning that a noise level of 60 dB is perceived as twice as loud as one of 50 dB.

The hearing impairment will only be temporary if the noise is not prolonged. However, if the exposure continues, the hearing loss will become permanent. The Environmental Protection Agency has recommended a lower level, 75 dB, as the level at which exposure over the course of a working life can cause permanent hearing loss. Levels of 75 dB can develop in a library with several printers operating and people talking above the noise. As libraries usually do not operate under these conditions for extended periods, hearing loss is not the main concern.

Without representation

In an effort to obtain a measure of representation in the school they attend, students of the Savannah College of Art and Design voted last Thursday in overwhelming favor of a non-binding resolution to begin their own student government.

The dictator-like tactics that SCAD administrators have resorted to in retaliation to this movement have left much of the academic community with their jaws gaping open.

This past weekend, several students that had appeared in the media supporting the student government movement found a lock on their records that would not allow them to register.

One SCAD professor came forth saying that SCAD faculty have been regularly intimidated with the possibility of being fired if they spoke with the media or appeared talking to students outside the school.

Administration officials have been conveniently unavailable for comment and have patently ignored the students overwhelming demands for representation and - God forbid - student rights.

This kind of behavior is ironic considering the liberal arts orientation that SCAD is supposed to be dedicated to. Obviously the SCAD administration is more dedicated to the "Shut up and do as we say" philosophy.

This idiotic attitude is inexcusable in education. Period. The fact that SCAD is a private institution is only an excuse. Private or not, students deserve rights.

SCAD has become a prime example of what happens when an administration thinks of themselves as separate from the student body and considers themselves superior.

We wholeheartedly support SCAD students in their quest for student representation, and wish them luck. Should they get sick of having to deal with their administration, we would invite them to consider attending GSU.

We could use some student activists.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Clearing mistake costs

Dear Editor,

I want to let others know of an injustice on part of the University. Let me begin by stating that after the years of preparation I would be graduating. However, two days before the end, I was notified by the university I was not eligible for graduation.

After examining the facts, the truth was revealed. The mistake was in the clearing process. Apparently the person who cleared me a year earlier had made a mathematical error. This person never apologized for their error and forgot the situation.

Because of their error, I lost a job, had to find a new residence, and could not move to another state. By their error, I must suffer financially. I want to warn others to be careful.

Additionally, I wanted to know if this has happened to you or anybody else. Please let me know by writing me at L.B. 11311.

