Real estate showdown: Men wrestle over parking space

MIDDLETOWN, Conn. (AP)—Dave Gellman and Victor Saraceno, who between them have lived on the planet for 144 years, got into a tussle last week over a piece of prime real estate—a parking space.

Middletown police said Saraceno, a retired 78-year-old laundry worker, was parked in a handicapped parking space last Thursday when Gellman drove up, looking for a place to park.

Gellman, 66, of Cromwell, has a handicapped parking permit, police said. Saraceno doesn't.

"I have neurological damage from a severe case of Lyme Disease," Gellman, a former accountant, said Friday when contacted at home. "On the day in question I was headed to the supermarket and I was hurting."

When he arrived at the supermarket, Gellman said, he found a Thunderbird parked in the handicapped space out front. The car's motor was running and a man was sitting on the driver's side.

"I asked the man to move," said Gellman, who walks with a cane. "He refused."

Even mild-mannered accountants have their boiling point. Gellman told the man he was calling the police. Then he wheeled his Chevrolet Caprice Classic behind the Thunderbird, just to make sure the evidence stayed put.

That's when the Thunderbird driver, later identified as Saraceno, emerged from his car. Gellman recalls an exchange of harsh words.

"Then, the next thing I know I'm down on the ground," he said. "This guy keeps yelling that he is going to beat the crap out of me. When I got up I tried to use my cane to defend myself, but I ended down on the ground again. At that point someone from the store came up and grabbed him."

Nunn chides Aspin as 'Home Alone' defense chief

WASHINGTON (AP)—What does Defense Secretary Les Aspin, the 54-year-old, bespectacled former congressman, have in common with the precocious boy surviving without parental supervision in the "Home Alone" movies?

Absolutely nothing, right?

Not so says Sen. Sam Nunn, D-Ga., chairman of the Armed Services Committee. "We're calling Aspin Home Alone," Nunn told a handful of reporters Thursday.

The lawmaker was referring to the dearth of appointments to various Pentagon civilian posts that have left Aspin and a few aides running the Defense Department.

President Clinton has been slow to fill many sub-Cabinet jobs, including several key Pentagon posts. Not one service secretary has been nominated.

Although Nunn initially joked about the situation, he later said he was concerned that the jobs had not been filled. "We really need people over there," he said.

Student government admits wrongdoing

SGA senatorial seats filled without a vote; president Brown pleads he 'forgot to do it'

By Christopher Cole
Staff Writer

The Student Government Association's Executive Committee apologized for a violation of its constitution involving the illegal appointment of four student senators since the last campus election.

According to information leaked to The George-Anne by sources both inside and outside Student Government, the senators were seated without a proper vote by the entire SGA body, as prescribed by the organization's constitution.

SGA advisor Sandra Terry said Tuesday night that it was "an honest mistake."

Article V, Section 1 of the SGA Constitution, titled "Vacancies," reads:

"In the case of a vacancy in the on-campus or at-large senatorial positions, applications will be taken for one week following the vacancy of the position. Interviews will be held by the executive officers and applicants will be submitted to the Senate, along with recommendations. Replacement appointments will be made by majority vote of the senators present."

Student Senators Ellen King, Ronco Johnson, Serena Spears and Cindy Smith have all been improperly seated in the body.

According to SGA President Jonathan Brown, the four were chosen from a pool of about 25 applications left over from the last nominating process. He said the last process was legally followed, but this time the Committee "forgot to do it." New applications were not collected for the latest vacancies.

"We did not even think about it, ... it kind of got lost."

Jonathan Brown,
SGA president

At SGA meetings, the Committee introduced the new senators without mentioning the vote of consent required by the constitution, thus bypassing the Senate's right to confirm or reject them.

"We did not even think about it," Brown said Tuesday. "It kind of got lost."

"There was no bias; we just got busy and didn't think about it."

Dr. Jack Nolen, GSU Vice President of Student Affairs, said the appointment of the senators was a clear-cut error.

"If there is a violation of the constitution, it needs to be corrected," Nolen said. "It's a fairly simple thing. They should be following the constitution."

Terry said the four senators would remain seated despite the violation in procedure.

"They are abiding students with the G.P.A. requirements who have an interest in SGA," she said. "No senators to my knowledge have expressed discontent. They will go on serving SGA."

Student Senator Ken Pisell, who was elected last spring, said he had "noted a discrepancy" regarding the situation. Pisell hosts a WVGS radio show on Monday afternoons which covers SGA affairs.

The SGA Executive Committee, having been notified of the impropriety, discussed the issue in a closed session Tuesday.

Terry said after the meeting that in the past, the Committee "has gone through proper procedures," but that this time, "we failed to bring it to a vote by the general assembly."

