NEWS BRIEFS

Minorities earning college degrees up last year

HARTFORD, Conn. (AP) — A record number of minority students is earning degrees in Connecticut's public and private colleges thanks to special programs to recruit them and help them succeed.

Blacks, Hispanics, Asians and American Indians earned 2,716 degrees in 1991-92, up 10.3 percent from 1990-91, the state Department of Higher Education said in an annual report released Monday.

In 1991-92, the number of degrees awarded to blacks rose 9.1 percent; to Hispanics, 9.5 percent; to Asians, 12.8 percent; and to American Indians, 14.6 percent. Minority students now make up 9.3 percent of all Connecticut graduates.

Business and management was the most popular field of study for the 10th year in a row, followed by degrees in education, the social sciences, general studies and health sciences.

Georgia legislator proposes bill to plant more trees

ATLANTA — State Sen. Hugh Gillis has proposed a bill that would allow the Georgia Forestry Commission to use volunteers to plant the 25,000 trees the Atlanta Committee for the Olympic Games wants in place before 1996.

It is now illegal for the commission to use volunteers because the state could be held liable if one were injured. Gillis' bill has a provision for insurance coverage. It also allows the commission to pay volunteers for travel and lodging expenses.

Gillis, D-Soperton, said he introduced similar legislation during the 1992 session, but it ran into problems because it lacked the insurance provision.

The Georgia Tree Coalition plans to plant trees at all Olympic sites in the Atlanta area as well as training sites in Macon. State Forestry Commission Director John Mixon said workers would plant thousands of trees along highways in middle Georgia between Atlanta and Savannah.

Keeping women out of Citadel could be costly, lawyers say

CHARLOTTE, N.C. (AP) — The Citadel's struggle to keep women out of the military school may cost South Carolina taxpayers up to $250,000 in attorneys' fees, not counting appeals or related lawsuits, some civil court lawyers said.

The state has received bills totaling $75,858.65 so far in a lawsuit filed by three female veterans in June. But lawyers who have tried many civil cases say that bills pile up faster as the trial approaches.

Ed Mullins of Columbia, a senior partner in one of South Carolina's largest firms, Nelson, Mullins, Riley & Scarborough estimated the case to cost somewhere around $250,000.

Virginia Military Institute, the nation's only other state-supported all-male military college, has spent millions trying to keep women out, Citadel board Chairman James Jones of Greenville, S.C., estimates.

"VMI has been at this for 2 1/2 to 3 years, and I suspect that they're way into the millions of dollars," he said.

Computer error upsets many

685 students told to pay extra one-dollar fee or lose classes

By Enoch W. Autry
Assistant News Editor

Because of a computer problem, 685 on-campus residents found an unwelcome invoice in their Landrum boxes from the Business Office concerning a missing dollar.

The letter accompanying the invoice stated that as of the close of business on Wednesday, Jan. 13, the students' fees for Winter Quarter had not been paid in full.

Also within the letter was a notice to those involved that if the balance was not covered by that same day then there would be a cancellation of classes.

According to Leon Reed, Assistant Director for the Development of Business Systems, an incorrect computer input in the residence hall activity fee charge left the total at five dollars instead of the needed six.

Reed said that he had left a note on his calendar to set the amount at six, but because of personal reasons was not able to return to campus on time.

"This is my mistake because I should have passed it [the information] to someone else," Reed said.

Cancellations of classes do not occur concerning issues of one dollar unless the end of the quarter nears and the student has not covered the outstanding dues, Reed added.

Vickie Hawkins, Director of Residence Life, however, placed the blame solely upon a computer foul-up.

"I am sorry, but it was total computer error, nothing else," Hawkins said, "Hopefully it will be corrected and not occur in the Spring."

She said that this problem also occurred Fall 1992.

In an attempt to explain why the letters and invoices were received on the same day as the payment deadline, Debbie Powell, Accounts Receivable Supervisor, said that the envelopes were sent out after the second and third cancellation.

Powell added that the information was then sent out to be processed and mailed to the students.

Hawkins said, "Most of the cases I heard about were upper-class students."

However, many underclassmen joined those upper-class students in lines that spilled into the foyer of Deal Hall.

Beth Jordan, a senior broadcasting major, said that the whole situation was ridiculous, and that she had to borrow a dollar so that she wouldn't have to write a check.

"If they owed you money then 'oh, well' you have got to wait 14 weeks to get it," Jordan said after having to pay the bill on the very same day that she had received the letter.

Holly Pecarek, a freshman education major, said, "I should have given my RA [Resident Assistant] my dollar and made her bring it over here [Deal Hall]."

One male student was so irritated that he put a hundred pennies in an envelope for the Business Office and sent it down the night deposit.

