Chaplain: Academy fired him over hazing reports

The Associated Press

GAINESVILLE, Ga. — A chaplain at Riverside Military Academy said Thursday he was fired after telling school officials he was going to report alleged hazing at the school.

"I believe the school has institutionalized hazing," said Guy Kent, who had been at the school since 1988 as a chaplain and soccer coach, "and it's an incredibly stupid thing to do."

Kent said he was fired Tuesday after saying he was going to report that alleged hazing occurred during an initiation rite earlier in the school year.

David M. Williams, superintendent of the school, denied that any hazing has occurred. He said Kent's dismissal was a personnel decision.

Kent said students and faculty members complained to him about the alleged incident.

During the ceremony, an unknown number of new students were blindfolded and forced to walk off a ledge at least 10 feet high and land on a mattress on a concrete floor below, according to the complaints Kent said he received.

CLARIFICATION

In the article entitled "Graduation rate lower for Learning Support" that ran in the Jan. 17 edition of The George-Anne, GSU was incorrectly portrayed in correlation to the graduation rates of the University of Georgia and Valdosta State University.

Upon recalculation of the rates of VSU compared to GSU, GSU graduates a lower number of students through their Learning Support than does their counterpart. GSU actually ranks lowest out of the three institutions. We hope this misinformation did not cause any inconvenience for those involved.

GSU may add women's sport

By Chris Sherwood
News Editor

The GSU athletic department will look into possibly adding a women's sport sometime in the next three to five years, according to Athletic Director David "Bucky" Wagner.

According to Wagner, the two sports which would be considered are women's golf or women's track.

Representatives of each varsity sport at GSU were told of the decision to investigate the possibility of adding a team at the Student Athletic Advisory Board meeting Monday.

"We are meeting with him (Wagner) today, so we will find out more about it," SAAB member and current member of GSU's men's soccer team Greg Dundrum said.

SAAB member Gail McLeroy said Wagner brought the topic up at the meeting.

"He said that hopefully within the next few years we will have another sport," McLeroy said.

The board is comprised of one member of each of the teams, and meets regularly with Wagner and several other members of the athletic staff.

"We will look into it (the possibility of adding a sport) within the next year or so, we want to meet the interest of the school," Wagner said. "What we weigh is if there is really interest there (to add a particular sport) against what we can do with the sports that we already have."

We don't want to take anything away from those sports."

Wagner also said he wanted to make sure GSU was meeting the interest of the students when considering a possible sport.

Women's soccer, the last sport to be added at GSU, was awarded varsity status during February 1993. Prior to that time, there was a club team for women's soccer at GSU.

"There are a lot of things that go into adding a sport," Associate Athletic Director Frank Ellwood said. "First, we have to have a recommendation from the Faculty/Athletic Committee. We look at whether the sport is sponsored at the high school level in Georgia, we look at the cost and of course we look at what the cost of scholarships and equipment and travel will be."

The Southern Conference currently declares champions in eight women's sports (volleyball, cross country, basketball, indoor track, outdoor track, tennis, golf and softball) and 10 men's sports.

"When it comes to adding a sport, we will have to have a full internal investigation," Ellwood said. "We will have the Title IX considerations and we will also discuss what is right for Georgia Southern. The bottom line is, whatever we do has to be right for GSU."

Currently GSU sponsors 15 sports, which is average for the Southern Conference. Appalachian State sponsors a total of 19 sports.

Faculty Senate voted to force payment of tickets in 1988

By Chris Sherwood
News Editor

Last summer, the Board of Regents approved a GSU Parking and Transportation request that faculty and staff would have to pay their parking fines prior to being issued their hang-tags.

Never before had faculty and staff been told they must pay their tickets. Faculty and staff who had outstanding tickets would be allowed a grace period because they had never had to pay these fines before.

As it turns out, this was not the first time GSU faculty and staff had to pay parking fines. In a faculty senate meeting on March 9, Dean John Nolen made a motion - that the Traffic and Safety Committee consider the issue of traffic fines of faculty and staff and come back to the Senate with a recommendation. Alan Kaye seconded the motion. Larry Price suggested that the committee also consider the legal status of the citations issued; there was some question whether, as a non-judicial body, Georgia

Southern College has due process in the collection of fines. The college may collect fines from students because they agree to submit to certain rules and regulations by virtue of accepting their enrollment. The motion passed unanimously.

The proposal was approved by President Nicholas Henry and went into effect Sept. 19, 1988.

An excerpt from one of the 1988 faculty senate meetings: For the committee (Joe Blankenbaker) moved that, from now on, faculty and staff members be required to pay fines for tickets received for parking a vehicle improperly. Larry Price asked if this new regulation would apply to college owned vehicles ... Vice President Armstrong said it would. Blankenbaker answered Dr. Stone's question about rights of appeal by stating that faculty, staff, and students would have the same rights. The motion passed with two senators opposed and one abstention.

During this period, current

GSU Public Safety Director Ken Brown was in charge of writing tickets for faculty, staff and students.

"They passed the resolution, but it had no teeth in it," Brown said. "If the faculty didn't pay, we had no recourse. They could hold students' diplomas (if they didn't pay), but they couldn't hold the faculty and staffs' paychecks."

Brown said there were "off campus" parking lots for the commuters and then there were areas for the faculty and staff to park, and that the charge for the decals was only around five dollars for the full year.

In the years to follow, GSU developed what is now known as the Parking and Transportation Department. Bob Chambers was appointed to head the department in 1991.

"My office realized there was a loophole in it," Chambers said. "Our regulations are GSU's regulations, when we started, it was always understood that faculty and staff would be treated the same."

Henry sees 'goodwill' between campus and the community

By Christopher Cole
Managing Editor

Second in a two-part series

Editor's note: The first part of the following interview with GSU President Nicholas Henry was printed in Tuesday's edition. In this issue, he talks about the Statesboro community, police-student conflicts, zoning and noise ordinances, parking, construction, and his own future at GSU.

G-A: What about our dealings with the community? ... Tom Palfy with Food Services has told us he wants to make sure we're not competing with restaurants in the community by putting franchises on our campus, which would be too competitive with them.

NH: I am not familiar with the franchise argument as such. We want to be good neighbors with all of the Statesboro business community, however.

G-A: You met with the Chamber of Commerce recently, didn't you?

