Civil rights leader returns home to college

The Associated Press

DURHAM, N.C. — Why does a man leave a national post to steer a small university out of the mire?

Julius L. Chambers left his New York job as the director of the NAACP Legal Defense and Education Fund and stepped into the job of chancellor at N.C. Central University.

"Isn't it better to come work on a local level and work with people in trying to develop a mission of promoting tolerance and respect among people?" asked the serious, soft-spoken Chambers in an interview in his busy campus office.

For the tougher questions, he plucked rubber bands from a desk drawer, twisted the around his fingers in intricate maneuvers and answered earnestly.

Chambers, 57, came to work at his alma mater because he felt that North Carolina had people who would be receptive to his mission, he said. The school is one of the five traditionally black campuses of the UNC system's 16 campuses.

Chambers is raising academic standards, securing corporate donations and creating endowed chairs.

"There were a lot of areas that needed attention. He's addressed them all successfully," said C.D. Spangler Jr., the president of the UNC system.

Chambers, the black graduate of the law school UNC at Chapel Hill, is a former Charlotte lawyer who represented the plaintiff in Swann vs. Charlotte-Mecklenburg Board of Education. The case resulted in the U.S. Supreme Court's landmark decision of 1971 that said busing could be used to integrate schools.

During his work for desegregation in schools and other areas, Chambers' car and home were firebombed, and his office burned. Fortunately, he said, no one was injured in the incidents.

Fight breaks out at intramural game, sending one to hospital

By Chris Sherwood
News Editor

A fight at an intramural football game last Thursday night resulted in one student being transported to the Bulloch Memorial Hospital and many unanswered questions as to the motive for the fight.

"We really don't know why it happened, throughout the game there were no threats to the individual by the other team according to the witnesses," said GSU Division of Public Safety Capt. Buddy Peaster. "It's not uncommon for pushing and shoving to occur during an intramural game, but this was a case where a group of individuals ganged up on one individual when he was separated from the rest of his team."

Scott Garvin was knocked to the ground, stomped on and repeatedly kicked according to Peaster. He received a concussion and several abrasions and bruises.

"A CRI supervisor tried to shield him from the kicks, but she was thrown off," Peaster said. "Then they continued to kick him."

According to Peaster, it is unclear as to which of the members of the Stra8 Thugs were involved in the fight.

"We know that not all of them were involved, but we are in the process of identifying those responsible," Peaster said. "We will prosecute them to the fullest extent of the law."

The department of judicial affairs is also looking into the matter.

"I haven't read the report yet, it is still being investigated by public safety," Director of Judicial Affairs Edward Bayens said. "It is hard to say what action we will take until we get the report."

GSU Public Safety is usually called to an intramural game if there is a fight according to Peaster.

"When we get there, the fight is all ready over with most of the time, as was the case with this fight," Peaster said.

Campus Recreation and Intramurals has not made a ruling on the status of the Stra8 Thugs yet.

"We will make it on Wednesday," Assistant Director Kim Henson said.

$1 million grant to business department will boost studies

G-A Staff Reports

The Lotus Development Corporation has given the GSU College of Business Administration a grant of nearly $1 million in computer software and has included the school in its Adopt A School program.

"I first found out about the possibility of a grant through James Marlow, who is the marketing director there, he's a GSU graduate," Management Professor John Pickett said. "When I came back here I wrote up a proposal for the grant and submitted it."

GSU received the rights to use the company's Lotus Notes and Lotus SmartSuite computer software.

The grant is presented to the College through the GSU Foundation and it allows installation of up to 1,000 licenses for the software according to Pickett.

The SmartSuite software will be integrated into the curriculum for teaching computer courses.

Lotus Notes will be used for administrative purposes between the dean and the faculty.

Not all of the licenses will be used by the College, some will be available for the other departments through Vice President Harrison Carter.

The SmartSuite program is actually 5 different modules which include the Lotus Spreadsheets, graphical word-processing package, database, graphic presentation and computer based organizer.

Bookstore plans to publish list of books it will buy back in December

By Ayana Thomas
Staff Writer

The University Bookstore will publish a buyback listing in November in an effort to allow students time to decide whether or not they want to keep their books or sell them back.

According to Manager Joe Franklin, the purpose in publishing the listing is to inform students that the bookstore is having the buyback and to give students an advance indication of what kind of price they can expect for a book.

"It gives students time to think about their decisions to sell the books back," Franklin said. "Students can get the information at a time when they are calm and rational instead of during finals. They may want to come talk to me about their concerns about the price if they think that it is unfair."

There are two other school bookstores according to Franklin that publish a buyback listing. Georgia Tech has a privately owned bookstore which publishes a listing.

"About 15 years ago Armstrong State College published a listing," Franklin said. "It was posted in the student center, not the college newspaper."

"I FEEL THAT IT IS GOOD. I AGREE WITH THAT 100%. IT WILL HELP A LOT."

Specific prices will not be published. Instead, the course number, name of book, and whether it will be bought at wholesale or half price.

"It is too hard at this time to get the prices on there because there are about 1200 books with prices that would have to be looked up," Franklin said. "Maybe it will become part of standard procedure two quarters or a year from now, and the actual prices will be published."

Some students feel a buyback listing isn't enough.

"I don't see how that will make a difference if they are not going to put the actual price in there," senior Tameka Jones said.

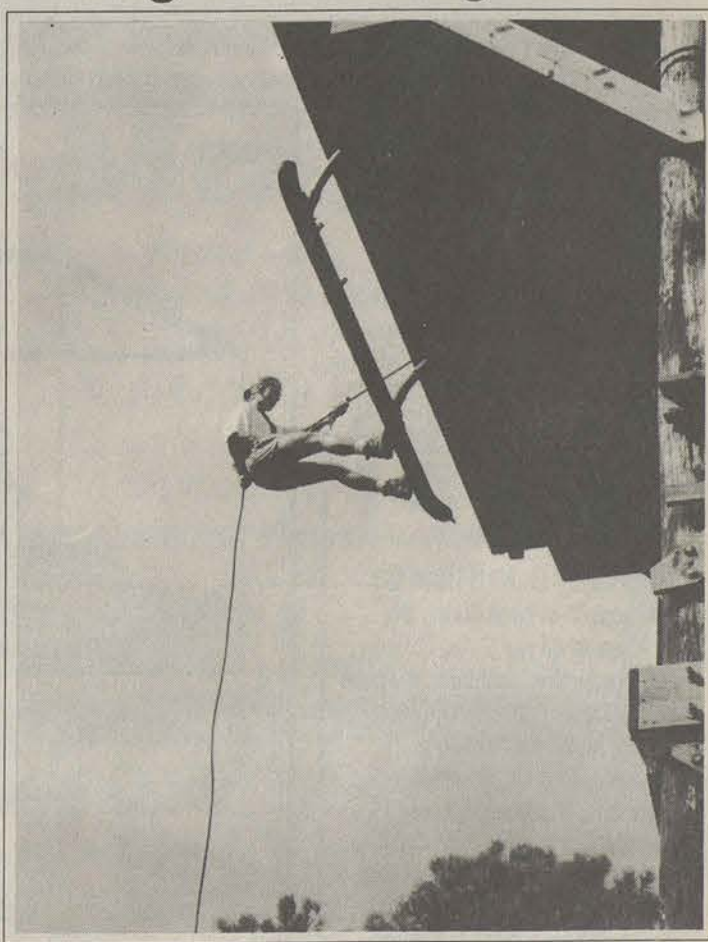

"I'd like it if they put the price on it so it can give people a guideline. That way they would know exactly what to expect," Skip Jackson said.

Some students were happy to see that a list would be finally available for use.

"I feel that it is good. I agree with that 100%. It will help a lot," Belinda Lemon said.

Further information explaining the meaning of the two different buyback prices, advantages, and disadvantages will be published along with the book listing.

Republican ads attack Democrats

By John King
The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Republicans turned to an old friend Thursday — the tax and spend issue — for a nearly $2 million ad blitz designed to sour voters on President Clinton and the Democratic Congress in the campaign's final days.

"Clinton and his Democrat Congress control Washington and what do we get?" said one of three new GOP ads. "More taxes, more spending, more government. That's not what we were promised. And that's not what this country needs."

Another ad highlights options in a White House budget memo leaked last week, charging that Clinton is considering Social Security and Medicare cuts and billions in new tax increases.

"Fed up with the Democrat double talk and hypocrisy on taxes and spending?" the narrator in this ad says. "On Nov. 8 — send the Clinton Congress home."

The tax issue has helped Republicans rebound in several close elections, including the Senate race in Minnesota and the Arizona governor's contest, so the Republican National Committee decided to make it a major focus of its advertising effort.

The White House quickly counterpunched, suggesting the GOP ads were proof of Democratic momentum. "They don't suddenly do $2 million worth of hit ads unless they are worried," said White House Chief of Staff Leon Panetta.

A new national poll offered a sliver of evidence to support the White House argument.

A Times Mirror survey of 1,577 registered voters taken Oct. 20-24 found that 47 percent planned to vote Republican in their House race, while 44 percent said Democratic. That was an improvement for Democrats over the last Times Mirror survey, and other polls this week have even shown Democrats with a narrow lead on the question.