NCAA reform relaxes rules on transfers

From George-Anne staff reports

A new provision was passed at last week's annual NCAA Convention in Dallas which could have far-reaching affects on the state of college football this year.

Ninety-six representatives of Division I-AA schools voted independently and passed a measure which will allow Division I-A football players to transfer to Division I-AA schools without sitting out the previously mandatory one year of play.

The vote was taken at a separate business session last Wednesday which included only representatives of Division I-AA schools.

Under the terms of this new provision, (called Proposition 78) it is now possible for a player at a Division I school to transfer to Georgia Southern or any other Division I-AA school and resume play there immediately the following year.

This opens the door for many recruits who are unsatisfied with their roles at a Division I-A schools to leave that school and take-over at smaller schools without penalty.

Although it was met with opposition from several members of the NCAA, the legislation was upheld on Saturday, the final day of the conclave, by a 316-220 vote.

The ruling reportedly caught the other members of the NCAA by surprise, and, do to time constraints, representatives of Division I-A schools were unable to take reciprocal measures allowing Division I-AA players to do the same. However, I-A representatives are certain to take issue on the matter at next year's convention in San Antonio.

Athletic Director Dr. David "Bucky" Wagner who represented GSU at the Convention commented on the new legislation.

"I do not know if it will help division I-AA, but it will help some kids out," said Wagner, "I believe that its intention is to help the student-athlete."

Technology students to build 'mascot mobile'

By Camille Childree
Staff Writer

During the 1994 football season, the GSU mascot will be arriving in style perched on his personal Gulfstream jet.

School of Technology students enrolled in the senior project course are working on a design project to build a scaled-down model of the G-5 jet, which is manufactured by Gulfstream Aerospace.

Students are designing the model G-5 to be used at half-time to escort the eagle mascot. Gulfstream will also use the craft, bearing their logo, to benefit them promotionally during parades and other activities.

"Gulfstream is supplying and providing the materials, providing content experts to give us assistance, the facilities to actually do the work and their equipment so we can test it and put it together," explained Dr. David Ross, project manager.

"The students are providing all of the labor under the guidance of their engineers," Ross said. "We are working with an area called the composite department."

The plane itself will more than likely be constructed of fiberglass or some other type of composite like graphite material.

Students of the School of Technology are building a motorized model of this type of Gulfstream jet.

Once the actual construction begins, students will actually travel down to the northwest side of Savannah, where Gulfstream is located, to work on the project three or four times a week.

The plane will be roughly 14 feet long with a 12-foot wing span. It will have the capacity to carry two people - the driver and the mascot, who will actually be seated on top of the plane near the rear.

Robbins Meat Packing Company is supplying the three-wheeled golf cart, which will give mobility to the airplane.

"The airplane is actually going to sit up on top of the golf cart, which will not be seen except for the wheels," Ross said.

It will be built into the plane. Part of the driver will actually be down in the cockpit, in the fuselage, driving the plane."

There will be one wheel up front and two wheels in the back so it will represent what a jet would look like landing or taking off."

Ross, who alternates the teaching responsibilities for the class between himself and Co-Project Managers Dr. Waldo Meeks and Dr. David Williams, said: "This is a senior project, so each quarter a new group of seniors actually get involved in the project and this is the third quarter."

They are still in the design phase, and next quarter the students should be in the actual manufacturing phase.

Students to teach their peers about good health

By Kim St. Hilaire
News Editor

Starting this quarter, GSU's Health Center is implementing a peer education program aimed at promoting healthier lifestyles, according to Health Educator Whitney Himes.

"The overall objective of this program is that we want to encompass the entire campus into the philosophy of healthy lifestyles," Himes said. "We're going to draw them [students] into this whole concept and make these programs that we do of real interest."

The programs, which will begin in the spring quarter, may involve subjects such as nutrition, safe sex and even environmental issues, according to Himes.

The Health Center is interested in working with students and letting them develop the programs. In many other universities the administration dominates what takes place in health programs, Himes said.

A two-hour training session is available to students interested in the peer education program. In addition, 10 students will be trained as supervisors who will assist in the planning of the program objectives.

"They're not going to go out and be mini health educators, but they're going to work together and do neat projects," Himes stated.

Some students have already begun training for the peer education program.

"They're getting us in groups to determine who is trained in particular areas," said Lana Dunbar, a student involved in the program.

"I'm interested more in self-esteem [programs]," Dunbar stated.

Other students are interested in areas such as nutrition, fitness and safe sex.

"We're going to focus a lot on STD's - HIV," Dunbar said.