NH: I meet with them regularly. I'm an ex-officio member.

G-A: You would say we have a very beneficial relationship with them?

NH: Oh, I think the Statesboro community-campus is really the best I've seen anywhere.

G-A: What's most contributed to that?

NH: Goodwill on the part of both the campus and the community. I think there's a mutual appreciation of what each adds to the other.

President Nicholas Henry

G-A: I'm sure you're aware that a lot of students don't necessarily believe that. A lot of them think the community has been in an adversarial role with the students in some cases.

NH: Well, I'm aware of that. I think the students should be

'There's nowhere else to ride' Bikes could be banned from the pedestrian

Campus bicyclists such as these may find themselves restricted.

By John Munford
Assistant News Editor

The issue of banning bicyclists from the pedestrian has resurfaced again amidst student and faculty concerns of safety hazards caused by careless bikers.

A faculty senate committee has been formed to further study the issue; the committee has been given the results of a June 1993 report from the Non-Motorized Vehicles on Campus committee which looked into possible policies, procedures and recommendations of regulating non-motorized transportation on campus.

"Before you start telling people where they can't ride their bikes, you have to provide them with a place that they can," said William Ehling, chair of the committee and Campus Recreation and Intramurals coordinator.

"That's why we need the bike paths," Ehling said. "You have to provide a place for them to ride before you start giving tickets. We reaffirmed for Dr. John Nolen (Vice President of Student Affairs) that this is an issue that needed more attention."

Ehling filed the committee's report with Nolen, who had originally charged the committee with its scope.

"The number one issue will be cost if the bike paths are to be built," Nolen said. "There are also a lot of questions about whether the bikes should be on the pedestrian or not. We must also decide on how to enforce the policies."

Senior Landscape Architect David Hainley of GSU facilities planning is working on a bicycle master plan that will be completed next month. The plan includes taking advantage of the new wider lane for automobiles on Sweetheart Circle to add a bicycle lane.

"We are going to propose the addition of bike paths," Hainley said. The plan will also propose "alternative routes for bikers other than using the pedestrian" and the usage of signs designating riding zones and no-riding zones.

A few incidents

GSU Public Safety Captain Mike Russell, who was also on the Non-Motorized Vehicles on Campus committee, said there have been "a few incidents" involving bicycle-pedestrian collisions.

"We wouldn't have this problem if people would ride in a controllable manner, but some cyclists are rolling by at 90 miles an hour down the pedestrian," Russell said. "The problem is there's nowhere else to ride."

Part 40-6-294 of Georgia law states that bicyclists should ride on a roadway or designated bike path. Until two years ago, sidewalks were included as acceptable places to bike, but they were amended out of the law.

Russell said that he considers the pedestrian a sidewalk, but public safety officials are not stopping cyclists unless they pose a threat to pedestrians.

"We don't want to ticket anyone since there's nowhere else for them to go," Russell said. "If a bicyclist is acting reckless in his/her behavior, they could be subject to a violation of University policy or a violation of Georgia law."

more aware that at the last Day for Southern the Statesboro community of 21,000 people contributed $670,000 to GSU, and has been contributing close to that level for many years.

G-A: Who are the major contributors?

NH: Oh, it's very widespread. It's a very broadly-based level of contributions. Some contribute more than others, but it's a very grassroots kind of support. And those funds go primarily for scholarships.

G-A: I was thinking also in terms of government policy, and the attitude students have toward it. In particular ... police, zoning, the ordinance regarding noise and parties. A lot of students have complained about that. What is your feeling?

NH: Which one are you asking me about first?

G-A: Let's ask first about the R1-R2 zoning, the houses where they can't have more than three people ...

NH: There are good points to be made on either side of that argument. But it's not unseemly for Statesboro to adopt the housing code that's already used in a number of college towns across the country, including Athens, Ga.

G-A: I'm sorry, what are you saying?

NH: Statesboro has essentially adopted the code that was in existence for many years in Athens, which was based on the same idea. Statesboro is not trying to deliberately harm any stu-

Eighteen students from the communication arts department will earn some hands-on experience in a research project Friday in Hilton Head, SC with the local newspaper.

The public relations students will conduct research consumer surveys in four locations around the South Carolina town. The research is designed to discover the reading habits of visitors to the island.

After the project is over, each member will receive a copy of the finished project for their portfolios.

Lisa Fall, a GSU public relations instructor, is also a contributor to the Island Packet, which is the daily newspaper for the island.

"She has a public relations firm there and has worked for several years as a contributor for the paper," GSU public relations student Gary Cochran said. "The research we will be doing is very common in the industry. The Low Country Outlet Mall has also us to do some research later for them."

This is the first year for the program. There are a total of 13 public relation major students in the class and the other five members for the trip have an emphasis in public relations.

GSU department looks to expand

By Aaron Solomon
Staff Writer

GSU has experienced rapid growth and an increase in enrollment over the last few years. To deal with this growth, the school has had to increase its educational outlets to the growing number of students. One department on campus doing this is the Chemistry department.

The department has had difficulty in making class space available to students. To deal with this problem, they have been searching for quality faculty so they can offer a greater number of courses.

Bill Ponder, head of the department, wants someone who can research as well as be an educator.

"What we are looking for is someone who is interested in teaching, and who is willing to work with undergraduate students on research," Ponder said.

The department is currently looking into the possibility of hiring two new faculty members. They need a biochemist and an analytical chemist.

"One of the areas that we would like to fill in is the area of molecular biology," Ponder said.

The chemistry department, like most departments on campus, hires new faculty to fill the vacated slots of faculty who have left, but in this case, they are doing it to increase staff. The goal is to be able to offer more outlets to the increasing number of students.

"Enrollment in chemistry at Georgia Southern is growing, and we have a need for additional staff," Ponder said.

Along with the possible increase in staff, the department has also increased its ability to do research.

They will soon acquire a Nuclear Magnetic Resonance instrument that will allow chemists to quickly analyze the structures of unknown compounds.

This should help the department attract more faculty that are interested in doing research, as well as increase the quantity of research that is being done.

"With the help of Dr. Jeff Orvis, we just recently received a $100,000 grant from the National Science Foundation to buy a $200,000 piece of equipment," Ponder said.

The other $100,000 is being provided by the university.