The boost for Democrats was attributed to the success of some incumbents in steering the races away from Clinton and the national political climate and toward local issues.

It is that trend the Republicans clearly are trying to stop with their ads lambasting the "Clinton Congress."

RNC Chairman Haley Barbour said the ads would cost roughly $1.9 million and include a modest national purchase and heavier buys in targeted markets in 25 or so states, beginning Friday and running through Election Day.

The GOP ads are going up just as a $2 million Democratic effort winds down. In most states, the Democratic ads complete their runs this weekend, although in a few states they will continue for another week. Those ads suggested Republicans were planning Medicare and perhaps Social Security cuts, something the new GOP ads say is untrue.

Citing the White House budget memo, the Republicans say it is the Democrats considering such cuts, an argument the administration scrambled to rebut.

"For Republicans to go after Democrats on Social Security is like the National Enquirer accusing The New York Times of sensationalism," said Treasury Secretary Lloyd Bentsen.

Given the dismal poll numbers for Democrats over the summer and early fall, the White House had some reason to cheer the recent improvements, which have included somewhat better approval ratings for the president.

But the new Times Mirror study, which had a margin of error of plus or minus 3 percentage points, still suggested a bleak midterm outlook for Clinton and his party.

It showed Democratic support among middle-income voters on the decline, and suggested apathy among voters could produce a big GOP turnout advantage.

A glimmer of Democratic hope was in figures showing a slight abating of anti-incumbency sentiments. 55 percent, supported their incumbent for re-election.

Lobbyist to have direct access to new Indiana University President Myles Brand

The Associated Press

FORT WAYNE, Ind. — New Indiana University President Myles Brand says he will pay extra attention to the school's chief lobbyist in order to strengthen IU's relationship with state lawmakers.

Brand, who has said state funding is vital to IU's future, presented results of an internal report on the school's government relations to this week's board of trustees meeting.

"The report did confirm my early impression, my intuitions, namely: we are doing very well, but in fact we can do better," he said. "It's not that we have a problem to solve. The issue really is 'How do you ratchet it up?'"

Trustees met Wednesday and Thursday at the Indiana University-Purdue University campus in Fort Wayne.

Richard L. Kennedy, the retired vice president for government relations at the University of Michigan, wrote the report and was paid about $2,500 including expenses.

Brand said IU is well represented at the Indiana Statehouse by its chief lobbyist Don Weaver, the school's director of state relations. But he said there are areas for improvement.

Brand said he has given Weaver direct access to his office and will include him for the first time in senior staff meetings.

"Both from an external and internal standpoint, it shows the emphasis that President Brand has on state relations and working with the Statehouse," Weaver said.

Brand decided to review IU's success in government relations even before taking office in August.

He is also forming two committees of senior policy makers to discuss tactics for government relations, one for the state level, one for the federal.

The report recommended that IU create a vice president for government relations, something Brand chose not to do.

Kennedy interviewed several IU officials and state leaders in September for the nine-page study.

He found that some people think there is friction between the school and the Indiana Higher Education Commission, a state agency that reviews university budgets and academic proposals.

The study also found that some think the IU president needs to be more personally involved with the governor and state legislators.

"Previous chief executives seem to have a mixed record on this score," Kennedy wrote. "For some university presidents it was a hallmark of their administration; for others there seemed to be an unfathomable gulf between the president and the state capitol."

The report also concluded that efforts by the regional campuses to reach their local legislators are not always coordinated with the university administration's government relations.

It's important for all the campuses to work together, said Christopher Simpson, special assistant to the president.

"What we heard from other chancellors was, 'Tell us what the strategy is, we look forward to helping you reach all your goals,'" Simpson said.

Researchers receive patent for odorless, synthetic baby feces

The Associated Press

NEENAH, Wis. — Technicians at Kimberly-Clark Corp. once worked with real baby waste to make refinements to disposable diapers. It was a stinky job, but someone had to do it.

Now, those days are gone. Two researchers from Roswell, Ga., have invented synthetic feces that look and feel like the real thing, except they're odorless.

Working with employees at a research facility in Neenah, scientists Richard Yeo and Debra Welch developed a dry mix made of starches, natural gums, gelatins, fibers and resins. Water is added for the desired consistency.

Yeo and Welch even received a patent for the fake poop.

The new product is being used to develop better disposable diapers. Kimberly-Clark controls about 31 percent of the disposable diaper market in the United States.

Using human waste might seem natural, but it posed problems for researchers, said Keith Osteen, director of personal-care materials development for Kimberly-Clark.

"It's a biologically hazardous fluid," Osteen said. That meant researchers were forced to follow strict sanitary and disposal requirements.

Another problem is that technicians pretty much were ham-strung by what they received, Osteen said. A stool sample varies from child to child, depending on diet, age and other factors.

In the past, researchers tried using other products, such as mashed potatoes and peanut butter. While these foods had the requisite gooey properties, they lacked the proper chemical makeup.

Burglar falls asleep on the job, wakes up to the police

The Associated Press

BENSALEM, Pa. — Police say Carmen Martelli put in so much effort into burglarizing houses that he finally fell asleep on the job.

When Andrea Nutinsky came home to her townhouse Friday morning, she found evidence of a break-in and Martelli sound asleep in an upstairs bedroom.

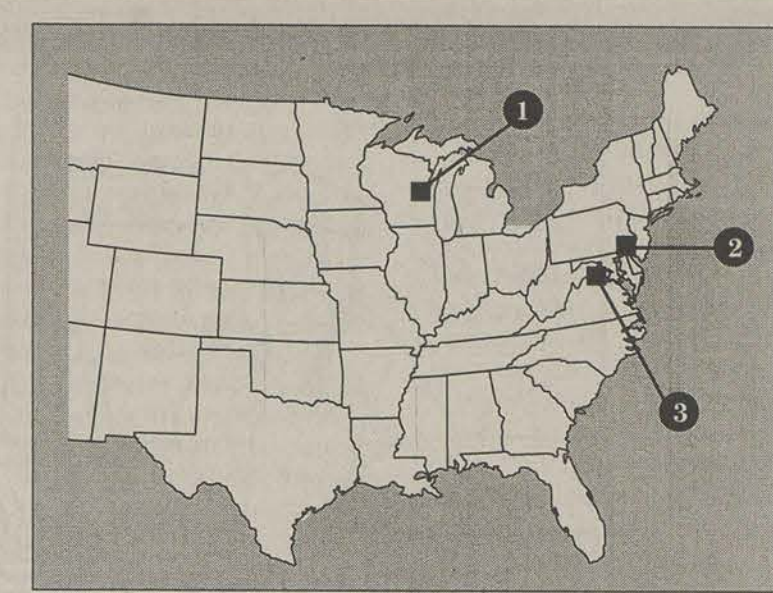

The 43-year-old suspect was still asleep when police arrived.

"We had five officers standing around him with their guns drawn... We had to wake him up to tell him he was under arrest," said Bensalem Police Capt. Jack Robinson.

Robinson said that Martelli "may have been tired from overworking."

Outside Nutinsky's residence, police found a car stolen from Philadelphia's Fishtown section and items inside the car that were stolen during a Wednesday burglary in Williamstown, N.J., Robinson said.

"And those are only the burglaries we know about," Robinson added. "(Martelli) had a pocketful of gold chains and necklaces that we haven't identified yet. It appears he's been quite busy."

In Bensalem, Martelli faces charges of burglary, theft, receiving stolen property, possession of an instrument of crime and criminal trespass.

Robinson said that retainers would likely be lodged against Martelli by authorities in Philadelphia and New Jersey.

The Associated Press

PURCELLVILLE, Va. — A 16-year-old Loudoun Valley High School student says he has been suspended for a naked 80-yard dash past his wildly cheering classmates during last week's homecoming pep rally.

Scott Woodward said he was told by Principal Kenneth Culbert that he would be suspended for two weeks. Woodward said Culbert recommended that he be transferred to another high school for the rest of his senior year.

Culbert and other school officials refused to discuss the case, saying student disciplinary matters are confidential. Under school policy, Woodward can appeal Culbert's recommendation to the district superintendent and, if necessary, the School Board.

Some parents say the punishment is too harsh, and students have started a petition for Woodward's reinstatement.

"This kid didn't bring a gun into school. He didn't bring drugs into school. He didn't fall down drunk in the hallway," said Paul Roxenberg, whose daughter is a classmate of Woodward's and who called Culbert this week on the youth's behalf. "Sure, teen-agers can be stupid sometimes. But I don't think streaking is a capital offense."

Man held for trial in friend's graveyard shooting

The Associated Press

IRWIN, Pa. — Three friends went to a graveyard one night to honor a dead friend. Only two of them left alive.

One of the men testified Monday that Chad Heasley was twirling a gun in his hands when it fired, hitting 23-year-old Frederick Gesler in the face.

Heasley, wearing a navy suit, snakeskin boots and shoulder-length hair, pleaded innocent and cried during his preliminary hearing. A magistrate said there was enough evidence to try him later on a homicide charge.

After a night of bar-hopping, Heasley, Gesler and Kenneth Poth Jr. went to Penn Lincoln Memorial Park, about 15 miles east of Pittsburgh, on Oct. 13 to visit the grave of William Forbes IV. Forbes died two months ago in a car crash. The friends made their way to his temporary grave marker by the glow of a lighter.