"We see it as a mistake anyone could have done," she said.

While Brown said the illegal procedure was not an intentional impropriety, he admitted that the executive committee "were wrong for just not thinking about it."

The Henderson Library LRC hopes to alleviate some of the end of the quarter overcrowding. (File)

LRC gearing up for end of quarter

By Erin Klevens
Staff Writer

The Learning Resources Center is making plans to better accommodate students using the facilities during finals week.

Billy Strickland, the LRC's technical coordinator, said that the center hopes to improve the lab sometime in the near future by providing more computers. The center presently has 80 computers, 65 of which can have WordPerfect used at one time.

"We also want to upgrade our licenses to WordPerfect because that's what most people use," Strickland stated.

More licenses would allow more than 65 additional people to use WordPerfect at one time.

Strickland stated that the problem of overcrowding exists during finals week because of the students' tendency to wait until the last minute to finish reports and research papers.

The last minute rush has resulted in a waiting list of as much as a page and a half of names in the past. Students have had to wait anywhere from a half-hour to two hours for time on the computer.

Alphonso Brown, a sophomore Computer Science major, has given up on using the LRC during finals week.

"I turn to other means by going to my roommate and using his computer," Brown stated. "I've come to not depend on the library for the computers."

Strickland did state, however, that students who only need to print will probably be spared the long wait.

"If we're extremely busy or short-handed, we usually ask them to wait," he said. "But sometimes we'll print it for them if it's something we can do real quick, like a WordPerfect document."

Despite the LRC staff's attempts to make it easier, sophomore political science major Julie Law said that she has been unable to use the Learning Resources Center during finals week.

"It was so packed that I just turned around and left. I wasn't able to find another computer to use," Law said.

Strickland advises students to get their reports done early in order to avoid the hassle of overcrowding the center.

"We are open 24 hours during the week, but the best time to get things done is during the day when most people are in class," Strickland said.

Don't become a victim

Take precautions to avoid being raped

By Selena E. McKinnon
Assistant News Editor

The alleged rape that occurred in Winburn Hall last Saturday has raised concerns about personal safety on campus.

"It has been a real challenge to get women to report a rape," said Whitney Himes, Health Educator.

She attributes this to the stigma often placed on the victim, and to misconceptions about the crime.

"Rape has nothing to do with sex. It is an act of violence, usually motivated by a desire to control or dominate," Himes stated.

Using the "buddy system" is the best protection against rape, according to Himes.

"In class, anytime you went out you had the 'buddy system.' You held someone's hand and you stuck with that person. I think that applies today," Himes said. "Going places by yourself just isn't a good idea."

Other ways of implementing the buddy system are knowing your friends' friends, keeping up with who your friends will be with and having a number where they can be reached.

Himes also recommends taking self-defense classes.

"You better the chance that you will be able to respond. Any type of response can make a difference," Himes said.

She added that self-defense classes have other benefits such as making you aware of vulnerable positions and situations people put themselves in.

Taking advantage of defense devices such as Mace and personal alarms may also ward off attackers, according to Himes.

"[The alarms] make a loud sound that is going to draw some attention," Himes said. "And they are obviously not going to fumble or mess with it because by that time you can run off."

Himes also suggested more specific recommendations for college students, particularly those who enjoy Statesboro's night life.

"You shouldn't let your roommate wander off even if it's someone you know from a club or a fraternity or someplace," Himes said. "Sometimes she may be drunk and not using common sense."

Himes recommends keeping the roommate and her new friend with you or getting a number where you can contact her.

Top Step to help at high school

Volunteers to be mentors to needy students

By Enoch W. Autry
Assistant News Editor

After only its third year at GSU, the Top Step tutoring program is adding the high school level to its current operation grades in 2 through 6 starting today.

Top Step, which began Jan. 8, 1990, will assist students at Statesboro High School (SHS), 10 Lester Road, as part of a pilot program to "tutor a variety of courses," according to Volunteer Services Director Victoria Futch.

Robbie Hedstrom, a senior public relations major who is assisting Futch with news releases, said that chemistry, algebra, trigonometry, geometry, calculus, physics and biology will be tutored at SHS.

"There are currently 20 spots available for prospective volunteers who choose to tutor in multiple subjects or just one," Hedstrom stated.

In an effort to expand involvement in Top Step, Futch said, "It has

Self-study completes phase one this week

By Libby Deeley
Staff Writer

This week marks the finalization of the committee reports for GSU's self-study team. Once the twelve reports are turned in to Project Director Hal Fulmer, phase two will begin.

In this phase, Fulmer and his editor Olivia Edenfield will extract portions to be included in the final report which will be sent to the Southern Association of Colleges and Schools (SACS).