Ponder said this is a big step up for the department because it is a big vote of confidence from the National Science Foundation, and a "big vote of confidence" by the university.

Small town tries to pass alcohol laws

The Associated Press

MT. ZION, Ga. — This tiny west Georgia town, which has been dry since its creation 120 years ago, is considering a move some officials insist will help it keep up with the changing times.

The Carroll County community of about 450 people will hear the first reading of an ordinance allowing and regulating the sale of alcohol at the next City Council meeting in February.

"Even though we're a small town, you never know when someone will want to do something like (sell alcohol)," said City Clerk Anita Altman. "We're just trying to plan ahead. We know that five to 10 years from now things will probably be a lot different than they are now."

The 26-page ordinance, which Altman says is patterned after the alcohol ordinance in the county seat of Carrollton, includes the regulation of beer, wine and mixed drinks, nude dancing establishments, restaurants and supper clubs.

Currently, the city has only two businesses that could qualify to sell beer and wine.

"One way or another, it doesn't matter to me," said resident Sharon Gammon.

"If they don't buy it here, they're going to buy it somewhere else. It's just going to make the city more money."

City Councilman Donald Newman said he is against the ordinance.

"My position is pretty clear that I will vote against it when it comes up for a vote," said Newman.

"I've seen so many families whose lives were ruined by alcohol."

Newman encouraged citizens to attend the council meetings where the ordinance will be discussed and voice their opinions.

"Our duty is to do the wishes of the community and if they don't give us any input, they might not go along with the way we vote," says Newman.

Our Opinion

Students are not being represented as they should

We at The George-Anne are asking the Student Government Association to fill its obligation of doing something positive for the student body.

This newspaper is impressed with some of the ambitions expressed by then-candidate Ryran Traylor in April of 1994. After he was elected SGA president, there were hopes that we could bridge the ever-widening gap between campus and community.

That seemed to be the driving force behind his stated goals, along with voter registration and a commitment to volunteer service.

We believed both tickets running for election had something to offer GSU students, and expected that no matter who won, changes for the better would be seen.

Essentially, we have waited an entire quarter (fall, which should be the most active time of year) to ask this question of Mr. Traylor, his vice presidents and the student senate: What can you do for us?

The current SGA officers haven't given any indication they are being irresponsible. As far as we know, they attend all business meetings and have a running dialog with the administration. But if that's all there is to it, if there's no drive to accomplish something new, what is the purpose of having SGA elections? GSU could simply hire students to represent each other, if the job didn't involve something extra.

Perhaps this year's SGA just hasn't grasped the concept of its mission, in which case, they need to have a serious brainstorming session. But if they're actually doing more than we perceive, the communication lines need to be opened up. At the very least, one would expect SGA to use public relations as a tool so people think things are being done. Perhaps so little is being accomplished that not even good PR would be beneficial.

This constructive criticism comes only after a long wait to see what the new SGA would do for the students it represents. Maybe someone there will heed our call.

Drinking and driving is a deadly chance to take

If you think drinking and driving is nothing out of the ordinary, read this.

"Drinking and driving. Ha! No big deal!

Yeah, right man. I won't be killed.

Give me a break! I only live a mile from here.

Besides, I've only had one beer.

Give me the keys! I won't tell you again!

You'd hand 'em over if you were any kind of friend!"

"OK, man. Be careful. Go straight home.

Here's your keys.

Oh, and man, when you get there, pick up the phone

... just so I'll know you're all right."

"OK," he slurs, stumbling over cans into the night.

Across town, the late cinema is over.

Dad and 3-year-old Tyler play tag in the parking lot,

Running circles around mother.

Whisking Tyler in a loving embrace,

Dad hears mom say,

"It's late and somebody's tired. Let's go home the short way."

Strapping in his sleepy son,

John smiles at his wife.

"OK, hon. I think you're right. We've all had a pretty long night."

Keys turn on the east side of town,

And on the west,

One turned in innocence, the other bent toward death.

Phillip fumbles with the volume on his radio.

Diane tells John not to drive so slow.

Phillip's truck crosses the center line.

Tired Tyler begins to whine.

Diane adjusts her seat belt and John begins to hum.

Phillip pops the top on "another one."

John's headlights trace the curve of the pavement.

Phillip crushes his last can and does away with it.

Pressing the gas just a little bit harder,

He speeds up to 80.

His friend thought he couldn't drive.

He must have been crazy!

John sighs, then sees headlights.

Stomping the brakes, the tires smoke and squeal.

But, it is too late.

Phillip's eyes widen, he grips the wheel.

Diane screams with terror and clings to John's arm.

Phillip cowers in fear and alarm.

The brakes go untouched in Phillip's truck.

He couldn't get to them fast enough.

Metal collides with metal, it crunches and sparks,

The sound of breaking glass slices the dark.

The truck slides sideways into a field.

The hood is crumpled and there's a crack in the windshield,

Where Phillip's head met the splintering glass,

And left as its mark, an oozing red gash.

John and Diane's 85 Honda is as crushed as the can

Phillip had thrown out his window.

Amidst the mashed metal, and pieces of glass,

A car seat lies sideways in rubble and trash.

A shrill cry is heard, again and again,

For mommy and daddy to please answer him.

The 3-year-old screams until his throat burns,

But his desperate cries are never returned.

Phillip struggles to open his door,

As flames start to leap up from the truck floor.

Sweat and tears sting his eyes, and smoke chokes his breath.

His mind races, "I'll burn to death!"

His fist finds a window and breaks it through,

As flames start to eat away at his shoe.

He slides through the jagged glass to the ground,

Feeling no pain, for it had been drowned.

Lying beside the flaming truck,

He struggles to pull himself up.

Grabbing a hold of a twisted trunk lid,

He lifts himself up to lie upon it.

Phillip realizes he's draped across the Honda, then he hears Tyler screaming in horror.

Yanking on the door handle with all he could manage,

Phillip, sobbing,

Pulled Tyler's shivering body from the wreckage.

Clutching the orphan with all of his might,

He drops to his knees and holds him tight.

Phillip cries out in anguish and disbelief,

"Oh, Lord, please forgive me for what You've just seen!

Oh, God, let me die! How could I? How could I?

Please, tell me why! Oh, kid! Oh, kid! What can I say?

Tonight I took your mommy and daddy away!"

When you drink, you pump toxins into your body.