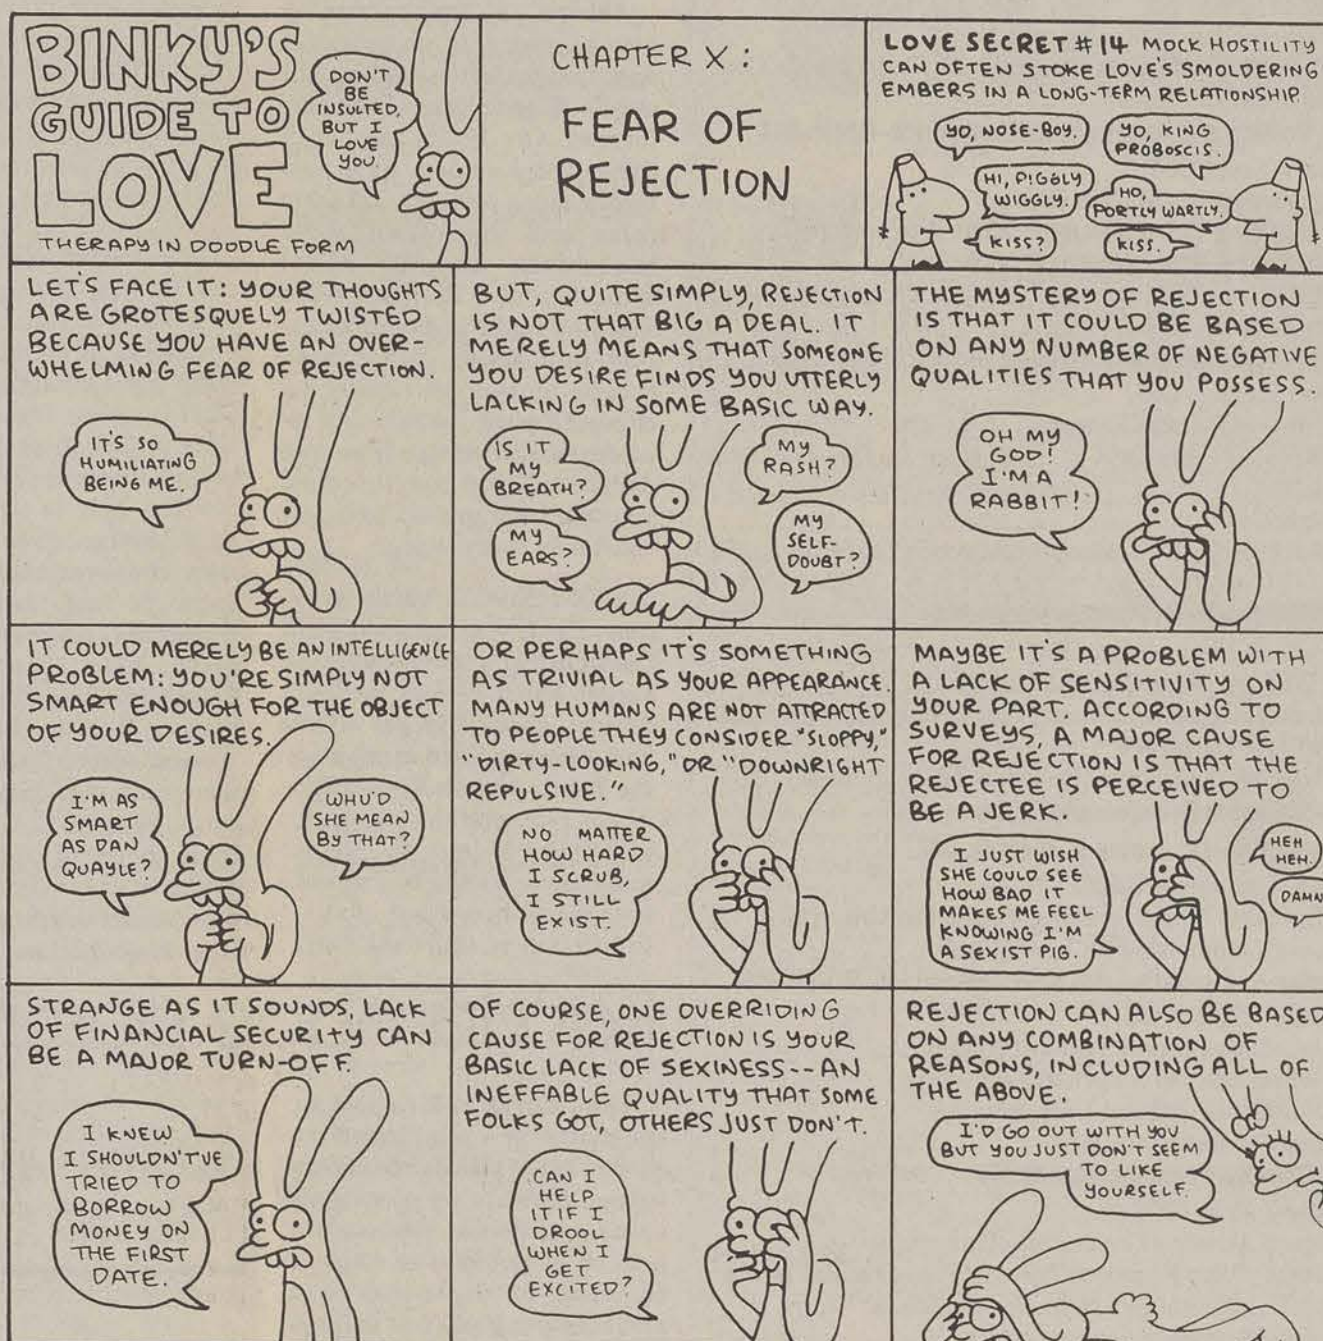

A college official related that 15-20 out of a thousand graduates each year fall victim to the same mistake.