Before the report is sent to SACS for consideration, it will be on display at the Henderson Library during Spring Quarter of 1993, for perusal by students and faculty alike. It will assess how well GSU has satisfied the criteria, or "must statements," set forth by SACS in order to justify re-accreditation, Fulmer said.

Basically, the report will encompass what GSU has achieved since its last appraisal in 1984, what challenges are currently being faced and handled and what the university's projected goals and solutions are. The point is to "make sure that we pass with honors," according to Fulmer.

Fulmer stated that even though the final draft has not yet been compiled, research for the reports has been extensive. Information gleaned for the committee reports has included student interviews, surveys and demographic studies.

Because committee heads have a tendency to be hard on themselves when judging their own strengths and weaknesses, Fulmer said that the integrity of the final report will be well received.

Spring Break travel

Students ready to get the hell outta here!

By Melanie Cooper
Staff Writer

Spring Break is right around the corner - less than a month away - and many students have Florida on their minds.

Daytona and Panama City are the beaches most people think of when spring break is mentioned. Daytona is known for its boardwalk and as the host of the MTV Spring Break, which has games, contests, and other forms of entertainment. Panama City boasts as being the "family vacation" beach, yet students see it as a spring break party haven.

Other Florida cities are also beckoning Spring Break tourists. Ft. Lauderdale, Ft. Meyers, and Jacksonville have been popular vacation beaches in the past, and they still are today.

"My friend and I are going to Jacksonville, and he's going to teach me to surf," said Laura Krabbe, a junior at GSU.

Not all students are looking for a place to party the last week in March. Heidi Bland, Office Manager for Travel Saver, said that most of the people seeking travel assistance for spring break have asked for quieter places this year. Daytona and Panama were the hot spots last year, she said, but this year she has recommended Destin, Fla., St. Augustine, Fla. and Cancun.

Bland said that cruises were very popular this year. A cruise offers food, lodging and entertainment in one price package, and can accommodate both large groups and single parties.

Cruises have also proved to be considerably cheaper than hotels or condos on the beach. A "cheap" motel on the boardwalk in Daytona costs about $79 a night, which runs about $475 for the week. This is just for lodging, whereas a cruise costs $285 for four days, including food, beverages and entertainment. A Days Inn, a mile and a half away from the beach in the Florida Keys, goes for about $125 a night.

Still, students are willing to spend this kind of money for spring vacation fun. The average estimate of funds spent during the week of spring break range from $250 to $500.

Why do so many students tend to shell out the money? "Because it gives students a chance to get away from reality," said Keith Simington, a junior at GSU.

The average student makes plans for spring break travel, without the use of an agency. They call around to hotels or condos that they have heard of, or been to before, or go with friends who have been to that particular area before.

Most students are driving to their spring break destination. Gas is much cheaper than airfare, and Bland said that "Savannah is an awful market" for flying. A few international students are flying to their homelands for the break, but flying expenses are usually out of the question for most college students.

Other students are going home or staying in Statesboro. They are either working, or simply

The majority of students leaving town are headed for warmer areas. In addition to Florida, students might be going to California, Mexico or even Hilton Head. However, there are students who are going skiing, or up north to New York and Cape Cod.

Nevertheless, Florida is the main thing on students' minds. They will be heading in droves to the South, and concentrating on the popular beach areas of Panama City and Daytona Beach. According to Lori Driver, a freshman at GSU, these beaches are very popular "cause they are the party places."

SGA recommends raising the students' athletic fees

By Christopher Cole
Staff Writer

Student Government voted 14-7 to recommend raising the quarterly athletic fee from $52 to $55 on Tuesday. At the same time, the body of senators refused to pen an opinion on raising the health services fees from $34 to $40 per quarter.

A representative from the athletic department asked SGA to recommend raising the fee to pay for at least one more women's sport and 12 athletic scholarships to the GSU program.

NCAA requirements dictate that GSU must offer at least seven sports for each gender. Currently, men have eight sports and women have six. To even it out, the department is considering adding women's soccer in the fall of 1993 and women's track in '94-'95. The department also needs to add one men's scholarship and 11 women's scholarships to the program in order to meet requirements.

To pay for these projects, the department is asking the school to increase students' athletic fees by $3. That would bring the amount up to $55.

SGA voted 14-7 in favor of recommending an increase to the administration. SGA does not have the power to raise fees unilaterally, but the recommendation carries weight in the decision-making process.

Because health services did not present a justification for raising its fee $6, from $34 to $40, SGA would not make a decision on the proposal. Student Senator Karen Brooks was concerned about how the money would be spent, and commented on what she perceived as "slow service" from the health staff for minor treatments.

"Those are legitimate concerns," SGA Advisor Sandra Terry said. Terry suggested interested senators approach the health department and research the proposed fee hike.