GSU's Physics Department will soon have the luxury of a research quality laboratory

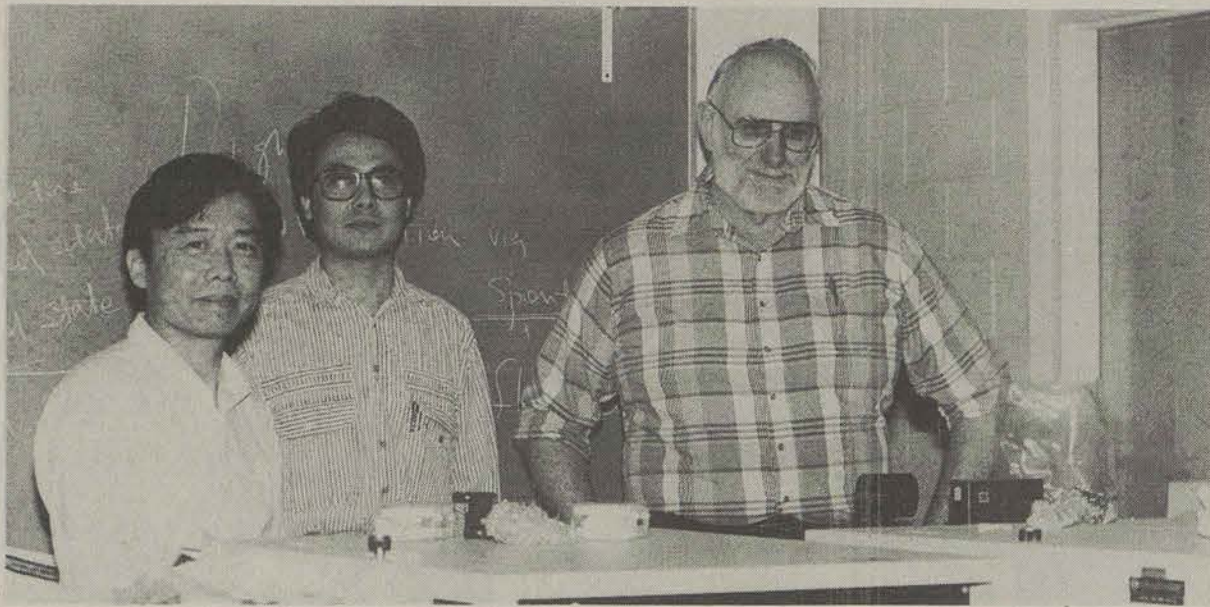

By Kim St. Hilaire
News Editor

GSU's Physics Department will soon have a "research quality" optics laboratory due to the recent acquisition of new laser equipment, according to Physics Professor Dr. Marvin Payne.

Although additional lasers are on order, the department has already begun to utilize the laboratory under the leadership of Dr. Jing-Yuan Zhang and Dr. Lu Deng. Four undergraduate physics majors are also spending time in the lab currently.

"We hope to correspondingly have some of them work through summer," Payne said. "We're working on lining up money for them - it will be a very good experience for them."

Some of the equipment in the laboratory includes pulse lasers, continuous wave lasers and laser tables.

The laser tables have "hydraulic legs that are very good about isolating the lasers from vibrations from the parking lot outside, people walking by and that sort of thing," Payne said.

The optics lab spans two rooms in the basement of the physics building. The equipment in one room alone costs between $120,000 and $130,000. The department had

Keep your pants on Annie's all-purpose advice is on the way!

Dear Annie,

I met this really groovy guy last quarter and I think that I am the only one who finds him attractive. My friends make fun of me, but I still find him intriguing. It seems like he does not even know that I am alive, but every now and then he will pass me a little hint of his feelings. Well, at least I think it is.

At first I was depressed because I thought that he did not like me, but recently he has dropped subtle hints pertaining to the fact that he does not condemn homosexual expression. So, therefore, I think that he might be a homosexual and it is not just me that he is not attracted to: it's girls in general. What should I do? I really need to know how he feels.

Distressed

Dear Distressed,

People usually have strong feelings about homosexuality, whether they be towards or against.

The first step in resolving your problem is to recognize your own beliefs about homosexuality. Homosexuality should not be an obstacle in any platonic relationship. So, keep all of this in mind and lean towards what your heart says.

Dear Annie,

My boyfriend went out last night without me. He said it was boys night out. Anyway, one of my dorm mates saw him hanging all over another girl, and when she confronted him he got really nervous and the girl did too. I think that he is cheating on me with that tramp and the worse thing about it is that I used to go to high school with her. The story gets worse because I confronted him and broke it off and then she confronted me and told me that they were just good friends. What should I do?

Thinkin'

Dear Thinkin',

Why not ask him to explain what happened with this girl? Maybe he is not really involved with her. He might just be wanting his space - possibly the space between her legs. You will never know unless you confront the man.