Don't let this happen to you.

Placement Office needs more variety

Recently I received my recruiting calendar from the GSU Placement Office. As usual it was chock full of valuable information for the soon-to-be graduate.

When I saw the incredible opportunities in this invaluable guide, I nearly hurled. Imagine - prestigious corporations like Wal-Mart, K-Mart and Kentucky Fried Chicken were coming here to tell us about the limitless opportunities in their organizations.

If this doesn't sound like something you might be interested in, there were also no less than five opportunities listed in the area of insurance sales. It all makes me feel like I'm "in good hands," with all the options open to me.

Actually, it makes me feel like throwing "a piece of the rock" through somebody's window.

Fourteen of the twenty listings stipulated that the opportunities were primarily for people with some sort of business degree. Five were "open to all majors," and one was for engineering majors.

POINTS TO PONDER...

Jason Lewis

Two of the listings for all majors were insurance companies and one was the KFC job. The other two were for a Governor's Intern Program (not a full-time job) and for an account executive position.

Come on now, I know money makes the world go around, but not everyone on campus is a business major. In fact, I've secretly had contact with some Communication Arts students, and they tell me that they hope to be employed soon after their graduation.

Amazingly, some of them even want jobs in such maligned fields as broadcast and print journalism. Personally, I can't see why anyone would want to enter such a thankless and often vilified profession, especially when it pays even less than the education profession (damn, that's poor!).

Maybe the Placement Office does offer something for people who are not interested in business. I've never really looked into it because nothing in the literature I received prompted me to do so. If they do offer more, they should emphasize it more strongly.

On the other hand, they do offer some workshops that I'm sure would be valuable to anyone entering the job market. Three resume writing and three interview skills workshops will be held this quarter. For more information on these workshops or any aspect of job placement call the Placement Office.

"Fourteen out of twenty of the [job] listings stipulated that the opportunities were primarily for people with some sort of business degree."

You can be helped at Placement Office

"By serving as a 'career-coach,' the [Placement] office seeks to help all GSU students with their career planning and job search crusade."

GSU's Placement Office is probably the most criticized service -- second to parking on campus, of course. Students often claim that the office is ineffective and useless; however, these students actually have little or no concrete reasons to make such bold claims.

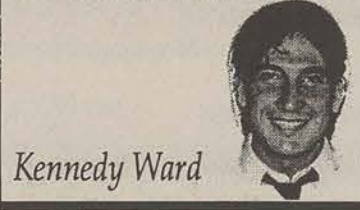

One major reason many individuals criticize the Placement Office is because they really don't understand its overall purpose. Because of this lack of understanding, students assume that just because they utilize the office's services, they are going to get a job making something like $53 thousand a year.

So, what is the purpose of the Placement Office?

By serving as a "career-coach," the office seeks to help all GSU students with their career planning and job search crusade.

The office does not guarantee employment; nevertheless, their process can provide you with extremely practical job skills that will make you as marketable as a Harvard graduate.

COUNTERPOINT

Years ago, the overall purpose of the office was merely job placement. In recent times, though, the office has undergone a major organizational change. Today it aids students in identifying employers, writing resumes and interviewing effectively. The Placement Office also offers a co-op program, which is promoted as a way to go to college and gain real work experience.

One other major student complaint is centered on the Placement Office's registration process. Some say the process is long and painstaking. The process has been upgraded with a computer program called Resume Expert, which is a simple, computerized way for students to register with the office. Therefore, students no longer have to fill out the lengthy Placement Office forms and cards. The program can only be bought at the bookstore.