In other business Tuesday night, SGA began to dip into funds set aside for spring quarter by granting $184 to Alpha Kappa Delta, the International Sociological Honorary fraternity. The group asked for $633.20 to help pay for a trip to the Southeastern Undergraduate Sociology Symposium.

SGA agreed to pay $48 for gas, and other expenses for two members who are presenting papers at the symposium. Those members will receive $116 for hotel rooms and $20 for registration.

The expenditure takes $175 out of SGA funds reserved for next quarter. However, the transaction is proper because the funds are informally reserved rather than legally budgeted.

Proposal may rain on students' homecoming parade

By Melissa Sherrer
Staff Writer

A recommendation has been made to the calendar committee to cancel the Friday homecoming holiday for fall 1993, according to Vice President of Student Affairs Jack Nolen.

Nolen made the proposal to the university's event scheduling committee, and they are in favor of the recommendation, but no final decision has been made.

The holiday was originated to get all GSU students involved in homecoming activities.

The reason for the recommendation is the great decline in student involvement in homecoming activities.

Nolen said that at least 50 percent of residence hall students left on Thursday for a three-day weekend. In addition, this year's residence halls did not enter any floats or decorations for homecoming.

The parade involvement has also declined.

Nolen believes that the homecoming holiday is not serving its purpose.

If the holiday is canceled, the parade will not be affected. The parade will go on as scheduled at 3 p.m. with classes being canceled at that time.

Nolen said that SGA has been notified and is not in favor of the recommendation.

At this time, Nolen has not received any justification for not having the holiday.

Boy baffled by choices

What to do with four girlfriends

Dear Annie,

I think I'm in love with four women at the same time. They are similar in the fact that I think they're all incredibly sweet and caring. They're also all very beautiful.

I'm not into this multiple dating thing, so maybe you can help me figure out who to ask out.

Bachelorette #1 has a medium build, a beautiful face and nice legs, which drive me wild. There are times when she feels comfortable enough with me to share her problems, which I have told her I don't mind at all, because I like her so much.

Problem is, there are times when she seems to feel very comfortable around me and I get the impression that she thinks she couldn't use a man for anything, because of her coldness. Numerous people who don't know her as well as I do tell me that they hate her guts, but that doesn't affect how I feel about her.

I know she is a wonderful person for all the things she has done for me, and I love how she stands up for herself.

Bachelorette #2 has a slender build, has fairly pretty blond hair and is very athletic, as well as being my height (tall) and very beautiful. We get along very well and have gotten to the point where communication is not a big problem, but time is.

She's very busy and I feel bad asking her to hang out with me when she might already have plans with her other friends. I feel that even though we can't spend much time together, she may be worth the wait in the long run, but I also don't want to go chasing an empty dream.

She's not the type of girl that guys usually chase, but that doesn't bother me. I think she is wonderful.

Bachelorette #3 is a nice girl who I talk to at work. We haven't become close friends, but I have shared enough of her experiences to know that she is a lot like me: a lot of rotten things happen to her at one time and really drag her down, and I do my best to cheer her up.

She is also very beautiful and there really are no drawbacks that I can see with her yet, but I don't know her as well as I do the others.

Bachelorette #4 is a girl that I have gotten closer and closer to since the beginning of the quarter. She always has something bugging her when I see her, but she is able to and really wants to talk to me on a human to human basis, because she is interested in who I am.

I am interested in who she is too, and she steers the conversation to talk about things that I usually never talk to anybody about. It also seems to me that she is coming on to me. I can't go into the subtle details, but I must admit that I've always wanted to know how it felt to be the object of someone's desire and it makes me feel incredible.

I know a lot about her and feel comfortable around her, yet am hesitant to ask her out because of the three other reasons listed above. I do find her more and more beautiful each day.

Me: I am a tall guy with skinny build and features that some women might find attractive.

Girls I am acquainted with have told me that I am a wonderful, really nice person and will find myself somebody when I least expect it. I don't really expect it now, but I would like to establish a serious relationship with someone to see what it is like, since I have never allowed myself to get close to a woman before. Help me choose the right one, Annie.

Clueless

Dear Clueless,

So you've encountered the old paradox: Freedom of choice. The only problem is that one spends so much time trying to decide that nothing is ever chosen. It's up to you to break that pattern and take action.

All of these girls sound like great people, and you sound like a good guy yourself.

You are right in not listening to the unjustified criticisms of other people (in regards to girl #1). Make your own decisions.

In regards to girl #2, you shouldn't feel bad about spending time with her. If she's very busy, then you know that if she spends time with you, you must be worth her time.

As for girl #3, remember that being involved with someone with whom you work can sometimes put you into very delicate situations.