Heasley, 24, of North Huntingdon Township, told police, "We were all there crying and just there honoring him." He said the men hugged each other and asked each other, "Why do good guys like him die?"

Poth testified that he left a bandana near Forbes' name. Heasley told police he next drew his .44-caliber Magnum pistol, removed a silver bullet and left it on the grave to honor Forbes, a gun enthusiast.

Poth said he left the grave and listened to the radio in Heasley's truck. He returned when his friends did not follow.

"Fred was kneeled down by the marker. Chad was standing there twirling the gun," Poth said. "I walked up, gave (Heasley) a hug and said it shouldn't have happened.

"I stepped back a couple of feet. The gun went off. Fred dropped over sort of face-down but sideways a little bit. Chad grabbed him by the shoulders and said, 'Fred! Fred!'"

Heasley told police he did not remember cocking the gun, which he said went off as he tried to holster it. He told police he drank three shots of tequila and five beers the day of the shooting but did not feel drunk.

Heasley said he next drove to his girlfriend's house and told her the shooting was an accident. She drove him to his parents' house.

"I think it was a terrible and tragic accident, and it shows what happens when you mix guns and alcohol," said Heasley's attorney, Christopher Feliciani. "And maybe it should be for a jury to decide that it was in fact an accident."

He argued to have the charge reduced. District Justice Martha Medich declined.

"There is some indication that it may have been a reckless or negligent act and not a premeditated intentional act, but the evidence is going to speak for itself," Assistant District Attorney Jack Christin said.

Our Opinion

Recognize your responsibility

In one week, voters in Georgia and across the nation will head to the polls for midterm elections to fill every seat in the House and many Senate and governor positions.

One of the major criticisms of our college-age generation is we have forgotten some of our basic duties as citizens and we taken for granted the freedoms that our democratic system guarantees.

In particular, older generations often say we have shirked our responsibility to take part in the election process by boycotting the ballot box. They say that by failing to help choose our leaders, we have surrendered our future to mediocrity.

In the 1930s, electoral reforms throughout the Jackson Era expanded the right to vote to more groups of Americans. After the Civil War, amendments to the Constitution guaranteed the right to vote regardless of racial background. In 1920, women's suffrage was recognized as part of our basic laws. And in the 1960s, the right to vote was expanded to any citizen over the age of 18.

Were all of these important reforms, which we now seem to take for granted, implemented for nothing? There is only way our generation can show we appreciate the struggles of our ancestors to provide a better future.

Please vote on Tuesday, Nov. 8.

Backtalk

All you people who are constantly cutting down fraternities and sororities obviously have no idea what they are all about, so shut up!

This goes out to all the wanna-be MACKS: Contrary to popular belief, not all freshmen girls are lonely, desperate and easy. So don't think that we are all jumping at the chance to get with you. Because in most cases, it's just not true. So you better check yourselves and start treating us like ladies.

I like the idea of stomping the living shit out of people who "break" the noise ordinance.

If we are going to get rid of "c," why not get rid of "x" too? Of course, then you couldn't have "fox" — you'd have to have "foks." What about "y"? With words like "why," it could be "whi" (it sounds the same). I say we need to rethink this alphabet of ours!

To the thief at University Place: May your ears burn as you listen to my Primus, Fugazi, B. Surfers, Reverend and X etc. — You stole my soul. Please return or face the wrath of universal justice.

Would Nick Henry, our distinguished GSU president, please stop getting drunk before home football games?

Someone please tell me just why the hell do people dress up for football games. Do you Greeks really think you're better than everyone else. Last time I looked, most real fans dress down and in their school's apparel. It's a football game for Christ's sake, not a damn funeral.

Why is it a lot of blacks on campus are constantly calling each other nigger? Don't ya'll think you're just degrading yourselves when you're yelling it out in public.

It's time to ask, 'Where's the beef?'

Do you remember the 80s? A time when Michael Jackson looked as though he would wed Brooke Shields. A time when we constantly heard Ronald Reagan say, "I don't remember." A time when Southern won a couple of championships with some guy named Ham. A time when Johnny Carson was warming the hearts of millions of sleepy-eyed Americans.

If these events don't exactly bring a splitting image to mind, then how about a spunky little old lady seen numerous times in commercials right before good ole' Johnny would come back on the air? Not enough of a clue for you to break open your memory bank? Then try this one — "Where's the beef?"

This adage of a past decade may not come up in conversation regularly around this small South Georgia town in 1994, but we could hear it if we traveled northward right now.

In the city of "Brotherly Love," Philadelphia, inspectors performed a patty raid (not a panty raid, you college degenerates) on a Wendy's. What they found was 22 out of 24 patties tested were not actually quarter-pounders as advertised. Several of the slabs of meat were as much as a quarter-ounce light.

The inspectors then snatched up all 960 of the so-called quarter-pounders and fined the eating establishment $100 a burger, or $96,000 for breaking state law and Federal Department of Agriculture guidelines. A company spokesperson said this was the first violation for skimpy burgers in the 25-year history of Wendy's International Inc.

The patty bust was a follow-up to an August raid that also located some fly-weight-type burgers in the Wendy's in the city's Olney section.

The confiscated Wendy's patties were given to a city homeless shelter and an emergency foster-care center. I hate false reporting, false advertising and false accusations. From a journalistic standpoint, this makes me good. From a human standpoint, this makes me a grouch because the world is eat up with falsehoods. Many deceptions exist here on our beloved campus.

One misleading is our motto "Academic Excellence."

In July 1993, a pool of representatives at the faculty and staff senate meeting expressed a concern to change the motto, but nothing came to pass of it.

President Nicholas Henry proposed "Do Right" as the solution. At that time and to this day, I propose they look for another solution.

The solution is not to change the wording of the motto. Instead, the solution is to actually attempt to back up the claim.

This year developmental studies, which was changed to learning support this quarter, increased their enrollment by nearly 16 percent over 1993. Take no offense to this, but it is that academic excellence? Maybe the administration's viewpoints differ from mine and in many cases they do, but listen to my reasoning.

I am not just a student; I am the editor of the student newspaper. This title does not give me the right to be an authority on all campus dealings, but it is my job to be observant and knowledgeable of academic dealings.

All-be-it true, the admission standards are being raised, at a snail's pace I might add, to improve the quality of the type of student that attends this regional university.

Some people have mentioned that GSU does not have enough money to recruit the upper echelon of high school graduates. Sounds like there is an outstanding need for more competent bookkeepers. With a school of 14,100 all spending their last penny to get an education and the state funding our school receives, somebody had better learn some simple cash management.

The false impression of the motto does not end with admissions. It is extremely difficult to compare the level of learning a student receives here to another national or even state institution. For needed reference, check the next "Best Colleges and Universities" in "U.S. News & World Report." It is safe to say we won't be there.

For those who say students must simply apply themselves in the classroom to achieve what they want, get a better conception of life. Academic excellence is not attainable in the classroom in many cases because of the lack of truly professional professors, properly-directed reading material and an atmosphere for learning.

I ask you, administration officials, "where is the beef in our motto?"

work together. And when she dropped me off at home, she'd usually show up an hour or two later to hang out for the rest of the night.

We were so inseparable this summer that other people began to tell us that we should date our best friend and my sister. Both Marilyn and I were sitting with them in the kitchen as they tried to persuade us to go out together. They even went so far as to put $20 on the table for our first date. No dice, we said. Neither of us wanted to ruin the each other. My mother pushed the idea quite a bit.

"Well, John," she said on our way to dinner one night, "I really wish you would go out with Marilyn. She is a really sweet girl."

My response: "Yeah mom, I think so too, but Athens is too far away from Statesboro."

Marilyn said she got some grief from her mother as well. One night Marilyn was offered $5 for a marriage license so "you and John can go get hitched."

The most pressure came from strong friendship we had.

Even this quarter, both of us continued to ignore the fact that we might be compatible with one another as boyfriend and girlfriend. We ignored it until we could ignore it no longer: when she came down to visit last weekend.

We sat around and chatted Friday night. On Saturday, we watched GSU down Appalachian State at Paulson, then ate dinner and saw a movie with friends. When we got back to the room, I finally summoned up the courage to tell her about the feelings of love that had been churning in my heart all weekend.

To my astonishment, she told me that she had been having similar feelings. I was relieved. I told her to go back to Athens and let it sink in — we'd talk about it this weekend at home in Peachtree City.

Well, we talked. We "decided to stop being stubborn" (her words, not mine). I didn't feel totally swamped with love and affection for her. I was just overcome with happiness for us. We were very comfortable together.

Looking back, we both should have seen it coming. But we didn't. To a larger extent, we're both still surprised that we're seeing each other right now. We're so comfortable with each other that the shock is just about over; I just feel a little dumb for not realizing my love for her sooner.

I guess it could be worse, especially if neither of us had the guts to tell each other. Better late than never, I suppose. So to all you lovelorn people out there: keep the faith.

Love is all around you — you just have to know which rock to look under.