In our country's past, acquiring a college education practically came with a job guarantee; unfortunately, this is no longer true.

Today, students need to be aware of the reality of the job market and GSU's Placement Office can certainly make you more aware of what is really out in the heartless work world.

Take it from me, use the Placement Office because it really can help you. After all, why are most of us coming to college? To get a good job.

Eric Weisenmuller

The game remains the same.

Can it still be said with any degree of certainty that the game of baseball is truly our American pastime?

Many would venture to say that this game, whose growth and evolution has mirrored that of our country, has been replaced by more exciting alternatives.

Take basketball for example. Its fast-paced, acrobatic style make it much more exciting than "America's game."

When was the last time you saw a pick-up game of baseball?

The adaptive qualities of basketball make it more widely played than baseball by a long shot. All you need to play basketball is a hoop and a ball and one other person (or a vivid imagination).

Baseball requires nine players, a large field and gloves plus one guy who has the unenviable task of being the backstop.

When we Americans want to hit a ball with a bat we all go out and join a "softball" team. Softball—with all its similarities to baseball—is still just a watered down-version of the baseball.

Outside of formal leagues, no one except kids play the game.

So how can the game still be considered the national pastime?

First of all, the emphasis of the term "national pastime" weighs more heavily on the word "national" than "pastime."

The game of baseball has been a mirror and nurturer of the American culture for longer than any team sport. Despite the pretensions of the Japanese the game is truly—in its essence—an American flavor.

The game began as an idea brought across the Atlantic from England. On American soil was transformed into something "revolutionary."

It gained steam in the population explosion of the late 1800's, and in the 1920's the game "roared."

It has also followed in line with our social conscience through the years.

By admitting the first black player into the league in 1947, and, more recently, calling into question our political correctness the evolution of baseball closely reflects the national character. In this respect baseball is more American than any of its counterparts in the sports world.

Today the way that we pass the time depends on what's on TV. Television (more specifically cable television) has brought the game into millions of living rooms. Therefore Americans have become well

Terry Pendleton's bat finally awakes

SAN DIEGO (AP) — Terry Pendleton needed just one night to accomplish what he couldn't do in the first two weeks of the season hit and drive in runs.

Pendleton, last year's National League MVP, knocked in six runs with two doubles and a sacrifice fly Monday night in Atlanta's 10-4 victory over the San Diego Padres.

Pendleton entered the game with a .180 batting average and just five RBIs. He left batting .222 with 11 RBIs after going 3 for 4.

"I've never been one to start off hot," said Pendleton, a lifetime .267 hitter. "I can only think of one season when I started well in April — that was in '87 in St. Louis."

Last season, he hit only .234 with two homers and six RBIs in April. Then he busted out by batting .410 in May, .302 in June and .360 in July.

"It's not that I don't expect to hit well in April, but I don't get down on myself so that I can't come around and hit. That's because I feel I can and I will."

Part of Pendleton's problem this season has been a sore left rib cage.

"I'm just starting to be able to run again," he said. "I haven't missed a game, but believe me, Sunday in LA was the first day I felt decent running. It still hurts when I start and stop, but I'm OK in between. The biggest thing now is that I have less pain."

Pendleton hit a two-run double to cap a three-run, tie-breaking rally in the fourth inning and added a three-run double in the eighth. He also had a sacrifice fly in the third.

"Believe me, I didn't hit a ball hard," Pendleton said. "That sacrifice fly was probably the hardest ball I hit all night. But I will take the three hits that I got. They found the perfect spot."

Pendleton found perfection a lot last season in leading the Braves to a division title, a pennant and to the seventh game of the World Series.

After signing as a free agent with Atlanta, Pendleton hit .319 last year with a career-high 22 homers and 86 RBIs. He had 187 hits, including 34 doubles.

Stats didn't concern Pendleton too much last season, and the numbers don't mean that much now, either.