It sounds to me like you know that #4 has a thing for you. If you are shy or hesitant about making the first move, it sounds like this is the girl who will undoubtedly take your discomfort away.

If you're interested in a serious relationship, then you should shop around and not just jump into something before you know what it's all about.

If you do decide to go out with more than one girl at a time, you need to be honest with them and let them know that you are seeing someone other people.

Most guys would kill to be in your position. Good luck!

Dear Annie,

I have a friend who calls me every day at least three times a day to complain about all her "horrible" problems.

It wouldn't be so bad if the girl had real problems, but she complains to me about the trivial, meaningless inconveniences in life, such as how her boyfriend got her only a half dozen roses for Valentine's day instead of the dozen that she was expecting.

When I tell her that her problems aren't so bad (understate-

Annie's Advice

By Annie Swanson, The George-Anne's resident advice columnist.

ment), she tells me that I just don't understand.

In addition to her petty problems, if I start to tell her about my problems, she says, "You think that's bad? Well..."

I know that I haven't said a positive thing about my friend, but she can be a really fun person when she's at her best.

How do I get her to realize what a chronic complainer she is?

Ear to complaining friend

Dear Ear (ha ha ha),

If you have already tried indirect, subtle methods of indicating to your friend what a pain she can be, bluntness is needed immediately.

Tell her that you don't want to hear about her problems when there are people in the world who have real problems (like you, having her for a friend).

Tell her to try having a conversation without making one single complaint. If she complies with your request, her recovery may be like that of an alcoholic's: one day at a time.

Whatever you do, don't waste your time listening to stupid complaints. Whenever she starts in on it, tell her that you have to go, and if she's got a brain, she'll get the message.

SGA needs serious change

In violating their own constitution in regard to appointing students to senatorial positions, the Student Government executive committee has defeated the very purpose of their organization: to accurately represent the student body as a whole.

It was discovered by the George-Anne this week that four students currently serving on the senate were hand-picked by the SGA executive committee to fill vacated seats, instead of being voted upon by their colleagues in the senatorial body as a whole, as the group's constitution requires.

When asked about the situation, SGA president Jonathan Brown said that, although the proper procedure has been followed in the past, the committee simply "forgot to do it" with the appointment of the four senators in question.

That Brown expects the student body to believe there was "no bias" in the selection process is an insult to the intelligence of everyone involved. If every member of the executive committee actually forgot about the existence of a procedure performed only last quarter, there is a level of incompetence involved which calls for immediate attention.

And if the committee members acted dishonestly, simply ignoring the rule for their own benefit, there is perhaps a greater issue at stake: the abuse of trust placed in the officers by the students who voted for them.

Whichever is the case, there need to be some serious changes made on the part of those running the show at SGA. A choice was made to vote these individuals into office, assuming they would act responsibly and ethically to better the lot of students in the GSU community.

But when rules are broken and positions are doled out by private choice instead of public vote, it certainly appears that choice was a poor one.

Racial suspect descriptions explained

In recent weeks, several callers to the George-Anne have questioned the paper's policy of using race as a description in news stories.

At issue have been a pair of police stories involving an apprehended suspect in an on-campus burglary case and two other separate stories in which the suspects were still unidentified and at-large at press time.

Callers expressed disapproval over the fact that the at-large suspects were identified as black males while the race of the burglary suspect, who they said was white, was not stated.

The policy of the George-Anne, and of most newspapers, is to give as complete a description as possible of suspects in a criminal case who are still at-large. This includes height, weight, approximate age, clothing and race when these details are available from police reports.

In a case where a suspect has already been apprehended by police, these details are not deemed necessary, because there is no present danger to the community.

Here, as at any student newspaper, writers are occasionally prone to making errors in journalistic style which escape the attention of the editors. But a look through G-A news coverage should show this system is used fairly consistently.

Hopefully, this information will end any appearance of racial inequality in the pages of this paper.

New era for artists combines individuality, 'human service'

The Reagan-Bush era saw a drastic reduction in government funding for the arts. Economic woes, federal funding cuts and the dismantling of the Federal Council on Arts and the Humanities have forced many artists, writers, and performers to realize that federal support of their efforts may very well be out of the question.

State and local government support has dwindled to nearly nothing; and corporate and foundation support has matched the bureaucratic retreat from involvement in the arts.

Hellen Cordes writes in the Utne Reader (March/April '93) of the development of a refreshingly innovative re-integration of new "approaches to surviving and overcoming the budget crunch" among members of the art community.

Some of the more easily recognizable are moves to combine art production with other community projects such as health, education, and community awareness improvements, using financial techniques to rescue declining arts organizations and utilizing low-cost tactics to maintain arts accessibility.

Art sellers have moved to international computer networking and abandoning their high-rent studio galleries, transforming wings of their homes into showrooms, effectively converting their homes into art galleries.