Polls show Chiles and Bush are even

The Associated Press

TALLAHASSEE, Fla. — Mudslinging between Florida Gov. Lawton Chiles and Jeb Bush appears to be swaying prospective voters with Election Day less than two weeks ago.

Chiles had a slight edge in a poll by the Academy of Florida Trial Lawyers. But a second poll by Associated Industries of Florida showed Chiles and his Republican challenger in a dead heat.

Bush had held a lead of 5 percentage points to 10 points in numerous polls for several weeks before the campaign turned nasty in the last two weeks.

The governor lost ground in the new trial lawyers' survey. The former president's son dropped in the latest poll by the business lobby.

"Polling is really a snapshot at a point in time," said Scott Carruthers, executive director of the trial lawyers. "Any poll taken more than 48 hours ago is old news."

Pollsters said negative ads being exchanged by the candidates were having an impact, particularly one Bush ad that Chiles has said is reminiscent of the Willie Horton ad that helped Bush's father win the 1988 presidential race.

"Bush has been beating the governor over the head with 'Willie Horton, Jr.' and it appears to be having some effect," said Jim Kitchens, the political consultant who conducted the trial lawyers' poll.

The Horton ad helped George Bush's presidential campaign six years ago against Massachusetts Gov. Michael Dukakis. Horton, a convicted killer portrayed in the ad, raped a woman and beat her fiance after escaping while on furlough.

The trial lawyers' poll showed Bush trailing the governor by 5 percentage points; in that poll, 48 percent of those surveyed supported Chiles, 43 percent favored Bush and 9 percent were undecided. The survey of 517 registered voters was conducted Tuesday and Wednesday. The margin of error was plus or minus 4.4 percentage points.

The Bush ad features Wendy Nelson, whose daughter, Elisa, was murdered 14 years ago. Larry Mann was sentenced to die in the electric chair for the girl's murder but his case still is on appeal. In the ad, Nelson, of Tarpon Springs, criticizes the governor for not being tough enough on criminals.

Chiles responded with an ad of his own accusing Bush of distorting his record. Bush has defended the ad and continued to air it this week.

Kitchens said negative ads could play a key role in deciding the race.

"Misinformation gone uncontested will be believed," he said. "Can people lie and win? Yes, that can happen."

Texas candidates target different voters

The Associated Press

AUSTIN, Tx. — U.S. Sen. Kay Bailey Hutchison took her re-election campaign to a posh hotel, while Democratic challenger Richard Fisher headed to Goodwill Industries.

Mrs. Hutchison, R-Texas, picked up the endorsement of more than 200 Texas mayors and pledged to end "stealth taxes" caused when Congress orders state and local governments to do things but doesn't provide money to pay for it.

Speaking at Austin's Four Seasons Hotel, she promised to push a bill in the Senate next year to "get relief for the taxpayers of our state from the stealth taxes that they have to pay because of mandates that come from Congress that don't have the money coming with them."

A few blocks away, Fisher sorted donated coats in the Goodwill's Coats for Kids program and said he plans to spend the next nine days working with community service programs across the state.

Fisher called his plan a "Make a Difference" tour. He said he will travel 3,500 miles by automobile and visit more than 50 towns and cities.

"The purpose of the exercise is to underscore a point. That point is that I want to serve the people of Texas. My opponent's focus is special interest groups," he said.

"Her's is an antiseptic, Peter Pan collar, AstroTurf type of approach to politics. The fact is she won't get down with the people, work with the people," Fisher said. "She's in the pocket of special interest groups. She's not working for the people of Texas."

Mrs. Hutchison said Fisher has accepted money from the national Democratic Party, which also accepts special-interest funds.

"My opponent takes political action committee money. I take it. I report it. I think that's the way we ought to do it... I think he needs to be honest and up front and say, 'I take PAC contributions,'" she said.

Speaking to the mayors, Mrs. Hutchison reiterated her belief that federal regulations, including environmental rules, are too expensive and too prohibitive.

"I have introduced a bill that will put a moratorium on new Endangered Species Act designations until we reauthorize the Endangered Species Act to hopefully put some common sense into it," she said.

Fisher said stops on his tour will include a program for the homeless, a soup kitchen, midnight basketball, and a public library in Del Rio where he said he will read to children.

Asked how he could compete with Mrs. Hutchison, who is flying to points throughout the state, he said, "That just shows the difference. We're down here with the people. She's up there in the sky."

Mrs. Hutchison said Fisher, a former Ross Perot adviser, has flip-flopped repeatedly since first running for Senate in the 1993 special election.

"I don't know exactly where he stands on any one day on any one issue. He changes his position on major issues in this campaign," she said.

Carter: First Ladies don't just pour tea

The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Former first lady Rosalynn Carter says she sympathizes when presidents feel they must make unpopular choices, as her husband did.

"We used to sit down sometimes and try to think of one thing we did that was popular — and we couldn't think of one," Mrs. Carter said cheerfully during a seminar on first ladies Tuesday night.

She joked that it was a good thing President Carter ignored her advice to put off some politically sensitive issues, including the Panama Canal treaty, until the second term that he didn't win.

"If Jimmy had done what I advised him to do, he would have gone down in history as a do-nothing president," she told an interviewer at the George Washington University seminar.

Mrs. Carter said she was a sounding board for her husband's ideas and always let him know her opinion, but he made the decisions.

She also served as his official envoy to Latin American nations and sat in on Cabinet meetings.

Mrs. Carter said she admires the way Hillary Rodham Clinton has continued the evolution of the first lady's role despite sometimes "ugly" personal attacks.

Her advice to future first ladies: "It doesn't matter what you do, you're going to be criticized for it. So do what you want to do, that's what I learned."

Mrs. Carter laughingly recited the labels the press gave her over the years — hayseed, steel magnolia, too fuzzy, too powerful. "I didn't think I was any of that," she said.

Meanwhile, she said, the press often ignored her work to promote her policy agenda: mental health issues, the Equal Rights Amendment, helping the elderly, promoting childhood immunization.

"There's so much a first lady can do," she said. "I don't think there will ever be a first lady again who just pours tea."

TALES FROM THE GRIDIRON

AARON SOLOMON

Last night, Dick Butkus' football jersey number 51 and Gayle Sayers' number will be retired. While mopping the floor the other night at Papa John's, I had one of those sports rushes that only a native of Chicago could have. You see, my roommates are Bears fans too! (Aaron laughs uncontrollably).

This column was getting off to a good start until Michael Bolton's whiny voice came blaring over that wonderful station 100.1 WMCD. It's hard to write a column about Dick Butkus when Michael Bolton is on the radio.

But picture this: it is late December at Wrigley Field, snow is pouring on the field and the wind chill is a pleasant 50 degrees below. The Bears are playing the Baltimore Colts. Unitas takes the snap, drops back and lets it fly to wide receiver Michael Bolton. Crunch! Out of nowhere Butkus slams into Bolton, Bolton's head flies off his body and goes through the uprights onto beautiful Waveland Avenue. It's good!

I THINK THAT DICK BUTKUS WAS THE BEST LINEBACKER EVER.

Of course, this never happened, but Butkus would have wanted it that way. He was one of those linebackers who was concerned with doing everything in his power to hurt the guy with the ball. He was all over offenses, and he terrorized quarterbacks for eight years. All of his highlight films show him slamming into an opponent.

But it was not his ferocity that put him in the Hall of Fame. You see, I was sitting in a nice quiet room watching a football game, but it just was not like the old films of Butkus. Butkus played in the "Age of the Linebackers." Players like Ray Nitzsche, Tommy Nobis, Merlin Olsen and others made the sixties possibly the most exciting era in pro football.

Great teams are built on great defenses. All of you Bulldog fans can agree with me on that. Please don't tell me that Buck Belue can lead a team to a National Championship. That was a great defensive unit, (not that Herschel Walker ever hurt) that won Georgia a championship in 1980.

Just like the Bulldogs needed Herschel to go to the top, the Bears needed an offense in the late sixties. It never happened after Sayers' career-ending injury. Butkus never saw championship glory.

There was more to him on the field than just his ability to pulverize opponents. There might never again be a linebacker that can cover the field sideline to sideline like Butkus. He was not just an animal; there was true talent.

After the recent retirements of Lawrence Taylor and Mike Singletary, linebackers are no longer of the Butkus mold. That is not to say there aren't any heavy hitters out there. I can handle watching Bruce Smith, Ken Norton, Junior Seau, Cortez Kennedy and Jessie Tuggle show what they're made of on Sundays.

Next year I might be part of the Chicago scene again if I go there to further my education. I never realized what I left behind until I was gone; I have realized that a large part of me was left in that city. Seeing Dick Butkus take the field one more time in Chicago on Monday made me realize one thing: there is no place

Lady Eagle swim team laps FSU 146-90

Unforgettable win comes in first home meet

By Ronnie Swinford
Assistant Sports Editor

Friday, Oct. 28, was a day that GSU's ladies swimming team will not forget as they stepped up to the big time with a defeat against Florida State at Hanner Fieldhouse.

The ladies set school records to whip the Seminoles 146 to 90. The three records were set by Nicole Goodwin, who had a time of 24.32 seconds in the 50-yard freestyle. Goodwin also had another record in the 100-yard freestyle with a 53.56 finish. Sherlonda Pitts finished in 2:08.97 for a new record in the 200-yard backstroke, as well.