When you drive, those toxins poison innocence. Don't do it.

Enough said.

'To walk the Christian walk' is definitely not easy

This past weekend I attended the Consecration of the Ninth Bishop of the Diocese of Georgia. The service was held at Saint John the Baptist Roman Catholic Cathedral in Savannah. I stood at the front of the church for the processional to help place all the banners for each church from the Diocese in their stands. Then, moved to the rear to sit with my roommate, other members of the Canterbury Club, and members of Trinity Episcopal Church from Statesboro.

We did not have the opportunity to see much of the service. It seemed like giants were sitting in all of the pews of the cathedral. But, it was all worth the wait for communion. When all the giants knelt for the transformation of bread and wine into the body and blood of Christ, we were, finally, able to see all the bishops and priests blessing the Eucharist. It had to be the most breathtaking and awe inspiring sight I have ever witnessed in my life. Finally, having the blessing of the Presiding Bishop of the United States gave me goose bumps.

THE ANSWER

JUDITH CUNNINGHAM

It was then that I was overjoyed to be a Christian and an Episcopalian.

After the service, I began to wonder if this was the way being a Christian was supposed to feel. Was I supposed to be in a state of utopia all the time for me to be the "perfect" Christian? The answer came back a resounding "no" Sunday morning during Christian Education class at church.

I have often heard, as we have all heard, "if you talk the talk, then walk the walk." What does it mean to "walk the walk?" This is another question I have pondered on for more than the weekend. I have been pondering that question since I renewed my faith in God and Christ. Yes, I am guilty of losing my way. I have fallen off the proverbial wagon several times in the Great Hay Ride of Life. Yet, each time I fell off the wagon it slowed down and never left me on the long and lonely dirt road to fend for myself. Every time I fell off someone even reached a hand out to me. Sometimes I was slow to take the hand and be lifted back up. Other times I was quick and practically jumped back on the wagon.

I have asked other people about "walking the walk" and every time I received a different answer. During my senior year the leader of my high school FCA said, "the walk is to love as God, and Christ loved, unconditionally, and to let others see the Christ in you." Sounds easy, but is it? NO. I have a friend who attends a Christian university in Virginia. She says, "The walk is following the will of God no matter what happens." That sounds even easier than letting others see Christ in me. But, to follow someone else's will other than my own. I have a hard enough time trying to do what my own mother tells me.

In Christian Ed. we are using a book called the Autobiography of God. I forget who the author is. Last Sunday we read and discussed the chapter on the four different kinds of hearing hearts. I, not too much to my surprise, discovered I have heart type four. The fourth is too busy to stop and listen to what God's will is for me. That is something I have known for some time, but did not have the courage to acknowledge. It was when I was reading this chapter that God sort of slapped me in the face. How can you miss a slap in the face from God? That's just it, you can't!

To "talk the talk" is simple. To "then walk the walk" is something in my life as a Christian I have tried to do with a great deal of difficulty. After writing this article, I think it is safe to say, there is no easy or perfect way to "walk the walk." Of course, then again, being a Christian has not proven to be easy either.

Your Opinion

The clergy has created a smokescreen against homosexuality

Dear Editor,
In the "Letter to the Editor" you ran entitled "Pastor: homosexuality is wrong" by Pastor Kunkel, it stated "God hates adultery and fornication as much as homosexuality. However, God doesn't hate the person." Are you not placing conditions on the unconditional love guaranteed by Christ? Now I ask you, how does God show his people the way to his Kingdom, by teaching pure unconditional love for all, or by treating us as one of Pavlov's dogs?

In the Roanoke Times and World News (Dec. 9, 1994, page A23) an excellent argument is made.

"The Bible is much more than endless pages of strict rules and punishments. It had been the source of much inspiration and solace for thousands of years to millions of people. Compassion, (Luke 6:31), forgiveness (Proverbs 25:21-22), and inner peace (Psalms 23) are all made available through these great writings. My objection [the author's] arises, however when carefully selected passages are taken out of context used to convince others of the righteousness of a personal of political cause. It cheapens Faith itself.

They claim that the Bible condemns homosexuality is literally true. However, it is possible using the Bible to literally justify widely varying claims and contradictions. This does not belittle the Bible, but enhances its value and wisdom by forcing each of us to search for meaning, rather than merely seizing upon convenient phrases that support our own prejudices and fears."

When Christopher Columbus sailed to the Caribbean on Oct. 12, 1492, he through the use of Christianity, was able to establish doctrine that promoted slavery. In fact, "it was the Church itself which sanctioned the classification of Africans as inferior mortals" (The Journal of Religious Thought, Winter-Spring 1992 v49 n2 p25).

In the exact same manner that the church promoted slavery by quoting passages that would show the immoral and unethical act to be acceptable, many self described "men of god" now seek passages to condemn homosexuality. Whatever happened to the phrase "love they neighbor?"

The clergy have created a smokescreen to keep the general public from thinking freely. When one invites Christ into their life but has a different revelation or enlightenment than what the church is looking for they hastily condemn it. What gives you or the church the right to say how Christ will show himself to another? Or will you now place another condition on God and says he doesn't like variety.

This issue is being used to continue the smokescreen that is used to separate, divide and control large populations, just as the church used the issue of slavery to separate blacks and whites until finally the consciousness of society moved past the old doctrine of the church and accepted the idea that slavery was wrong.

While you use God's word against individuals by saying "don't be deceived," God also says to "love your brother" as an equal, don't judge him or risk being judged yourself. This all goes back to the Golden Rule "do unto others as you would have them do unto you." Perhaps Mr. Kunkel needs to be reminded of this idea. Moreover, the letter stated that we are born with something "called a SIN NATURE. In other words, we are bent toward sinning." Why would God create us with the innate desire to sin? Does God, for some sick reason receive pleasure in our hardship? No, of course not.

I feel so strongly on this because the battle lines are being drawn, and the church continues to teach unconditional love while using fear tactics to obtain their desired response.

RONNIE SWINFORD

Super Bowl predictions

Well, sports fans, welcome to one place that you can get true story about the Super

Well, I know that we are all tired of hearing how San Francisco can't lose unless they don't show up. Well, I will show you one way that the mighty 49ers can lose the most important game of the year. I forgot that was against Las Vegas a week ago.)