"I don't even play into that stuff," he said. "I just try to play the game every day the best way that I know how. I couldn't tell how many RBIs that I had, but I could tell how many I left on. I think one time I struck out with runners in scoring position, but for the most part, I've been hitting the ball hard and nothing positive has happened."

In Pendleton's final year with the Cardinals he hit .230 with six homers and 58 RBIs. He became the first player in major league history in to increase his batting average by at least 80 points and his home run total by 15 from one season to another, according to the Elias Sports Bureau.

Like Pendleton, the Braves have started slowly, too. They were 6-8 after Monday's victory ended three-game losing streak.

"Believe it or not, we are trying to play even though it doesn't look like it."

Without Wilkins Hawks fold at playoff time

ATLANTA (AP) — Even after losing Dominique Wilkins halfway through the season, general manager Pete Babcock believed the Atlanta Hawks would make the NBA playoffs. They didn't.

For the second time in seven years, the Hawks will be on an extended vacation while 16 of their NBA rivals participate in the post-season party.

Babcock knew it wouldn't be easy without the team's star player.

Wilkins, who averaged 26.1 points a game in his first nine seasons, was scoring at a 28.1 clip when he ruptured his right Achilles tendon in a game against Philadelphia on Jan. 28.

The Hawks rallied late to win that game, lifting their record to 22-20. They went 16-24 the rest of the way, tying Miami for eighth place in the Eastern Conference with a 38-44 record. Miami won the playoff berth by virtue of having a better conference record.

The Hawks were in the playoff chase until the closing seconds of the final game at Cleveland on Sunday night, a 112-108 loss. Blair Rasmussen's 3-point shot could have given Atlanta a lead, but it bounced off the rim. Cleveland's Mark Price retrieved the rebound, was fouled and hit two free throws to ice the game with one second remaining.

"I was really proud of the way our guys played last night," Babcock said Monday. "They could have laid down after the drummings we took from Cleveland this year. I felt real good about that."

Atlanta lost all five meetings with the Cavaliers, the others being routs by margins of 27, 23, 16 and 43 points.

Babcock said he knew it would be a rocky season before it began because of roster moves that changed the team considerably.

"We started the restructuring process last summer and we felt that we had gotten quite a ways into it," Babcock said. "We are still in the midst of the restructuring process. We have some things to do to try to improve."

He pinpointed the reason Atlanta didn't make the playoffs. It came in a seven-game stretch at the start of March when the Hawks held fourth-quarter leads but folded and lost all seven games.

There also was a 99-96 loss to the Orlando Magic at home March 18.

"The season really kind of fell true to form as to how we expected it to be, with the exception that we lost some games we really shouldn't have lost, like Orlando at home," Babcock said. "It cost us the playoffs."

"We had the opportunity to get into the playoffs and just didn't do it," Rumeal Robinson said after scoring a career-high 31 at Cleveland. "It's very disappointing. All year, we've been playing hard. We've had injuries and setbacks. It's a shame it came down to one game for us. We lost too many close games this season."

"We gave ourselves a chance to win this time," Rasmussen said. "I'm proud of the guys. We played hard and we played with emotion and that's all you can ask for."

GSU golfers finish eleventh in Kemira Invitational Tournament

G-A Staff Reports

The GSU golf team finished eleventh in an extremely competitive field of twelve teams in last weekend's Kemira Intercollegiate Invitational Golf Tournament held in Savannah.

Michael Christie (70) and Morgan Beam (72) led South Carolina to a one-over-par 289 Sunday, helping the Gamecocks hold a two-day lead and capture the team championship of the tournament last which ended on Sunday.

The 54-hole event was played at the par-72, 6,876 yard Sheraton Savannah Resort & Country Club.

South Carolina, who shot a 12-under par 276 in Friday's first round and recorded an even-par 288 Saturday, earned its first tourney title.

Tulsa earned runner-up honors with a five-under par 859 after shooting a 293 third-round total.

Ohio State finished third with a two-under par 862 while Alabama was fourth after posting a 863.