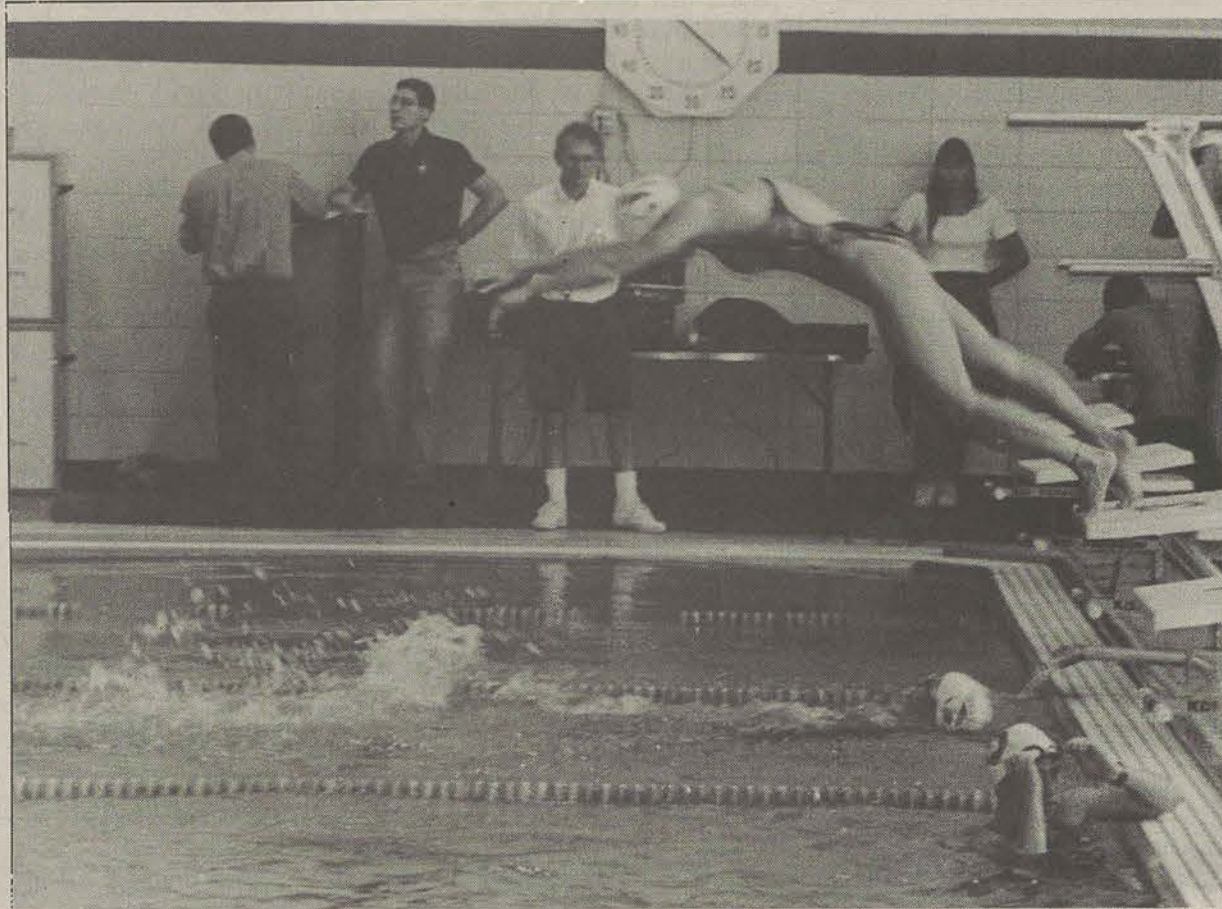

"Us beating them in swimming is the same as our football team or basketball team beating them," said Head Coach Scott Farmer. "I am proud of our girls, but this also worries me a little that we had such a big win so early in the season. I will really have to work to keep our girls from becoming complacent."

The women did not exactly squeak by the 'Noles, but they won nine of the 13 events. The men also competed against FSU, but were not as lucky as the women, losing 154-75.

"We were trying to make everyone swim in their specialty as well as two other events. So some people did fairly well in their events, but did not fare as well in the other events that they were entered in," said Farmer. "I am happy with our guys as well as our girls, the guys did well considering the competition."

The guys did not win an event, but Jason Baumstark did finish second in the 200-yard freestyle.

VOLLEYBALL

Ladies beat ETSU and Mercer, fall to Appy St.

By Ronnie Swinford
Assistant Sports Editor

The Lady Eagles took two out of three volleyball games of a weekend homestand that saw the Eagles play Appalachian State, Mercer, and East Tennessee State.

The Appalachian State team came into Statesboro undefeated in the Southern Conference and left still undefeated, but knowing that they had been in a battle.

Appalachian started the first game off with a barrage of kills to lead 11-5. The lead was to great to overcome and GSU lost 15-7.

The second game started with ASU again taking a big lead of 8-3. The Eagles roared back this time and overcame the five point lead to win the game 15-12. Alexis Dankulic, the Southern Conference Player-of-the-Week, lead the Eagles back with three kills and three digs in the game. The other star of the game was Kim Woods who had five kills in the second game.

The Lady Mountaineers came back in the third game and dominated it 15-8 to give them a 2-1 lead going into the fourth game.

The fourth game seemed to last about three days. Both teams were in it all the way to the end. The two teams exchanged side-outs and even eventually points. After 15 minutes the score was at 3-3. The Eagles were determined not to allow ASU to win in four games, but they wilted in the heat of Hanner and finally gave way 15-12 in the last game. The loss gives the Eagles a 18-8 overall record for the year.

"We played pretty well, it's just that they are a very good team," said Head Coach Dee Nichols. "This is a hard game to lose because it is the first game this year that we have lost at home."

If the Eagles were upset with the loss to Appy on Sunday perhaps the two wins on Saturday were some consolation. The Eagles rolled over East Tennessee State.

The Eagles lost the first two games to ETSU. But after that, the only thing that could stop the Eagles was if there was a time limit in the conference.

The Eagles destroyed the Buccaneers in the last three games 15-2, 15-7, and 15-8. The Eagles were led by Dankulic who had 23 kills and 19 digs and Litonya Thompson who had 12 kills and 19 digs. The total domination of the Bucs was partially due to them completely falling apart in the third game with only two kills on seven chances.

"I was concerned that we are not consistent enough," said Nichols. "When our defense is good we are good and when it is shaky, so is our team."

Eagles defeat Furman, 3-1

By Jeff Whitten
Staff Writer

The GSU men's soccer team beat visiting Furman 3-1 Wednesday afternoon. The win improved GSU's record to 7-9-1. The Eagles are 2-4 in conference play. Furman falls to 7-8-2, and 5-1 in the conference.

The Paladins had clinched the Southern Conference regular season championship prior to Wednesday's game.

In the first half, both teams appeared evenly matched, but the Eagles would score the half's lone goal at the 17:42 mark. Striker Pat Parris collected the ball around midfield, outran what seemed to be the entire Furman team, then kicked the ball past the beaten Furman goalkeeper.

A corner-kick seconds into the second half gave the Paladins their only score in the game and blew Eagle goalie Tim Boarman's bid for his third shutout of the season.

GSU would score two more goals in the second half. The first came when midfielder Andy Edwards, closely covered by a Furman defender, floated the ball over the Furman goalie at the 58:17 mark. Dennis Duenas and Denny Tucker were credited with the assist.

Tucker would score the Eagles' final goal when the Furman goalkeeper fell down far from the net. Jeremy Simmons made the assist.

The Eagles played well defensively throughout the game, and Boarman made several spectacular saves in goal.

After the game, GSU's head soccer coach had nothing but praise for his team.

"We've got six seniors, and this is their last home game," Norton said. "They've worked hard for four years and gone through a lot of ups and downs but they put it all together today ... the whole team did really."

GSU will go to Greensboro, S.C. for the Southern Conference Tournament, which will be held Nov. 4-6.