Dear Annie,

I am about to explode if I do not find a girlfriend. No one seems to be right. I go out and pick up at bars but most of those girls are not only shallow, but also all hairspray and makeup. I have tried two different sorority functions but that has not worked out either: after one night of passion, I'm left with an empty bed, a wet spot and shattered hopes. I want someone who I can court the old fashioned way and not find me crazy or a drag. Am I going about this the wrong way?

Old fashioned guy

Annie's Advice

Advice on college life from Annie Swanson.

Dear Old fashioned guy,

Your problem is really tough. An old fashioned man is hard to come by. There should be more of you in the world. I know that I would surely appreciate you. Anyway, all you can really do is bide your time and wait. Try looking in your classes for someone who seems to have intelligence and personality. Try starting a relationship a little more slowly, and try to keep your sheets dry until you've established some common ground with her. There actually are some people left like that, despite what you might think.

Lyndon is coming to campus

GSU News Service

Lyndon, a one-man oral biography of President Lyndon Baines Johnson, will be presented by the Campus Life

Enrichment Committee on Jan. 25 at 8 p.m. in the Union Ballroom.

The play, written by James Prideaux, is based on a book written by Merle Miller entitled Lyndon. Set in the Oval Office, Prideaux's play presents the reflections of LBJ as he prepares to leave the office of the presidency.

Luckinbill first performed Lyndon in 1987 on public television and continues on a national tour since the 1990-91 season.

When questioned on what attracted him to this role, Luckinbill explained in an article of Back Stage that "The attraction, ultimately, was the situation and the ideas that his presidency espoused."

Luckinbill, a classically trained actor, described Johnson's presidency as an example of a classic tragedy. Luckinbill considers President Johnson to have been in a "damned if you do, damned if you don't" situation.

In preparation for the role, Luckinbill spent many hours at New York's Museum of Broadcasting observing Johnson's movements and body language through film clips of press conferences and interviews. Luckinbill also ventured to verify many details of the play with Mrs. Lyndon Johnson.

Laurence Luckinbill is a veteran of the theater. He is probably known for his performance in the stage and film versions of The Boys in the Band. Luckinbill won the New York Critics Circle for his role in The Memory Bank and was nominated for a Tony Award for his performance in The Shadow Box. Luckinbill also performed in Neil Simon's Chapter Two as well as many other successful stage productions.

Luckinbill's accomplishments are not however limited to the stage. Luckinbill has been seen in many films, such as Cocktail with Tom Cruise and Messenger of Death with Charles Bronson. Most recently he starred as Sybok in Star Trek V: The Final Frontier. Currently Luckinbill is writing and plans to star in an original one-man play entitled George Washington.

James Prideaux is the successful playwright behind Lyndon. He is also credited with such Broadway hits as

Officials should have given notice of dollar fee

Six hundred-eighty-five on-campus students received notice by mail Tuesday that their student fees had not been paid in full and their classes would be canceled unless they took care of the balance before deadline.

The amount in question? One dollar. The deadline. Four o'clock that afternoon.

The reason for the problem, according to Resident Life director Vickie Hawkins, was a computer error on the part of the administration which undercharged the students for their student activity fee.

Despite the fact that the university, not the students, was at fault for the mix-up, the unlucky group was forced to stand in long lines in Deal Hall Tuesday to make up the difference.

The students involved were, understandably, not amused.

One student attached a note to her dollar bill calling the fee the most ridiculous thing she had ever seen. Another intentionally paid his fine with one hundred pennies. "A dollar's a dollar, right?" he said.

These people had every right to be upset.

It is understandable that the University wanted the money involved; after all, the total comes to $685. But considering the fact that the school was in error, not the students involved, more than an afternoon's notice should have been given.

The long weekend resulting from the Martin Luther King, Jr. holiday no doubt caused the letters to take a day or so longer in the mail than usual, but this surely should have been taken into account by the business office.

One day is simply not enough notice to pay a fee which is necessary to keep one's classes from being cancelled. What happened to the folks who didn't check their Landrum Boxes that day?

In the future, if the administration finds itself in a similar situation, we suggest students be given a little more consideration while squaring away their account.

Help choose Advisor of the Year

Students who have had an especially helpful advisor during their time at GSU will have a chance for the first time this year to help choose the school's Advisor of the Year.

Since 1984, when the award was implemented, the nomination of an outstanding advisor has been an "administrative function" according to officials.