The appearance of Democrats in the White House may mean a resurgence of government funding for the arts in the future. However, Clinton's primary concern right now is fixing the economy. Any move to put money back into arts funding will be well in the future.

Rising artists would do well to apply their skills and talents to the varying aspects of the community...

The negative aspects of the phenomena are clear. Nevertheless, the positive changes shine in comparison.

One clear benefit of the changes is that the relative social significance of art will be increased. Once art is guided out of the galleries and into the mainstream, opportunists such as Paul Quatrochi, who has made millions of dollars dealing in stolen and imitation art, will not have as large of a market which is so easy to exploit.

Of course, the iconoclastic works of such greats as Picasso, Modigliani, Matisse, and Warhol will always be subject to trading abuses due to their aesthetic notability, historical significance, and unique qualities of style and form. Works of this category have always been perverted by placing ominous price tags on them.

And this probably will continue as long as someone has enough money to out-bid the next guy, whether or not the work is worth the money being offered.

What does all of this mean to you? Simply put, the arts will begin to mirror the emotions of the public, not just the

Geology club responds to SGA comments about educational trip

Dear Editor,

In response to SGA's organizational funding policies, the GSU Geology Club would like to refute [comments made in] the article in the Feb. 18 edition of the George-Anne.

The Geology Club would like to express its gratitude to receive the $50 allocated for their educational trip to the southeastern Appalachians. However, upon reading the follow-up article about the SGA executive committee meeting, we were disturbed by some misunderstandings expressed by the SGA.

We would like the following points to be understood concerning the Geology Club and our up-coming trip.

First, we would like to address the notion that the money would be spent "frolicking" in the mountains and that the SGA would be paying for our spring break.

The proposed field trip will be led by two reputable faculty members, Dr. Denise Battles and Dr. Kelly Vance. Dr. Vance specializes in Igneous Petrology, which is an essential part of the intended Appalachian mountain-range study.

This trip is for no other purpose than to increase the students' geological understanding of this orogeny. Consequently, extra-local trips are essential because there are no exposures of such rock within an hour-and-a-half drive of GSU.

Secondly, a price breakdown was included in the application to SGA with conservative cost figures for the four-day, 8-12 applicant trip. If, after fundraising, the cost of each individual student comes to under $20, as the SGA figures suggest, the minimum cost would still be over $120 (if the least number of students participated).

Local weekend trips are possible and occur about twice a quarter. However, when traveling out of state with professors, the minimum time required for driving, learning and setting up camp is at least four days.

The minimum was all the funding requested. Had we applied for a four-day trip at any other time than spring break, it would be interesting to know if results would have been the same.

It's too bad when a motivated, organized club that is interested in doing research and furthering education is discouraged, not encouraged, by disparaging remarks made by some members of the Student Government Association.

Thanks to those SGA members, however, who saw our sincerity and came to our defense.

SECOND WIND

Chris Sherwood

I have a real problem when a school decides that it must scrap a mens' program and add a new womens' team. Sure, it is nice that a school wants to add a womens' team because that just gives more ladies the chance to participate in college athletics, but when that same school decides that they must get rid of a mens' team for the sole reason of having the same number of womens' and mens' teams overall then they are wrong.

I just do not see how you can justify ruining mens' athletics at a school just to say that both men and women have the same number of sports programs, seems to me that doing this would just hurt the school. Before too long, the mens' diving team at a school could be cut to add that always competitive womens' badminton team.

The facts are hard to swallow if you are a female. Womens' sports just don't have much appeal. The last time I checked, there might have been twenty fans in Hanner to watch our Lady Eagles.

The sad thing about this is our Lady Eagles basketball team is the best female sport at this school and the most exciting to watch and they can't get any one to come see them play. I think that the GSU mens' golf team probably draws more fans, and thats golf.

One of the other arguments being waged by women is that they don't get enough money for their sports while representing their schools. Hey, from experience I know of many mens' teams that do not really get enough money either.

Basically what we are facing is an equalling of mens and womens sports in the NCAA. While this may sound good, there are many flaws in this one sided argument, and the men sports which face possible monetary cut backs can't do anything about this injustice.

Female athletes and coaches all around the country only care about getting what they deserve, sounds ok so far, right?

Many people may say that mens' and womens' sports at any NCAA member institution should be equal, but the leaders of Gender-Equity have gone too far with their argument.

The individuals who are in support of equity have made it clear that no matter what it takes, their womens' sports teams and programs should have the same money and support that their male counterparts have at any one school.

Unless I am mistaken, the womens' teams at GSU draw about as many fans as a good funeral in Death Valley California(not too many). On the other hand, the mens' basketball team and several other mens' teams at this school draw a lot of students, both male and FEMALE.