Scenario #1
On the way to Miami, San Francisco's plane crashes in the Gulf of Mexico and only half of the team survives. Final score 20 San Diego. A variant of this scenario is if no one survives and the game is postponed for a week. In that case Las Vegas would win 35-14. That is about the only way that San Francisco can lose. However there are many ways that San Fran might fail to cover the point spread. (Note: the time of writing this is San Fran -19.5.)

Scenario #2
Just like the GSU basketball team, the 49ers are hit with a serious case of the chicken pox. After every other play one of the players have to run the field and "relieve themselves" on the sidelines. Final score: 18-13 San Fran in a lopsided game.

Scenario #3
San Fran decides to switch to the GSU option offense to confuse Junior Seau. After running 500 yards rushing San Francisco would kick a field goal at 1:01 showing on the clock. The game ends up 3-0 in the ugliest Super Bowl in history.

Scenario #4
Brett Jones will have a prosthetic knee surgery this week in order to be ready for Pro Bowl. This would hurt the 49ers offense because their backup tight end never plays and would probably drop two or three touchdowns, causing a measly field goal instead. Final score: 35-21 San Fran.

Scenario #5
A freak of nature, hurricane "Bucky" blows into Miami, but the only thing that is damaged is Joe Robbie Stadium. The Orange Bowl is quickly made ready for use. However, many 49ers refuse to play because, as Deion Sanders puts it, "We refuse to play on a field where the home team did better than we are. And better dancers." Score at the end: 25-17 49ers.

Scenario #6
The 49ers are forced to play on a field in the Everglades. As he dives for a ball, a Taylor is swallowed whole by an alligator. Also, the 49ers finally find something faster than he is, a mad crocodile. Due to many unfortunate accidents the 49ers lose 25 players and are forced to play with some of their practice players. Score 26-19, Niner's win. They would like to get serious for a few seconds. The crocodile is football, and the old saying that any team can beat another team on any given day is true. However, San Francisco still look unbeatable. And in your third-team defense, end is Richard Dent you have a pretty good team. For the record I will make a bet for all you gullible people who like to bet with your money. San Francisco 46 San Diego 17.

Eagle forward Winters 'just plays hard all the time'

By Jeff Whitten
Sports Editor

(Wilson Winters is not on the cover of the 1994-95 GSU men's basketball media guide, as this season was early on proclaimed the year of the three guard offense, and Winters is not a guard. Hindsight suggests he might have deserved a place ...)

It has not been much of a season for the GSU men's basketball team, either on or off the court. A game into the season, the head coach resigned and took three of his assistants with him after it was found that a junior college recruit wasn't academically eligible to play Division I ball. Rightly or wrongly, it appeared as if scandal was only a hair's breadth away from the men's basketball program. Two other players were suspended shortly afterwards, for some unexplained, but possibly related, infraction. The suspension lasted two games, and rumors flew, as they tend to do at times like these. Rumors that the NCAA was planning to conduct an investigation of the athletic department, rumors that programs other than basketball were involved in violations. It was a bad time.

The replacement coach was a former assistant with a famous last name in collegiate basketball circles, but precious little coaching experience, and ironically coached against his father first time out. His father had the bigger, faster and more talented team and won by 30 points.

James Hill

There have been ups and downs since then, but more downs than ups, and it would have perhaps been easiest to fold the tents, but the Eagles, and Winters, have not.

By normal standards their 6-10 record is poor, but these are not normal times for GSU basketball.

WOMEN'S BASKETBALL

Autrey scores 18, collects 17 rebounds in SoCon triumph

Lady Eagles edge Davidson, 75-72

By Ronnie Swinford
Senior Staff Writer

The Lady Eagles pushed their conference record to 4-1, and their overall record to 8-8 with a tough 75-72 win over Davidson.

The Lady Eagles again played tenacious defense and caused 30 turnovers. They recorded 12 steals with each player recording at least one.

Injuries limited GSU to eight players, and two of the Lady Eagle's five forwards are hurting. Kelly Spake has an injured ankle and Marysue James has a rotator cuff problem, leaving the Eagles with only three reserves. Davidson, on the other hand, played 13 players in the game.

GSU's head coach does not think the injuries have severely affected the team.

"I don't feel that our depth is that big a problem because early in the year our young players got to play," said Head Coach Drema

Greer.

Janice Johnson lead the Lady Eagles in scoring with 19 points.

"WE ARE NOT PLAYING OUR DEFENSE THE WAY THAT I LIKE TO SEE IT. WE PULLED OUT TO A 12 POINT LEAD AT ONE TIME IN THE GAME WHEN WE DID PLAY LIKE WE SHOULD."

— HEAD COACH DREMA GREER

Andrea Autrey added 18 points and 17 rebounds, while Tara Anderson contributed 17 points.

Greer had few words of praise for her team, which gave up a 12 point second-half lead.

The Lady Eagles only shot 40 percent from the field, which Greer said was caused by the Davidson defense.

"They played a man defense against us, and that hurt our slashing-type of offense," she said.

According to Greer, the Lady Eagles win games with defense, yet did not play well defensively against Davidson.

"We are not playing our defense the way that I like to see it," said Greer. "We pulled out to a 12 point lead at one time in the game when we did play like we should."

The Lady Eagles' next home game is Jan. 28 at Hanner Fieldhouse, when Appalachian State comes to town. Game time is 4:30 p.m.

Winters plays with a marked intensity. And if it can be said the eyes are a mirror of the soul, then Winters' mirror is his entire face, eyes included. Winters has a stare that is pure whatever he's feeling at the moment. If a referee blows a call, Winters glares at the referee then rolls his eyes skyward. If he makes a particularly good play, or a bad one, his eyes flash.

Winters spends every game looking as if he's ready to fight.

"I can't control my emotions when I play, I just play hard all the time," he said, "and I don't care who we play, I just want to win."

He comes from Romeoville, which is a suburb 25 minutes southwest of Chicago. Winters played at Romeoville High School, and was a Chicago Sun-Times All-Area MVP.

He went on to Butler County Junior College which sits in a small Kansas town called Eldorado.

Winters led that team to back-to-back Junior College Athletic Association (JCAA) national runner-up finishes, and got what he called "national exposure" out of the deal.