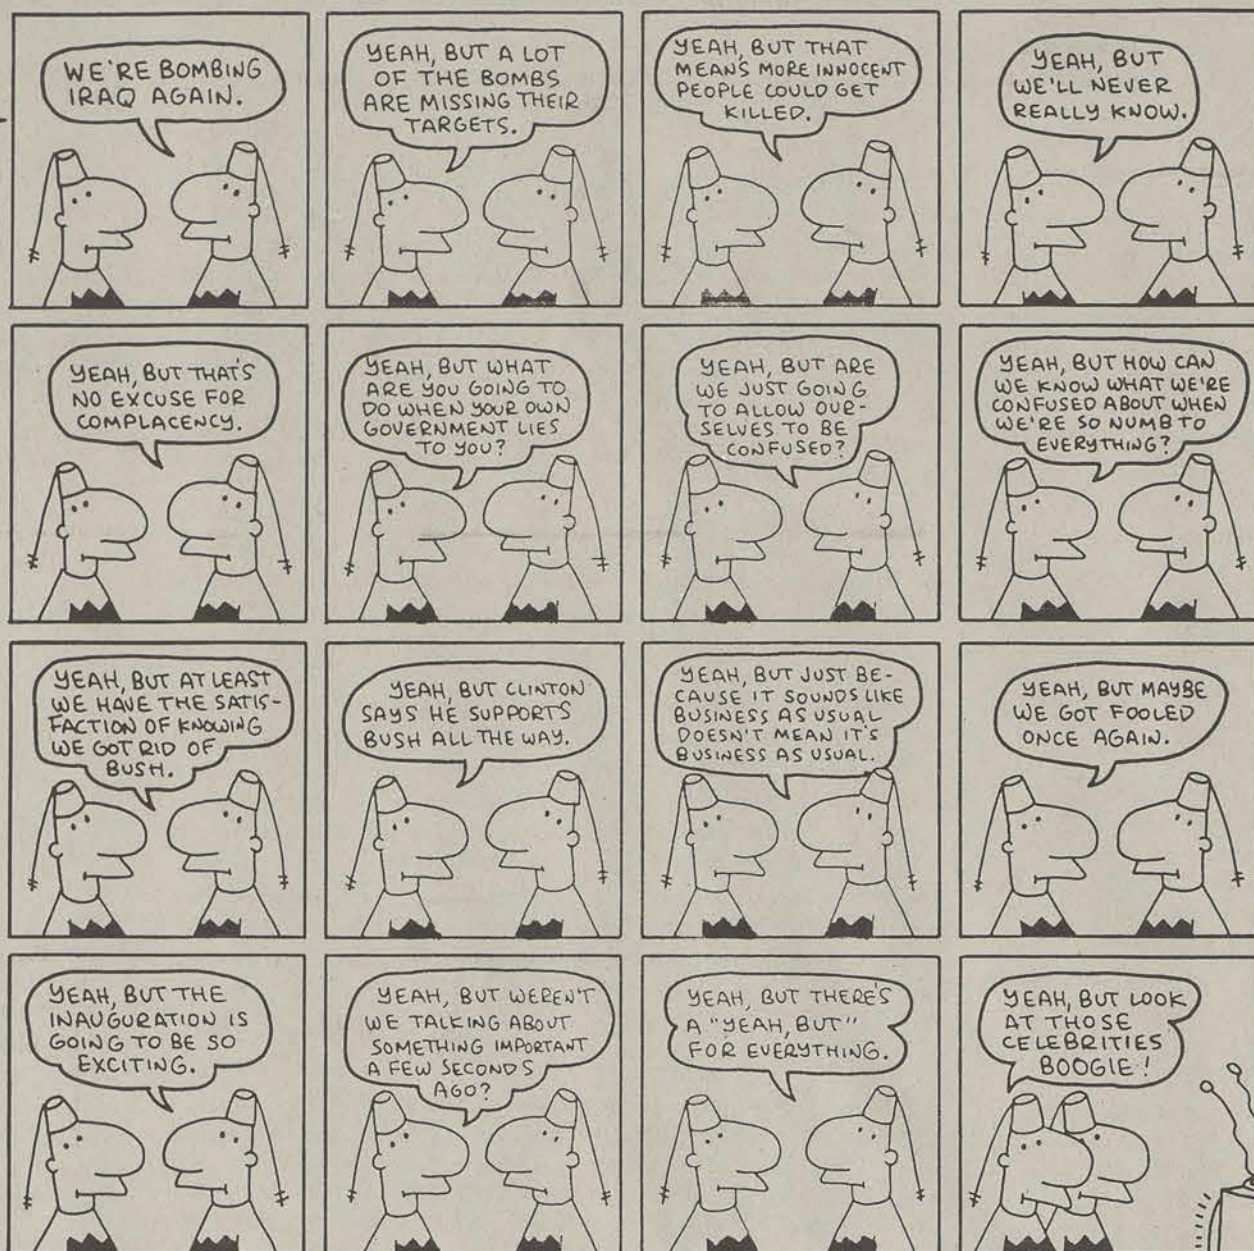

Thankfully, the process has been changed to allow those of us who really know which advisors are helpful and which aren't to have a voice in the matter.