And to think, these women want the schools to take some of the money they have for their mens' teams and put it in their womens' programs. I'm sorry, but I think that is ridiculous. To take money from a mens' sport which is working on nickels and dimes anyway and tell them they must give up part of what they have to fund a womens' team is not right.

Gender-Equality is way off base in its purpose and personally I do not like it. To ask schools to take away from their established mens' programs to help support womens' sports is just not right.

Eagles win one, lose one at home

In a game highlighted by terrific pitching from both teams, the Eagles defeated the Pacers of USC-Aiken 2-1 on Tuesday to improve their record to 4-5 on the season.

The Pacers jumped out on top in the second inning on a home run by left fielder Eric Chapman. But Eagle pitcher Ron Buffington shook it off to allow only two more hits on the game.

Buffington went seven innings to pick up his first win of the young season. He seemed pleased with his performance. "I felt real good out there. I got my pitches over and hit my spots. I just hung in there and the guys came through for me," noted Buffington.

The Eagles scored both of their runs in the seventh. Craig Cassidy and Brian Wiggins both reached after being plunked by Pacer reliever Chris Jones. Matt Wilson picked up his third hit of the game to score Cassidy. Wiggins then scored when Mark Lavenia, who replaced Jones on the mound, threw a fastball past catcher Dan Roney. Paul Thornton came on for the Eagles to pitch a flawless eighth and ninth to pick up his fourth save of the year.

Coach Stallings seemed satisfied with his troops' performance. "We played well today. We did some things to show that we were in the game and concentrating. We got the runs that we needed. It was a good ball game."

Jones took the loss for the Pacers, who fell to 7-3 on the season.

GSU came out looking emotionally drained after their victory over Georgia Tech on Sunday. South Carolina hitters shelled six Eagle pitchers for 18 hits on the game.

Crafty Carragher leads Eagle pitching staff

By Chris Sherwood
Staff Writer

The GSU baseball pitching staff is one of the most important keys to the success of their season. Jim Carragher is one of the team leaders on the mound for the Eagles this year.

There were a few reasons why Carragher chose to play baseball at GSU. "One of the reasons I chose to come to GSU was the great weather they have down here. In New Jersey it is hard to play ball until March because of the snow and down here it is nice and warm which is beneficial because we can play earlier," commented Carragher.

During his freshman year at GSU, Carragher only got to pitch three innings. "It was real tough during my freshman year because I did not get to play, I paid my dues and the coaches just told me to hang in and I would get my turn," mentioned Carragher.

After the Eagles came back from Omaha and The College World Series, Carragher had a choice to make. "I had to decide whether GSU was the place I needed to be at, I had not gotten any playing time and it was hard for me because of my success in high school," commented Carragher.

He stayed and it's a good thing he did. During his sophomore year in 1991, he appeared in 20 games and started 10 of them. He was named the TACC pitcher-of-the-week on April 8th as he pitched in 16 innings, allowing only eight hits, one run, eight walks and 12 strikeouts. Overall during his sophomore year, Carragher posted a 5-3 record with two complete games.

Carragher's junior year saw him post an 8-6 record. He was selected as the pitcher-of-the-week for March 16th. His best showings came in during the Southern Conference Tournament. In the tournament, he posted an era of only 1.93 by giving up four runs over 18 plus innings. Carragher was selected to the Southern Conference all-tournament team because of his superior effort on the mound for the runner-up Eagles.

So far this season, Carragher has already made his impact known on the mound for GSU. He went eight plus innings last Sunday, picking up the victory as the Eagles beat second-ranked Georgia Tech 7-3.

"I wasn't at my best, but I made them hit the ball and our defense really stepped up and made the plays we needed to win," mentioned Carragher.

Ladies take Southern States Tourney for fifth year in a row

By Mychal Thibodeaux
GSU Athletic Media Relations

GSU's Lady Eagle swimming and diving team captured its fifth consecutive Southern States Championship title Sunday night at Davidson College, outscoring rival University of Louisville 763.5-624.

Eight school and meet records were broken by the Lady Eagles as they took advantage of their narrow 72.5 point lead entering the last day of events by outscoring the Lady Cardinals 271-200 on Sunday to win going away.

GSU took second through fifth place in the 200-yard backstroke to boost their lead to 115 points with five events left and were never threatened.

The ladies set new GSU and Southern States marks in the 200-yard medley and 200-yard freestyle relays while Karen Brewer swam a new GSU and meet-best time of 58.26 seconds in the 100-yard backstroke. Freshman Courtney Mixon set new school standards in the one and three-meter diving competitions for GSU.