A few four-year colleges came calling. Illinois State and the University of Illinois at Chicago wanted him, as did GSU. The University of Wisconsin came calling, too, but they waited too long, according to Winters. GSU, and ex-assistant coach Robby Lang, who now coaches at Auburn, were there from the beginning of Winters' second year at Butler County.

"I trusted my junior college coach, and he said I could trust Coach Lang, so that's one of the reasons I ended up here," Winters said, "I wanted to come where I knew I had a chance to play."

Winters has gotten his chance to play, and then some.

He has been the only GSU player to start every game, and through 15 games was third on the team in scoring with an 11.3 average, and second in rebounding, averaging 6.9 a game.

And then there was the so-called chicken pox epidemic, which in reality was epidemic only to Tim Heath. But because Winters is the only player on the team who hasn't had the chicken pox, there was some risk he could be a carrier, and so there was a moment before the University of Chattanooga-Tennessee game when the conference officials and GSU's trainer discussed whether Winters should play.

"There was a while they were trying to figure out why they weren't gonna let me play, because I didn't have it (chicken pox)," he said. The trainer evidently persuaded the conference official, because Winters played. He finished the game with 15 points and 4 rebounds.

So much for the chicken pox. Winters says his favorite player is Michael Jordan.

"Jordan will always be my favorite player, and I got a chance to see him play in the old stadium, before he left," Winters said, referring to Chicago Stadium.

What about Jordan's baseball career?

I think he's just playing to be playing, he probably got tired of sitting around the house," he said.

Winters said he has more than one option left to him when he finishes his eligibility this season. He will earn his degree in criminal justice next year, and then will either go into GSU's Justice Studies graduate degree program, or try out for a European professional team.

Western rips Eagles behind King's 35 points

G-A Staff Reports

The Western Carolina Catamounts took advantage of Frankie King's game-high 35 points as they cruised to a 77-62 victory over the Eagles Tuesday night in Cullowhee, N.C.

Wilson Winters led the Eagle effort with 19 points and 12 rebounds. Dante Gay was the only other Eagle to go double digits with 14 points, including four three-pointers. GSU was 5 for 9 from the three-point line.

Behind Winters and Gay were

Emmanuel Christophe with nine points, Lonnie Edwards and Jeff Cliett with eight each, and Pierre McKisic, who chipped in four points and eight rebounds.

The Eagles were forced to play with only two men on the bench, as both Tim Heath and Brian Wallace missed the contest.

The Eagles' Southern Conference record dropped to 2-3 and 6-11 overall. Their next game will be this Saturday night at Hanner Fieldhouse against East Tennessee State University.

Hey, GSU Sports Fans!

The George-Anne wants to know who you think will win the Superbowl.

- ☐ San Francisco 49ers.
- ☐ San Diego Chargers.
- ☐ A bunch of overpaid, steroid-addled Neanderthals who should probably be in jail.
- ☐ Bud Light.
- ☒ Couldn't care less.

Rules: There are no rules. Simply check a box, clip, then get this to The George-Anne, LB #8001 or bring by Room 223 in the Williams Center. Results will be published Jan. 26.

If the audience of Sunday's Super Bowl resembles the replies to The George-Anne's campus interest poll, then don't expect any high TV ratings. The majority (100 percent) went for "couldn't care less."

IN CLUB SPORTS

Equestrian club plans new season

By Celeste Youmans
Staff Writer

An exciting new sport was added to the campus recreation and intramurals program last fall. The GSU Equestrian Club began with only five members, and they now have a thriving membership of 13.

What does the equestrian club do? Each quarter the active members in the club go to various colleges to compete with schools in the Southeast, such as the College of Charleston.

They compete on different levels. Riding levels range from a beginning division, to an open division, where the rider is judged at an advanced level.

The college that hosts the competition supplies the horses the competitors ride. By doing this, the schools greatly reduce the cost for students who desire to continue to compete in college.

The competitions are a challenge for the riders because they do not know what horse they are riding until the day of the event.

Each rider is judged by how well he performs various skills with the horse. Each rider must have the correct style.

In the end of each event, there are a series of ribbons given to the winners. The awards range from first to sixth place, and each placement is worth a certain amount of points.

This quarter there will only be two shows for the club. The first will be held at Berry College, and the second will take place at the University of Georgia. The club is in a transitional period at the moment. They are currently looking for a new coach.

IN MUSIC

Museum will display items of the legends

The Associated Press

MACON, Ga.—The custodian of the Georgia Music Hall of Fame, which is scheduled to open in 1996, wants to liven up the museum by showcasing items donated by such stars as Lena Horne, Joe South and Chet Atkins.

Curator Joseph Johnson said Horne is sending a gown, South a 1957 Gretsch guitar, and Atkins is "looking through his things," for something to contribute.

Johnson told the museum's board of directors that he has already asked some other music industry artists to check their closets and donate prize keepsakes when Georgia Music Hall of Fame officials make a trip to Nashville on Feb. 27.

Some of those artists include

Ray Stevens, Bill Anderson and Ronnie Milsap.

"Museums are sometimes a drag because they're only about dead people," said Johnson.

The 42,000-square-foot Macon museum, scheduled to open during the March 1996 Cherry Blossom Festival, will be designed as a village with a jazz club, rhythm and blues alley, gospel chapel and country cafe.

The museum's first-floor Georgia Music Festival area will include three 45-seat theaters for audio/video presentations. Parents with children can take them to a planned children's room. A second-floor archives will hold original manuscripts.

The three-story center will blend Georgia talents as diverse as the Allman Brothers and Amy Grant.

'Piano Man' shaken up after Japan

The Associated Press

ALBANY, N.Y. — Billy Joel, shaken but unhurt in the earthquake that struck Japan, said he's starting to feel like the Forrest Gump of rock 'n' roll.

The singer performed in Moscow during its political upheavals, Berlin the night of German reunification and at a military base the night Baghdad was bombed. He was trying to sleep in a hotel room in Osaka when the earthquake hit.

In a telephone interview with The Associated Press, Joel said he remembered a period of unearthly calm before his 20th floor room in the Osaka Hotel Plaza starting shaking apart.

Then mirrors and paintings fell from the walls. A heavy desk flipped over. The wall bent into weird angles and shapes. His bed bucked and heaved across the room and he couldn't get up.

"I've had a number of near death experiences and what usually happens is this incredible sense of fatalism comes over you," he said. "You accept the idea that this could be your last second and almost funny thoughts come into your head."