Ladies finish eighth, men finish 10th in championships

By Chris Sherwood
News Editor

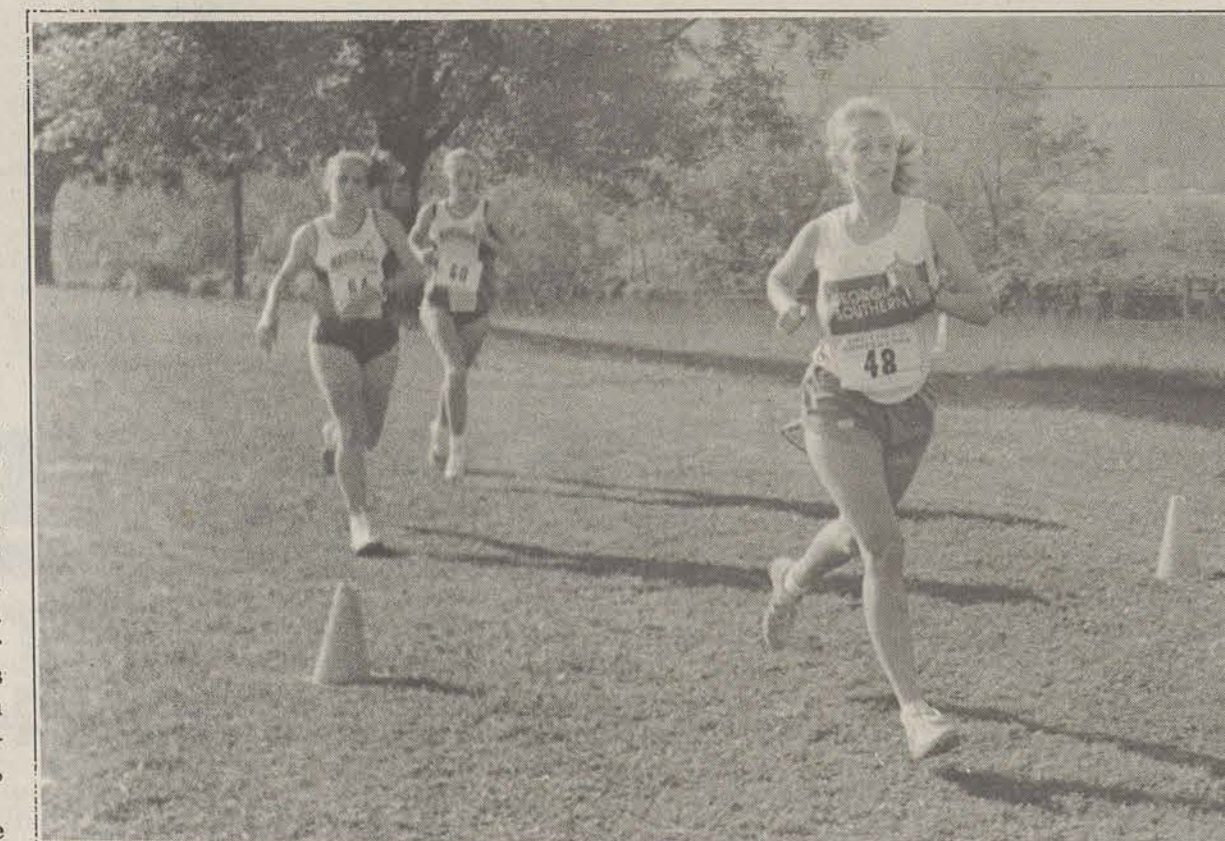

The GSU men's and women's cross country teams competed in the Southern Conference Championships this past weekend in Chattanooga, Tenn.

The men ran an 8K course (5 mile) and the women raced a 5K (3.1 mile) course.

The Lady Eagles finished in eighth place and the men in tenth.

"The competition was very tough, and both teams had great races which didn't really show in the team standings," GSU Head Coach Brad Simmons said. "Almost all the men ran personal bests, but ending up 10th as a team wasn't indicative of their performance. Being as young as the men's team was, a team which consisted of four freshman, a sophomore and a junior, they reacted magnificently."

The ladies ran in the first race of the morning. They were led by freshman Melissa Burnette. Senior Heather Gordon, who had taken six straight weeks off due to a stress fracture in her kneecap, finished second for the Lady Eagles. The rest of the finishers for GSU were Jody Lloyd, Melanie Jarvis, Amy Frazier,

Football players try to enjoy a relaxing week off

By Carolyn Wynn
Staff Writer

The names Marlow Warthen, Chad Holmes, Scott Davis, Joe Dupree and Charlie Burt are all names we are used to hearing over the loud speaker. But who are these modern day gladiators under the helmets and pads?

Warthen is a 5-8, 179-pound junior from Warrenton. Although Warthen's athletic statistics are impressive, the statistics cannot tell you about Marlow the person.

The slotback is an industrial engineering major with an older brother and sister. He can best be described as a quiet, easy-going young man who enjoys playing Sega, hanging out and joking around with his friends.

His statistics also do not describe his work ethic.

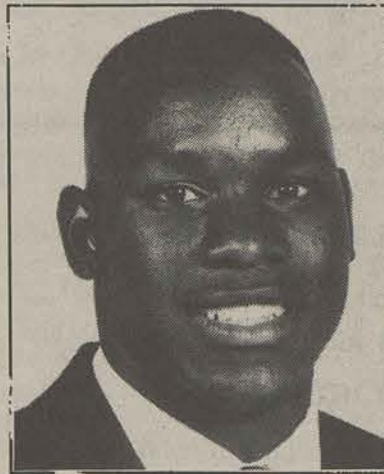

"I try to go full speed at practice all the time," Warthen said. "Classes are difficult, but football helps you to put your time in perspective."

Warthen's plans for the future include finishing his degree program and hopefully moving to a metropolitan area to start his career as an engineer.

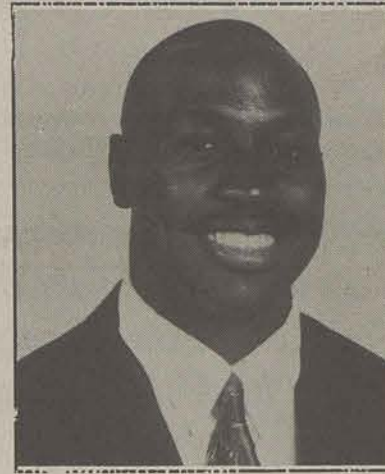

For now, it is his athletic ability on the field which makes him a valuable part of the Eagles

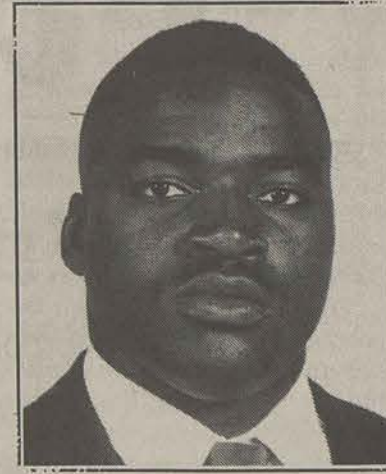

Scott Davis

Chad Holmes

Joe Dupree

squad. And not to be overlooked is his quiet, mature, laid-back manner that makes him a very good conversationalist and all-around nice person. During the off week, this Eagle plans to "hit the books, and catch up on my studies."

Like Warthen, Chad Holmes credits football with helping to maintain discipline in other areas of his life. On the field, the 5-10, 196-pound fullback is a natural athlete. Last spring, he benched 390, squatted 600 and power cleaned 300. As if that was not enough he ran the 40-yard dash with a time of 4.53 seconds and has a 36-inch vertical leap.

However, this gentle giant is even more impressive off the field.

Holmes is a business major while also serving as a parliamentarian for the Black Student Alliance. He is a Griffin native who enjoys playing Sega and during his off week, Holmes plans on "relaxing and spending time" with his girlfriend.

As a member of the "Blue Bandit" defense, Charlie Burt has earned the nickname "Cowboy." He is definitely one of the most colorful characters of the team and is 6-foot, 220-pound senior defensive end from Winter Haven, Fla.

Burt was originally a walk-on, but has long since proven himself to be a strong athlete. A sports management major, he describes himself as an "energetic, enthusiastic personality, that strives hard to succeed."

The most important influences on Burt are his mother and son Josh. After graduation, he would like to open a nightclub in Central Florida. However, his plans for this week are to "stay in shape, catch up on the books, and stay focused for the game next week against Furman."

Another familiar face of the Eagles defense is Scott Davis, a charming 6-1, 216-pound line-backer who hails from Powder Springs, Georgia. Scott is the youngest of two boys and is pursuing a degree as a health and physical education major.

Davis is a hardworking, fun-loving, people person who admits to having very strong ties to his family. He credits his upbringing to his strong family and religion values.

Football and his studies leave little time for anything else, but when he does have free time Davis says he "likes to spend time with his fraternity brothers, his girlfriend, and sometimes I just enjoy spending some quiet time with myself."

Davis is a member of Sigma Chi, and is also a coach for the Alpha Delta Pi flag football team.

Davis planned to get away for the weekend by going home to spend time with his family and girlfriend.

A name frequently associated with the Eagles' offense is quarterback Joe Dupree. Although Dupree has been struggling with knee problems, he is still working hard while encouraging fellow quarterback and friend Kenny Robinson.

The best way to describe Dupree is as a very outgoing, yet sensitive person. There are very few people that he cannot get along with and his bright smile is the first thing that captures your attention. It is his modest, down-to-earth way that comes as a pleasant surprise.

He is a sports management major whose goals is to "graduate, find a job in my major and eventually start a family."

In the rare event of free time, he enjoys watching movies, listening to music and hanging out with his friends.

He said the fame that goes along with being a GSU football player is still quite a bit to deal with.

"You have to take it in stride, and you have to remember that it can all be gone just as quickly as it came."

MISTAKEN IDENTITY

Joe Montana the politician, not the quarterback

The Associated Press

AMHERST, N.Y. — All last week, Joe Montana has sat in some little room in Kansas City's Arrowhead Stadium, watching films of the Buffalo Bills and devising ways to escape the clutches of Bruce Smith and Cornelius Bennett. The Bills won 44-14.

At the same time, Joe Montana has been blitzing the phones and campaigning door-to-door in a sliver of Buffalo and its suburb of Amherst as he tackles a veteran incumbent in a state Assembly race.