Head coach Scott Farmer was named women's coach of the year, but Stacey Scheible was edged out for swimmer of the year even though she won the last four meets of her illustrious GSU career. In her four years at GSU, she lost just three individual races and was named the Southern States women's swimmer of the year in 1990 and 1992.

The men bid farewell to head coach Gordon "Bud" Floyd after his 22 years at the head of the GSU swimming program by edging Towson State University 379.5-332 for a fourth place finish in the 10-team competition.

The Louisville Cardinals easily out-paced the rest of the pack by totaling 796 points.

Senior Mark Brown and junior Rob Butcher finished fifth and ninth overall in the 200-yard breaststroke to lead four Eagle swimmers to top-15 finishes in the event and give GSU a 311.5-285 lead over Towson with three events remaining. Freshman Rob Yant finished eighth in the three-meter diving and the 400-yard relay team placed sixth to clinch the fourth spot for the Eagles.

The GSU 200-yard relay team established a new school record of 1:27.04 on Saturday, while Butcher eclipsed his own record in the 100-yard breaststroke with a time of 59.86 seconds to finish second overall.

Hedstrom said that Top Step has already been recognized by former President George Bush as a 'Point of Light' award recipient.

Over 800 students have participated in the one-hour-a-week program for an excess of 1000 hours of service since the program was installed, Futch stated.

A participant would work with on-site coordinator Charles Brown at the school in the media center starting at 3:10 p.m., at the end of the school day, Futch said.

"What you do in the confines of the program is act as a mentor and a role model," she said.

A tutor must have a 2.0 GPA and must attend a one hour and 15 minute workshop.

"We do workshops at the beginning of the quarter," Futch said, "Special workshops will be conducted because of the addition of the high school level."

In an attempt to become closer with the student, a tutor can be a friend too, according to Futch.

"We work with the student academically, but we allow time to work with them on socialization programs," Futch said, using taking the student to a GSU baseball game as an example.

SELF-STUDY

Additionally, Fulmer said that phase three will begin once the report is sent to SACS and reviewed. A team from that organization will then visit GSU late February 1994.

SACS's site team will observe the areas established in the report as criteria for reaccreditation and ultimately compare the reliability and truthfulness of the report to the existing conditions. The vote for reaccreditation will occur in December 1994, Fulmer stated.

Fulmer anticipates that SACS's visit in 1994 will be a positive one. The attitude taken by the site team will not be to look for defects, but to notice improvements.

Overall, the university's experience with SACS has been positive, and the self-study has been well received by GSU administration, Fulmer said.

Fulmer gave credit to the accommodations that he and his staff have received—such as office space and release from classroom duties—in order to complete their tasks efficiently.

artist as an individual.

"Programs in which artists help groups such as the mentally and physically disabled, disenfranchised teens and prison inmates improve their lives through artistic expression." (Utne Reader, March/April '93) The trend is good for the artist, offering economic survival and continued freedom of expression, and for the subject groups, offering a chance for personal development and expression.

Operation Hammer, a facility for mentally ill and homeless men in Los Angeles, uses performance to reduce frustration and psychotic behavior by allowing the men to write and act in their own plays.

High Performance, the art-trade journal which featured Operation Hammer, also showcased Treasure Smith, who left her Chicago studio canvasses to make eye-catching and informative posters for inner-city agencies that offer health, legal and other services.

This "art as human service" occurred on the GSU campus last spring when a student artist painted a banner expressing the feelings we all should have regarding discrimination.

Rising artists would do well to apply their skills and talents to varying aspects of the community.

This is not to say they should compromise their individual integrity. That individuality should be used to benefit the community, not just the art world.

This practice would allow for a greater cultural awareness and an opportunity for the artist to pursue his passion, art.

It would also allow the artist to eat on a regular basis.

CARRAGHER

New Jersey, Carragher was unstoppable. In his three letter career, his record as a varsity player was 20-3 with an earned run average of 2.01.

During the 1988 season, Carragher led his team to the state finals. In his senior year of 1989, Carragher had an era of only (.98). One of his biggest highlights during his high school career came when he was named to the North Jersey "Dream Team".

The next start for Carragher will be on Saturday against Furman. "It's a big game for us because it is the start of our Southern Conference play," mentioned Carragher.

Residence hall occupants can decrease their chances of being attacked by forming watch groups, according to Himes.

"Anytime there is someone in the residence hall who doesn't belong there, the girls need to team up and make sure that person leaves," Himes said.

of work. Pitcher Rich Pratt coasted through seven innings for the Gamecocks, allowing only five hits to pick up the win. The only good news for the Eagles offensively came in the second inning. Freshman Mark Hamlin picked up his third round-tripper of the year with a shot over the left field wall.

GSU begins their Southern Conference schedule this weekend at Furman. They will return home next to face UGA Tuesday at 7 p.m.