The campus winner will represent GSU at a national conference on advising and is eligible to go on to regional judging, possibly picking up some cash, trophies and a bit of recognition in the process.

Nomination forms can be picked up at the academic advisement office, and the deadline for submission is tomorrow, Jan. 22.

So all students who have been helped "above and beyond the call of duty" by an advisor are encouraged to speak up and have a voice in choosing who will receive this recognition.

'Peculiar' college students must face big problems

Racism still exists in the classic form among all cultural groups; black, white, Jewish, Muslim, Menonite, Irish, shall I go on?

The economy has reached gigantic proportions in all respects. The budget deficit has reached a level totally disconnected, by sheer overwhelming size, from the economic indicators which dictate the literal movement of the economic machine. A giant is among us, dangling a sword from a thread. It's a trillion dollar sword.

The environment is almost wrecked beyond repair. The ozone layer is Swiss cheese; much of our water is toxic soup. Numerous species of plants and animals become extinct every day.

The land, all land, could become a landfill and oil spills threaten or destroy hundreds of miles of beach and ocean per year.

People are starving by the millions the world over. Thousands in the U.S. alone are afflicted with mental disabilities, misdiagnosed and treated as mere animals in many cases.

The homeless population grows steadily with single mothers making their presence known alongside the vagabond winos.

Television evangelists, phony sales gimmicks, investment scams and bank failures rob billions of dollars annually from unwary citizens, many of them elderly, who have sunk their life savings in hopes of earning salvation, or a bit more money to live out their lives in comfort. Can I get an "Amen?"

There are enough stockpiled nuclear weapons around the globe to obliterate all life except cockroaches and forms of humanoid life capable of living off the energies of others. Austin Freeney take heart.

Ethnic, religious and land wars rage on all hemispheres, in many cases indiscriminately claiming victims.

AIDS is threatening to become the number one fatal disease the world over and is mutating faster than researchers can fully discover the current characteristics.

Stupidity seems to be gaining more popular acceptance. Introducing ... the Bundys.

If I were to continue laying out all the problems facing us today, the list would take up volumes of this newspaper.

What's my point? The point is this: we, as a population are living under a constantly expanding storm cloud of catastrophe yet somehow, the majority of us manage to live each day without a total mental collapse or collective suicide.

We college students are the most peculiar of all sub-cultures.

The majority of us don't seem to get the fact that the decisions we make and the actions we take are going to have serious outcomes on not just our personal lives but the entire planet and all life on earth.

I wonder when we are going to take notice of the severity of global conditions and realize that solutions, bona fide answers to the problems, are going to be necessary in the future.

Opinions are fine for a starting point in the process. But opinions are, inherently un-objective, narrowly observant and usually focused on a philosophical ideal rather than a reality-based course of action to eliminate a problem.

The possibility seems to exist that the time is approaching in which ideology and argumentation of opinions will, by necessity, be required to take a back seat to a new form of social thinking.

This new form would be system of thinking concerned with resolving the most immediate dangers threatening the existence of a balanced, indeed continuing, existence of life; flora and fauna, black and white, rich and poor, you and me.

In the meantime:

there, I've compiled this list of explanations of exactly what it is we're doing here. Hopefully, the end result will be a more informed student body, or at the very least a group of individuals who will use the proper terminology when writing in to call me a Communist sympathizer.

1. Opinion columns. During the past couple of quarters, I've received letters from readers highly upset over the fact that I wrote a "biased column." Looks like I'm going to have to plead guilty to that one.

Personal columns are intended to be biased, that's why they appear on the opinions page. (If anyone is having trouble locating the opinions page, please note the word typed in big, black, bold letters at the top of this page. When you see this word on future newspaper pages, you know you're in the right place.)

Ideally, the writer will have done some research on a topic of local or national interest and will then give his or her own personal views on the topic.

No one is saying your have to agree with the ideas presented. The nice thing about opinions is that, like certain parts of the human anatomy, everybody has at least one or two. And no two peoples' are alike.

2. Editorials. Usually appearing in the left-hand column of the opinions page, staff editorials seem to cause more confusion than any other feature in the paper.

These unsigned opinion pieces act as the "voice of the paper," and the content is decided upon by the editorial board, whose names and positions appear at the top of the column.

They are NOT, as some readers seem to have thought, merely another opportunity for yours truly to foist his opinions on the unsuspecting masses and they aren't unsigned because the writer wants to remain anonymous. That's just the way we folks in the newspaper business do things.