Yup, there are two Joe Montanas in the public arena: Chiefs quarterback and 27-year-old Buffalo political newcomer, Joseph A. Montana Jr.

And if you don't think the namesake issue has played a part in the local campaign, you don't know anything about human nature, or Bills fans.

During the 142nd Assembly District campaign, an Amherst resident hurried downstairs when he heard Joe Montana was coming to speak to the residents.

When he learned it was the politician, not the passer, the resident quickly turned into a no-show.

But the upbeat Montana, the local one, enjoys the coincidence. He's been a fan of the future Hall of Fame quarterback since his Notre Dame days. And he's used the name to his advantage.

"I've gotten some perks out of it: dinner reservations, rental cars and tee times," he said.

Some examples:

Last year, while visiting a high school buddy in the Phoenix area, he wanted to play golf at the private Scottsdale Country Club. He was getting nowhere until the woman answering the phone let him leave his name.

"She quickly put down the phone, came back and said, 'Mr. Montana, we have a tee time for you.'"

Justice prevailed, though. Montana got rained out.

Montana's original campaign stationery had the following letterhead, devised with the blessing of county Democratic Party Chairman Vincent Sorrentino:

"The 142nd District needs a new quarterback. Why not Joe Montana?"

But the stationery later was scrapped, after Montana's campaign staff decided the name should be used only as an entree, for name recognition.

"We don't want people to think that's all we have to offer — a famous name," the candidate said.

Montana also considered campaigning door-to-door wearing a Chiefs jersey with the name Montana sewn on the back. But he feared he'd lose some votes with diehard Bills fans.

This campaign season, as Montana tries to unseat incumbent Republican Richard Anderson, most voters haven't made much of the name coincidence.

Montana has heard the predictable: "Wow, you're not playing football anymore," or "I expected you to be a lot bigger, with blond hair." And this week: "Aren't you here a little early?"

With the Bills hosting the Chiefs on Sunday, nine days before the election, the local Montana can't resist the thought of trying to meet his namesake. So he may seek him out.

"I'd like to get him to say, 'Joe Montana is happy to endorse Joe Montana for state Assembly,'" he said.

THE DISABLED LIST

Connecticut hoopster might not be able to play for homeland

The Associated Press

STORRS, Conn. — An injury could force Connecticut guard Doron Sheffer to abandon his plans to compete for his homeland at the European championships.

Sheffer, a sophomore, sustained a groin injury last week, missed a practice, then returned for double sessions Friday and Saturday. But he sat out of practice again the next day.

"It came back on Sunday, so it probably was too much for me," Sheffer said. "I've never had a situation where I've had to miss more than one day."

Sheffer is scheduled to leave Nov. 4 or 5 to join the Israeli national team for games in Tel Aviv and Prague, Czech Republic. He is expected to rejoin the Huskies Nov. 13.

despite lingering injuries which have handicapped the team during the season.

"Melanie, Amy James and Amy Frazier all had great races," Simmons said.

Seniors Gordon, Jody and Jessica Lloyd, Jarvis and McLeroy ran in their final conference championship for GSU.

"They were disappointed that it was their last race I'm sure, but they were very happy with their performances," Simmons said. "You don't realize how fast four years goes by and they will definitely be missed."

The men's team will compete in the NCAA District III qualifying meet which will be held in Greenville, S.C. Traditionally the top 40 schools in the South compete in the meet which has three NCAA National Championship qualifier spots up for grabs.

The other GSU opponent on Saturday was Mercer. The Lady Eagles dispatched the Lady Bears in four games. The scores for the games were 15-9, 13-15, 15-10 and 15-9. The Eagles were helped along by Dankulic who had 19 kills and 19 digs for the match. Also, Woods poured in 16 kills and 9 digs.

"I think that we just need to work on being more consistent with our play. We are a pretty good team," said Nichols.

The Lady Eagles next home game is Nov. 11 against Western Carolina at 4 p.m.

Award-winning 'Alcohol Awareness Week' returns

By Mandi Cody
Staff Writer

For the fifth year in a row, it is Alcohol Awareness Week at GSU. Many campus officials hope that this week will bring the misuse of alcohol among college students to greater attention.

"The purpose of Alcohol Awareness Week is to focus attention on the problem of alcohol use and misuse among college students," said Edward Bayens, assistant director of special programs.

"This is the fifth year that we've had Alcohol Awareness Week on campus. The last three years we have won Honorable Mention in the National Collegiate Alcohol Awareness contest for one of the most outstanding programs in the nation," said Bayens, who along with several organizations from both on and off campus will be sponsoring the week of activities.

"We want to educate students that if they make that conscious decision to drink they should make responsible decisions," Bayens said.

"The vast majority of the people we come into contact with are under the influence of alcohol. It is probably the biggest problem on campus," said Capt. Mike Russell of the University Police Department.

"There are things to do on campus rather than go out and drink every night," Bayens said.

This week, in conjunction with Alcohol Awareness Week, there will be two movies shown with free popcorn from Union Productions, a comedian, a masquerade party with "mocktails," and a volleyball tournament.

"These are all programs that are alternatives to going out and drinking. They don't have anything to do with alcohol or alcohol abuse," Bayens said.

There will be several programs offered to provide information to students and faculty on alcohol abuse.

hazing, and other alcohol related issues. There will be many other information exhibits during the week including the Drug Display from the University Police, the Mothers Against Drunk Driving (MADD) picture board exhibit, and the Alcohol Information Fair.

"I want to emphasize that the University does not condone students drinking under the age of 21. If you drink under the age of 21 you are breaking the law. We also, however, know that college students, regardless of their age, will drink. We understand that, and we accept that premise," Bayens said.

"We want (students) to make responsible decisions about the use of alcohol; we want them to know the effects it has on the body; we want them to know what the legal consequences are; we want them to know what the University response will be," he said.

"We also want them to be safe, and get home safe," he said.

Sororities 'Yell Like Hell' for a good cause

By Derek Lewis
Features Editor

Chants, songs, and screams could be heard drifting through the wind Thursday afternoon. What was the commotion? No, it wasn't a riot or protest march but instead, it was "Yell Like Hell."

"Yell Like Hell" is a contest organized by Delta Tau Delta that presents awards to the sorority with the most spirit, best banner, and best overall. The contest was a charity fund-raiser.

There were seven sororities competing: Alpha Delta Pi, Alpha Omicron Pi, Alpha Xi Delta, Kappa Delta, Kappa Kappa Gamma, Phi Mu and Zeta Tau Alpha.

Each sorority presented a short group of cheers (ranging from original ideas to take-offs from Coca-Cola and familiar children's songs).

The contest, according to Terry Bozeman, a member of Delta Tau Delta, is a project which is used to raise money for Children's Miracle Network (CMN).

The groups are judged in three different categories which include banner, spirit and overall.

"We have a panel of judges who range from people on campus to business persons in the community," Bozeman said.

Delta Tau Delta donates the proceeds, (which come from a $75 entrance fee that each group must pay), via a check in the name of Delta Tau Delta and the winning sorority.

"We will present the money on June 3rd. We will present it on WTOC in the name of both organizations," Bozeman said.

This is the seventh year that this event has taken place.

Bozeman said that he hopes events such as this will bring sororities and fraternities into a better light on campus.

"I feel like fraternities have been ... represented negatively through various media groups on campus and in the area. I just want to show the non-Greek community that some of the things we do are good, and work for the good of other people," Bozeman said.

The moneys raised at this event go directly to a local chapter of the CMN.

"The closest CMN network is in Savannah. And all the proceeds raised in this area go to that local chapter," Bozeman said.

"They want everyone to see that the money benefits the CMN on a local level."

Model OAU: education through participation

By Teri Minter
Staff Writer

Diversity week is an event put on by African-American studies to bring different cultures together.

Lectures and programs are designed to help educate students about the different groups on campus.

One of these groups is the Model Organization of African Unity (Model OAU). On Monday, Oct. 14, in the Union room 280, Nebiyu Feleke lectured to a group of students on this subject.

The Model OAU is an organization that works closely with African governments and other charter OAU groups around the country. This year, the OAU will be representing Algeria and Ghana at the national delegation at Howard University in Washington, DC. in early March, 1995.

The OAU will present different issues that have come up during this year, and will go about, with other charters, to presenting resolutions.

There are three meetings per week, and many public speeches during the meetings. Last year, there were between 40 and 50 members.

This number changes every year and past members are encouraged to come back.

The Model OAU was founded in 1963. It was organized to face economic and social problems in the countries in Africa after de-colonization.

"They set up the resolutions depending on the crime the different nations are facing. They also try to set up some authority (in the nation)," Feleke said.

Catholic Newman Association: being a witness through example

Organization tries to unite students so they can 'grow in faith, friendship, and service'

By Erika Anderson
Staff Writer

The Catholic Newman Association (CNA) was founded seven years ago. Sister Pauline O'Brien, a current advisor, has worked there six of those years.

"Our goal is to provide students with an opportunity to grow in faith, friendship, and service to others," Sister Pauline said.

CNA is a major part of the St. Matthew's Newman Church. The students put on various functions throughout the year for its members of the parish such as spaghetti dinners and festivals.