Weird thoughts like the Piano Man wondering if he would be crushed to death by a piano crashing through the ceiling from an upper floor.

Joel said it felt like being in a boat tossed around in a stormy sea and it seemed like the quake lasted for minutes.

"I remember shouting out, 'Alright already,'" he said. "I didn't know who I was shouting to, but I couldn't believe how long this thing lasted and I was certain that the building was going to shake itself apart ... Amazingly enough, the building held together."

Worried about fires or further structural damage, Joel said he quickly climbed the stairs down to the lobby.

He looked at scenes of devastation on the street, but quickly found his band and crew had emerged relatively unscathed.

"We're very much aware of how fortunate we were and everybody is extremely grateful to be alive and uninjured, too," he said.

Joel performed to a nearly full house in Osaka the night after the earthquake.

He said he was donating some of the proceeds of the show to the relief effort and was encouraging his record company and promoters to give more.

After a somber start, fans appeared to appreciate the show.

COMMENTARY

Writer reflects on AIDS victims lives

Editor's note: This is the last article in our series on AIDS and AIDS awareness. This article was written in reflection of World AIDS day which was in December.

By Judith Cunningham
Staff Writer

For the past several years, many AIDS activists and advocates have chosen one day out of the year to honor and remember those who have died or those who are continuing to fight HIV and AIDS. This day was during the holidays when most of us were celebrating, and spending time with those we love.

This was not a somber day for those people. They used this day to encourage others who are not active in the struggle for the prevention of HIV and AIDS to join the never-ending battle to educate the world about this dreaded disease.

Many groups around the world participated in some kind of demonstration.

Some in San Francisco held a candle-light vigil in remembrance of those who have died, and in hope for all those that have the disease.

In Cartersville, Ga., a group entered a float in the annual Cartersville Christmas Parade.

Several groups from 30 different states took part in 77 displays of the AIDS Memorial Quilt.

The AIDS quilt is made up of different panels in memory of people who have died from AIDS.

Even on the GSU campus, Alpha Phi Omega held a small candle-light vigil in front of the Henderson Library.

A few people stopped and stared at a group of 12 students reflecting on their place in the struggle to educate the world on HIV and AIDS.

The candles were blown out, but for some reason there seemed to be a vague light shining in the circle.

Maybe it was just the glow of the street light, or maybe it was a light of love and hope.

The love and hope of those 12 people could have lit up Statesboro for most of the holiday season.

We need to remember these people, not just on one day out of the year, but everyday. We are all in some way affected by this disease. It can happen to anyone.

The Greek lesbian playwright Sappho wrote, "Someone, I tell you will remember us."

That night in December, everyone was remembered.

JOSH BASS

Skirt's show at Chena's last week was damn fine. Those guys are getting tighter and tighter. Their new material sounds good and the forthcoming album is sure to be a smash.

In local music news, the latest band to compete for local attention is Red Letter Day. The punk-funk quartet did their first club performance Saturday night.

Composed mostly of friends of the band members, the crowd's participation was above normal. It was nice to see that many people supporting music again.

The number of people attending live shows seems to be increasing. It's about time we began to support progressive-alternative music in Statesboro.

The Boro's exclusive crossover band, Pigfat, is in the Bandemonium competition at Armstrong State in Savannah Saturday.

Pigfat has improved dramatically and was one of only ten bands chosen from over 70 applicants to make the contest. Good luck guys!

This week has some good choices, but little diversity.

Tonight, Tripp West takes over with rave and techno after the Rocket & Dave show. It's a skit in the Grease theme.

The only thing worth mentioning Friday night is White Buffalo at Blind Willie's. They do have a good following, but if you've already seen them, save your money for Saturday night.

Chena's hosts Big Fish Ensemble Saturday night. Vocalist and drummer Michael Lorant is the driving force behind the recent Jesus Christ Superstar: A Resurrection project. The resurrection snowballed from a whimsical concept into a sold-out show at Atlanta's Omni in November and plans for a second performance in February.

Apparently Lorant and the rest of the big fish aren't too busy to play. This will be their fourth or fifth return to the 'Boro and it should be interesting to hear and see how recent events have influenced the band and their sound.

The Kinchofoonee Cowboys are playing again Saturday night at Legend's. Apparently they didn't break up.

Wednesday is the day that gives next week reason to exist.

At Legend's, Bloodline plays with Brothers Brook opening. Refer to the story on this page for all the info.

Athens band Dayroom is having their special album release party at Blind Willie's. The show is also the first show of a 200 date tour that will take them all over the South and into the Midwest as far as Colorado.

Their debut album, "Perpetual Smile" is slated for release Feb. 2.

The band's lineup now includes GSU notable Ryan Kelly as bassist. Formerly of Home of Thousands and Grain, Kelly was added to the band about four months ago. Everyone involved is happy with the arrangement.

Southern rock seems to be having a reprise in the 90's. Bands like Allgood, Widespread Panic and others have brushed with success. The latest to join the ranks of southern revivalists is Bloodline.

Bloodline released their self-titled debut album on EMI records last fall.

The quintet consists of the sons of three music legends; modern jazz pioneer Miles Davis' son Erin on drums, The Doors' Robby Kreiger's son Waylon on rhythm guitar, and Georgia's own late Berry Oakley formerly of The Allman Brothers Band son Berry Jr. on bass and lead vocals.

Add 17-year-old guitar genius Joe Bonamassa, and seasoned New York keyboardist Lou Segretti and you have Bloodline, a solid blues-rock band with southern overtones.

The band is currently on a three month tour of the South and Midwest.

Lead guitarist Bonamassa said in a phone interview Tuesday the band played just last week in New York City with Krieger's father Robbie.

"We played a smokin' version of that old favorite 'Roadhouse Blues.' Everytime we play with him we learn something new about performing."

The band's first single "Stone Cold Hearted" reached Billboard's Top 20, and a follow up single, "Dixie Peach," is to be released soon.

The "Bloodline" collection is reminiscent of Allgood's latest album, "Uncommon Goal."

Warren Hayne's, who joined Oakley's father's former band in the 1980's plays guitar on one track, "Calling me Back."

Bloodline's rhythm section is the most attractive part of the group's sound. Oakley's bass is very credible, and Davis is a solid drummer.