Tulsa junior Scott Robertson earned individual medalist honors with a 10-under par 206.

Robertson recorded rounds of 69, 68 and 69. Alabama's Morten Olander, who finished with a 209, placed second, while Christie was third with a 210 total.

GSU posted the round's top score Sunday with a five-under par 283.

Kevin Dick shot a six-over par 222 and was GSU's top finisher ending-up tied for 34th place.

Out of the 180 total rounds played during the tournament, 74 were completed par or under.

Thirty players scored 72 or better Friday, while Saturday and Sunday produced 22 rounds of par or under.

Next GSU will travel to Auburn, Alabama to compete in the Billy Hitchcock Intercollegiate Tournament which begins today.

and activities related to golf team practices and play," the OCR found evidence that they do in regards to use of the facility and membership.

"Despite this new policy, we found no evidence that the policy has been implemented," Meyer said. "Given the country club's history of discriminating against blacks, the mere adoption of a nondiscriminatory policy, without evidence of the implementation, is not sufficient proof that it no longer discriminates against blacks."

"The evidence suggested that the country club's discriminatory practices have had a chilling effect on the interest of black students in golf or other activities conducted at the country club," said Archie Meyer Sr., regional civil rights director.

Until the university determines the country club has implemented this policy and is no longer discriminating against blacks, they can't enter into any contractual agreement.

Also in the OCR's investigation, it was found that black students were asked not to participate in class projects at the country club during spring 1988.

They did not however find any proof that GSU discriminates against black students by denying them the opportunity to volunteer as student trainers the athletic department.

"Since the evidence shows that the complainant was considered but rejected by the coaching and training staff for nondiscriminatory reasons, the University is in compliance with the Title VI regulation," Meyer said.

"The bottom line is the fact that GSU's Recreation and Athletic departments do in fact practice discrimination and racism," Peters said in a written letter. "This further supports my case against GSU concerning federal court."

Peters has filed the case in federal court and is awaiting a court date. According to Peters, his case will be tried under the new Civil Rights Law of 1991.

Peters said he was happy about the ruling. "This is not a partial victory, this is a full victory."

A Forest Heights Country Club spokesperson could not be reached for comment.

To conform with the new dialing procedures, Georgians simply have to include the 912 area code when they dial long-distance within the zone. If callers forget to dial 0 or 1 plus 912, a recorded message will remind them to use the area code when redialing.

In addition, individuals and businesses will have to reprogram equipment such as FAX machines, beepers, and burglar alarms to include the 912 area code.

When calling north Georgia outside metro Atlanta, the new 706 area code will be dialed instead of 404, which will be used only when calling Atlanta and the areas immediately surrounding the city.

Instead of childhood games of stickball in the street, kids today have Nintendo baseball—a sign of our time and the way that we are "passing" it.

Over the span of American culture baseball remains as one of the common threads that constitute our nation's collective character. It is truly worthy of its distinction as our national game because, put simply: baseball is as American as mom and apple pie.

Widow gets $32,000 tax bill for alimony payments from her dead husband SUMTER, S.C. (AP) — The Internal Revenue Service wants Betty Moore to pay $7,800 in taxes on alimony she allegedly received two years ago from her husband. Only he's been dead for seven years.

"If there is any way I can collect alimony on a dead husband, I sure would like to know about it," she said. "But if I can collect $32,000 on a dead spouse, I'd be glad to pay Uncle Sam taxes on it."

Moore's husband of nearly 30 years, Samuel, died in 1985 after a heart attack. She said she has never been divorced and has never received any alimony payments.

A notice attached to the bill said she had a month to respond. Moore said she would respond.

"I don't owe it, and it's all kind of a big joke," she said.

California woman accused of burning husband says she didn't mean to SANTA ANA, Calif. (AP) — A woman accused of setting her cancer-stricken husband ablaze in a dispute over candy said she regrets the attack and wants to return to her spouse.