3. Letters to the editor. Letters may be concerning any topic GSU students find interesting. While most letters we receive are concerning stories or opinion pieces written in the George-Anne, this is not a requirement for publication.

Students don't need to write a novel to get their point across; a concise, coherently written letter will probably attract more readers than one that looks like a copy of War and Peace at first glance.

Letters should be signed and include a phone number and Landrum Box number. (I

These aren't likely combinations for being printed on a sports page. You know, all the athletes now have a designated day (Wednesday) where everyone dresses up on campus.

The day was created by the athletic department with hopes of boosting morale and inspiring school spirit. Female athletes are "encouraged" to wear hose and heels and the men you ask? What else, but a tie. From the locker room to the classrooms, I've heard mixed views.

Personally, I have a strong belief that hose are not meant to be worn by people who feel most comfortable in their Nike cross trainers or barefoot, especially with all the nice new sidewalks we can break our ankles on. Some of you may walk gracefully trekking the miles across campus, however, I am anything but.

I really don't mind wearing nice clothes and such to class and I have many times in the past. (Contrary to popular belief, most athletes own more than sweat pants and t-shirts.) I have a small problem with being told or encouraged to dress a certain way just because I play a varsity sport.

I feel bad for those guys and gals who have nightmares on Tuesday nights knowing they are going to have to wear a tie or put up with sagging pantyhose all day long. All right, I am exaggerating just a bit, but some people do live in their tennis shoes and abhor dress codes.

Let's just say that the athletes don't mind the idea and willingly cooperate and are enthusiastic about it, will it work? Will this make us feel much better about ourselves and our role as far as being a part of college athletics?

Who knows, I guess we'll see. I agree that any idea that will boost morale can't be a bad one, but I do think a major reason for the slump is lack of interest and participation among the students.

Honestly, I cannot comprehend wanting to put the effort and passion into a sport without being excited about it. I know I'm hyped with softball season starting up next month. Athletes uphold the morale and create the excitement, whereas, the students show their support (and you can do that just by showing up), and players enjoy the game so much more. Everybody likes to feel a little school spirit.

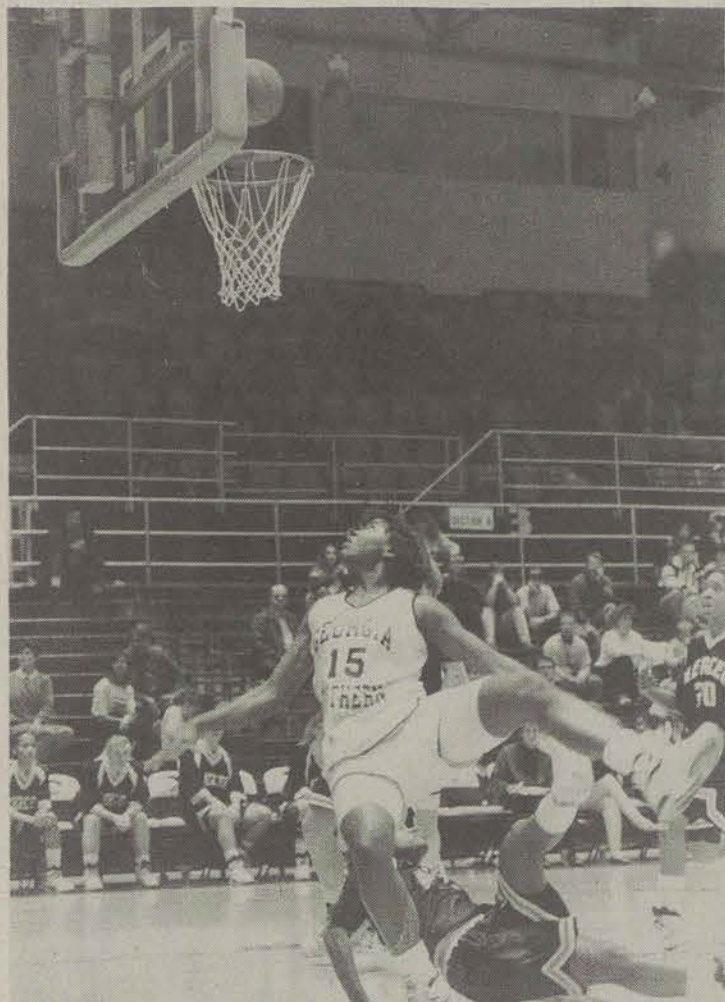

I haven't a clue as to how to boost morale among students. They already pay the fees to take part in the match-ups and if money wasted isn't incentive enough, I don't know what is.

There are other days that I think the athletic department could boost morale among athletes. Some teams don't get treated as fairly as others, like football and basketball (and I mean men's teams as well as women's). They just don't seem to get the respect that the more popular, money-making sport do. The old saying goes, "You get out of it what you put into it."