"I was involved in my church at home and I really wanted to be involved here. It was pretty scary because I didn't know many people here. I knew that if I became involved with CNA, I would meet a lot of people," Becky Green, CNA's current president, said.

"Our central focus is our worship together every Sunday night. Our service and social activities are open to all student," Sister Pauline said.

"We are unique in that we are the only (on-campus) ministry whose central focus is the Mass," Sister Pauline added.

Another main goal of CNA is to bring all on-campus ministries together as Christians.

"The word Catholic means universal and we are not closed in on ourselves," she said. "It is very important to the CNA to reach out to other ministries on campus."

"(Last) weekend all the ministries got together for Homecoming," Green said. "We had a cook-out, then went to the game together and we ended up with a dance at Wesley called 'Heaven Jam.' It was wonderful."

In addition to its social and service activities and Sunday Mass, CNA offers faith classes on Tuesday nights and Bible study classes on Thursday nights.

Sister Pauline and St.

Matthew's pastor, Father Mike Smith, are also available for personal spiritual direction and counseling at any time.

"I think it is important to have a male and female (leader) so all students can have someone to relate to," Sister Pauline said.

Cuomo takes on challengers

The Associated Press

ALBANY, N.Y. — With his chief rival still sitting it out, Gov. Mario Cuomo defended his economic record during a debate with four minor-party rivals.

The Democratic governor, who is seeking his fourth term, said the portrayal of New York as a state in economic decay was untrue.

He said New York was an attractive site for new business.

"It seems very clear ... New York is on the way back," he said. "I hope that doesn't sadden any of us."

The generally polite skirmish, broadcast out of a studio in Buffalo on public television across the state, also featured independent candidate B. Thomas Golisano, Libertarian Party contender Robert Schulz, Right to Life candidate Robert Walsh and Socialist Workers Party challenger Lawrence Lane. It was their second debate.

Republican George Pataki, who has insisted on one-on-one debates with Cuomo, again did not attend.

And there appears to be little progress in matching Cuomo and Pataki, who are running neck-and-neck in polls.

Pataki's absence was noted most directly by the anti-abortion candidate Walsh, who said the Republican was showing a disdain for the voters.

Cuomo, refusing to mention

Pataki by name, called the Republican plan to offer a 25 percent personal income tax cut an absurdity.

He said he wouldn't give complete details on his own $1.7 billion tax cut plan because financial projections weren't complete.

"I won't do what the Republicans did, which is to make an outrageous promise I couldn't keep," he said.

"WE'VE SAID TIME AND TIME AGAIN WE WILL DEBATE MARIO CUOMO ONE-ON-ONE . . . HE DOESN'T WANT A ONE-ON-ONE DISCUSSION OF HIS RECORD."

—REP. GEORGE PATAKI

Golisano, the deep-pocketed Rochester executive who has said he might spend $10 million on his own long-shot campaign, stressed the need for a more business-friendly government. The best approach to fighting crime was providing more economic opportunity, he said.

The chief executive of Paychex Inc. said he doubted the ability of Cuomo — or any politician — to cut taxes or spending.

"To hear Mr. Cuomo talk about his great tax reduction plans makes me believe we're not living in the same state," he said.

Schulz, a retired engineer who has repeatedly sued the state over its financial practices, twice urged the state to legalize drugs. The position seem to make Cuomo incredulous.

"Legalize heroin and cocaine?" he said. "It's madness."

It wasn't clear whether this would be the final debate between the four.

Moderator David Hepp said public television would again make time available.

At a stop in Albany, Pataki said he planned to campaign in New York City and Long Island while his rivals were debating.

"We've said time and time again we will debate Mario Cuomo one-on-one," he said. "He continues to duck behind not just third-party candidates, but fourth-party candidates and fifth-party candidates. He doesn't want a one-on-one discussion of his record."

Pataki has accepted offers of one-on-one debates on WCBS-TV in New York City the night before the Nov. 8 election and on WNBC-TV on Nov. 6, spokeswoman Zenia Mucha said.

Cuomo campaign spokesman Joel Benenson, while not ruling out those debates, said Cuomo was holding fast to his stance on the minor-party candidates.

Rap lyrics being used as part of the Democrats' campaign

The Associated Press

CHICAGO — Illinois Democrats unveiled a fresh weapon in their campaign arsenal. Rap lyrics.

Their streetwise sound, a long way from the party's traditional "Happy Days Are Here Again," drew immediate fire from Republicans who called it a pre-election move to divide Illinois voters along racial lines.

The lyrics are in two radio ads that will air on Illinois stations. Designed to energize black voters, they are sharply critical of Republican Gov. Jim Edgar and state Senate President James "Pate" Philip, R-Wood Dale.

Philip drew rebukes recently by saying minority state employees lack a work ethic equal to that of white counterparts. He later said he was merely repeating something he had been told and didn't know if it were true.

"Let's send a message to Edgar and Pate," say the ads, "punch 28, before it's too late."

Punching 28 in Cook County means voting straight Democratic. A separate version for radio stations elsewhere in Illinois contains some of the lyrics and a voice that condemns Philip and Edgar.

The ads were previewed for reporters by Democratic state Chairman Gary LaPaille who said Philip has slurred not only blacks, but Italian-Americans, Jews and women.

"These ads are directed at the African-American community because they are the targets of his most recent outrage," LaPaille said.

Edgar's campaign immediately deplored the ads.

"This is an extremely regrettable effort by the chairman of the Democratic Party to divide Illinoisans along racial lines," Edgar press secretary Mike Lawrence said.

"The governor denounced Sen. Philip's remarks," Lawrence said. "He publicly and privately asked him to apologize."

Philip did not immediately return a telephone call.

LaPaille said the Illinois Democratic Party would spend $30,000 on airing the ads in the Chicago area and $5,000 downstate between now and Election Day.

The state chairman also was asked about the phrase "before it's too late."

It was used in ads for Republican Bernard Epton in his losing 1983 Chicago mayoral campaign against Democrat Harold Washington and widely condemned as racist at the time.

LaPaille said use of the phrase by Republicans in the mayoral campaign more than a decade ago was not a consideration in producing the ads.

He said it might be that 28-year-old media consultant and producer Michael Keith simply did not remember the details of the Washington-Epton race.

Florida hospital under investigation

The Associated Press

INVERNESS, Fla. — Mounting complaints against a male nurse accused of raping sedated patients at a hospital have prompted another probe, this time at the request of federal investigators.

Investigators found Citrus Memorial Hospital in compliance with state policies on handling patients in a review last week.

But the federal Health Care Financing Administration, the agency in charge of handling Medicare and Medicaid money, asked them to return and examine records, said spokeswoman Nina Bottcher.

"This was instigated by the volume of complaints about Bruce Alan Young, the number of women contacting police and the number of charges being filed," Bottcher said. "When there are serious charges, HCFA is notified and they will generally ask us to do the review."

Young, a former nurse at the hospital, was fired after a nurse said she found him with his pants down atop a 15-year-old female patient in his care at the hospital recovery room.

Young was arrested Oct. 3 and has been charged with the rapes of five women.

Since then, more than 70 women have come forward fearing they may have been victimized while under sedation.

Unlike the previous review for the state, the current review at the request of the federal agency is not considered routine, Bottcher said.

"When there are serious charges, HCFA is notified and they will generally ask us to do the review," she said.

The two state investigators returned to the hospital to begin their inquiry, Bottcher said.

They want to know if the hospital is in compliance with federal, state, and local laws — as well as the hospital's own policies — in four areas: nursing services, surgical services, the board of directors and the hospital's general activities, Bottcher said.

Four lawsuits have been filed against Citrus Memorial, including a class-action suit filed on behalf of at least five women.

Crooked official wants vacation pay

The Associated Press

BUFFALO, N.Y. — A city official who has admitted stealing at least $200,000 in public funds resigned, then asked to be paid for $8,500 in unused vacation time.

"The man couldn't afford to get sick or take a vacation because he was too busy stealing money," grumbled Alfred T. Coppola, a Buffalo city council member.

David May resigned Monday as assistant registrar of vital statistics in Buffalo. He was caught on videotape taking cash, usually in small bills, from fees paid to the vital statistics office for such things as birth certificates.

When confronted by police, he took the officers to his house and handed over four suitcases with $200,111 in cash inside. City auditors have concluded that the amount stolen may be more than $400,000.

Prosecutors are awaiting an audit before bringing criminal charges against May.

May had a reputation as a faithful employee who never took a day off from work.

But city officials think May's diligence had more to do with his wanting to avoid detection than loyalty.

An absence, even for just a week, might have resulted in a noticeable increase in revenues reported by vital statistics. A sharp change might have alerted people to May's thievery.

May's request to be paid for 50 days of unused time drew immediate fire in Buffalo City Hall.

"How can we do this in good conscience?" said city council President George Arthur.

"We'll make the national news," Coppola added.

The city may have no choice, however. The paperwork for May's resignation and his unused time demand are being processed.

Daniel J. Faberman, the city's labor relations director, said May will be given what he's entitled to under the contract — nothing more, nothing less.

"Those are his contractual rights," Faberman told The Buffalo News. "He was granted nothing special."