Mrs. Carter, 69, was being held at the Orange County Jail in lieu of $250,000 bail and was expected to be formally charged in the case today.

She said she became angry Thursday when she came home and discovered her husband had eaten her candy. Paul Carter told police the incident was touched off by a chocolate Easter bunny but Mrs. Carter denied that, saying it was a candy bar.

"I took a teaspoonful (of rubbing alcohol) and threw it on him. I was scaring him, I had matches in my hand. It just went up. I really didn't mean to do it," she said.

Family sues mortuary for burial mistake

LAKEPORT, Calif. (AP) — The family of a man buried last year has sued a local mortuary claiming it switched his body with another man's and then buried him in the wrong grave.

Lynwood Neil Griffin's family filed a $1 million lawsuit against the Jones Mortuary last week in Lake County Superior Court.

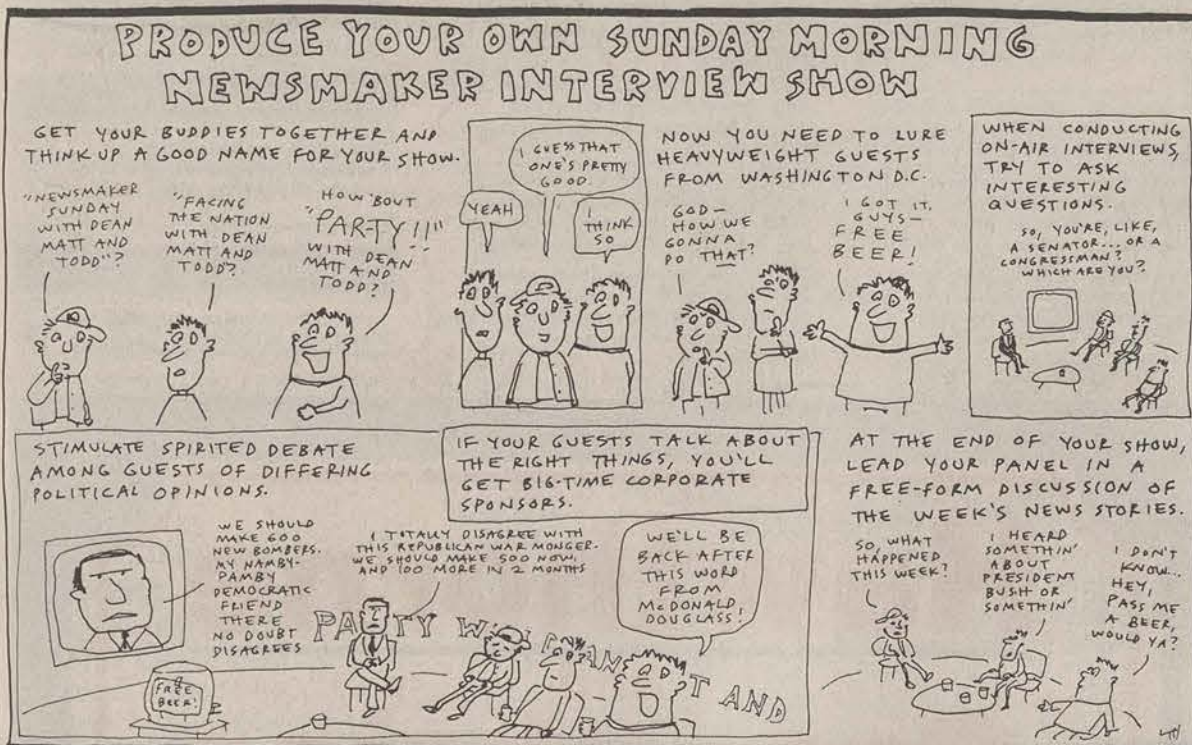

The family's attorney, David Herrick, said Griffin was buried in the wrong grave on the day before his funeral last April. Another man was in the closed casket at Griffin's funeral and buried in his grave at Hartley Cemetery.