Anyway, get off your butts, GSU! There are tons of athletes (who can now be especially recognizable on Wednesdays) who dare you to get excited about school sports.

Lady Eagles annihilate Mercer 93-51

By John Munford
Sports Editor

The GSU Lady Eagles outscored the Lady Bears of Mercer 53-16 in the second half to cruise to a 93-51 victory, taking their record to a lofty 9-5.

The Lady Bears, without their star Andrea Congrales, who led the nation in scoring last year, had a total of 20 turnovers which the Lady Eagles capitalized on, as well as some very efficient passing in the second half.

Four Lady Eagles hit double figures, led by Stephanie Christmas' 21 and followed by Andrea Autrey with 14, Tara Anderson's 12 and Toy Williams who chipped in 11 to the effort.

As well as being short their star player, the Lady Bears only dressed out eight of their players and they looked the part as they struggled to keep control of the ball, especially against the tenacious defense of the GSU ladies.

Guard Jill Dunn mentioned, "We were pleased with the win. We picked it up in the second half, but we need to start our games quicker in the first half." This was the case again for the ladies as they scored 13 more points in the second half than they did in the first.

As far as rebounds are concerned, the team divided the spoils equally as Andrea Autrey led the team with seven and two ladies were tied at five and four a piece, respectively.

From the three-point line, the Lady Eagles depended on the sharp-shooting of Anderson who was two-for-two. Dunn also added two three-point baskets to account for her six points of the game.

On the whole, the team played well, especially after catching fire in the second half. If they play as well this weekend at home against

GSU gentlemen split games on the road at VMI and Marshall

GSU	73
VMI	70

After being beat Saturday by a tough Marshall team, the GSU men's team bounced back and beat a stingy VMI squad at Cameron Hall.

The Eagles trailed in the game for the first fifteen minutes of the opening half, but managed to pull it close for the half as GSU lead 35-33 at the whistle.

The second half was fairly close, but the Eagles did manage to sustain the lead for most of the last twenty minutes of the game. VMI did mount somewhat of a comeback in the last five minutes only to fall short to GSU.

The leading scorer for the Eagles was Shawn "The Shed" Brown with 21 points. The leading rebounder for GSU was also "The Shed" with 9 boards. This game put the Eagles overall record at 10-3 and 4-1 in the Southern Conference.

GSU	74
MARSHALL	75

Saturday, the Eagles men's basketball team suffered their first conference loss of the year before a crowd of 6,700 at the Henderson Center in Huntington, West Virginia.

The Eagles had come into the matchup against the "Thundering Herd" with an overall record of 9-2 and 3-0 in Southern Conference play.

Through the first five minutes of play the game had been close, the lead never extending over five points for either team.

From the 13:26 mark until the 3:19 mark in the first half, Marshall kept a lead of at least three points.

When Warren Johnson connected on three of his eighteen points with 3:03 remaining in the first half the Eagles regained the lead which they had previously held at the :46 mark midway through the first half.

For the last three minutes of the first half, the score fluctuated back and forth with Marshall holding the lead 34-

33. The Eagles came out strong in the second half and played well to build a strong eleven point lead at the 10:22 mark. Coach Kerns felt that the Eagles had played well to open the second half, "Our guys played well against a talented

4. News stories. This is the part where the unbiased reporter stuff you've heard about comes in. In these babies, the writer makes every attempt to report the facts as objectively as possible.

That means that even if the writer thinks GSU President Nick Henry is a swell guy, writing "President and all-around swell guy Nick Henry announced today ..." would be totally inappropriate.

In the course of the story, the reporter will usually quote several people, who are usually not very unbiased. As long as the writer signifies the information is coming from someone else, no rules are broken and the reader's delicate sensibilities should not be disturbed.

5. Sports stories. If I need to tell you what a sports story is, you shouldn't be in college.

FREE dirt dessert

At Pizza Inn, we want to dish some dirt — that is, our "dirt dessert," a sinfully rich parfait chock-full of chocolate sandwich cookies and creamy dessert. Dessert at Pizza Inn? Absolutely. Another favorite is stromboli, a handmade crust buttered and filled with brown sugar, cinnamon and nuts, and baked to a golden brown. And desserts are just the beginning. We also have quesadillas, burgers, homemade soups, an extensive salad bar, vegetarian items, hot & spicy wings, hot sandwiches, pasta, grilled chicken salads and much more — including terrific pizza, of course. In fact, you can check out what we have to offer and get a free dessert. Just look in your paper on Tuesday, January 26, for an insert with our menu and bring it with you on your next visit to Pizza Inn. We'll give you a free "dirt dessert" with your meal purchase.