Bonamassa contends Davis doesn't really bring in a jazz influence as you might expect. "Erin really plays with a harder edge than jazz drummers."

The fathers, both living and deceased, have had a lot of influence on the band.

The fact that Berry, Waylon, and Erin's fathers are legends helped "establish credibility, but now we're on proving ground. We are kind of challenged to play harder," according to Bonamassa.

Bonamassa credits his father as being his earliest and biggest influence. "When I started playing when I was 4-years-old, Stevie Ray Vaughn's album 'Texas Flood' had just come out. Everybody who plays guitar should listen to that album."

March 5 is the last date for the current Bloodline tour and plans for a major tour following Bonamassa's graduation are in the works.

There are even rumors of a spot on this summer's H.O.R.D.E. tour.

If your entertainment jones is for some solid blues-rock, Bloodline performs with opening act Brother's Brook at Legend's at 8 p.m. Wednesday.

Tickets are available in advance from Legend's or at the door for $5.

No-holds-barred album

Latin Playboys

Latin Playboys

(Slash/Warner Brothers)

By Tracy Varnell
Guest Writer

When thinking of Los Lobos, if the sound of conventional Latino cuts, such as "La Bamba," keep running through your mind, wait 'til you get a load of this.

David Hidalgo, lead vocalist, and Louis Perez, drummer, of Los Lobos have joined with Mitchell Froom, keyboards/producer, and Tchad Blake, guitars/engineer, to form Latin Playboys.

The group was formed by David Hidalgo's need to create after the completion of Los Lobos' last critically acclaimed album, "Kiko."

Combining their Spanish-Indian-American roots, the Latin Playboys work together to produce one of the most original and spontaneous piece of musical art that has been created in years.

Using a four-track tape machine in his own home, Hidalgo experimented with sounds of household instruments, such as pots and pans, to produce the spastic, garage-band sound that spawned Latin Playboys.

Hidalgo, not knowing what to do with his creation, introduced his recordings to Perez, Froom and Blake.

Together, using various cuts from the four-track and their individual musical talents, the Latin Playboys transformed left-winged musical fragments into a brilliant blend of Latin-blues swept alternative-funk.

This no-holds-barred album is an eclectic mixture of sounds and lyrical imagery. Wandering organs, whining trumpets, flighty guitar riffs, other various and sundry noises and electronically altered voices merge with a grab-bag of sounds that blend as smoothly as peanut butter and jelly.

The results are dreamlike melodies with a slight hint of white blotter.

Echoes and lingering street sounds, combined with creative poetic lyrics, roll through the album without sounding a bit polished.

This creates an unmistakable realism that many groups tend to take for granted. The music of the Latin Playboys encompasses a very wide variety of sounds and cultures.

To sum it up, great talent, great sound, great originality, great album!

Latin Playboys' sound spans the gamut from totally wiggled-out to tasteful, if possible, Latin porno music.

This album is a must hear. Absolutely Brilliant!

I think Statesboro's simply trying to protect existing neighborhoods. I don't think there's any malice there.

G-A: What about the noise ordinance?

NH: I think that's perfectly appropriate. Every community has an obligation to protect people against unwarranted exasperation.

G-A: Do you think before the ordinance was enacted, there might have been a problem?

NH: Yes, I know there was. And it's the cost of having a large student population living around the campus, and what we're trying to do at GSU is to increase the number of residence halls so we can alleviate some of that.

G-A: There are four agencies of police that operate in our area. Many students have complained there are just too many of them, that they're being pulled over constantly — they claim they're being harassed. Do you have anything to say for that?

NH: I have never objected, and I don't think anyone has objected, to the principle of checking drivers at points where it has been shown there's a high accident rate. And I believe that's the policy of the Statesboro police.

G-A: You don't think they also check where there seems to be a high incidence of DUI?

NH: I really don't believe they're singling out student populations. They may be singling out areas where there's a high rate of people found driving intoxicated. That also may happen to correlate with students to a high proportion. But as long as they're not singling out students as students, they have a perfectly legitimate and justifiable policy.

G-A: Did you have a lot of conversations about "Snake Road," (encircling the large western parking lots) as they call it?

NH: I think I know which one you mean. The motivation for putting that curve in was to avoid speed bumps to slow down traffic. And it did not work as well as we'd hoped.

G-A: People just speed through there anyway, and just kind of swerve ...

NH: That's what we learned.

We're going to be redesigning some roads anyway, and I believe that one is on the list, as we do some more construction.

G-A: That whole subject brings me to the topic of parking ... I know you've heard a lot about it, and what is your feeling toward the faculty/staff tickets, and that situation?

NH: The Faculty Senate recommended in a vote some years ago that faculty should pay for tickets that they receive. I have received tickets and paid for them. ... We're in the process of building significantly-expanded parking that will be in place in a year and a half to two years. I think you'll see a big change for the better.

G-A: They're still the appeals process; do you know how long that's going to last?

NH: I'm not familiar with the status of that, but everybody has a right of appeal, just like students.

G-A: Some people have said, include some faculty, that the appeals process may be unfair. They're questioning how many times appeals are actually granted. Do you have any comment on that, other than what (parking director) Bob Chambers has said (we give them an appeal, and it's either denied or accepted)?

NH: I'm just not familiar with the criticism on that. I have not heard that particular criticism.

G-A: Do you think Chambers has the hardest job on campus?

NH: I wouldn't trade jobs with him.

G-A: Do you think his staff is adequate for their workload?

NH: Well, I think there are a lot of areas on the campus that could use more staffing, and it's a matter of stretching the budget. I should imagine that would apply to his area as well.

G-A: What do think about the idea of phone registration for classes?

NH: Yeah, sure. And we are looking into that. We feel that we handle the pre-registration of classes pretty well, and I think phone registration may be less productive at GSU than some place like Georgia State, in the middle of the city. But we want to have a registration system that's as convenient to the students as possible, and we are looking further into telephone registration.

G-A: Are you pleased with the progress of the new buildings?

NH: Yeah, the two new buildings? Yeah.

G-A: Do you see a lot more continued growth?

NH: With the College of Education building, we have $85 million in new construction. That includes the residence hall we just completed, which was a relatively small [$6 million] project. So it's going to be a very exciting period of construction.

G-A: How long are you hoping to reside over this period of extreme growth, of constant growth?

NH: We're entering a new phase from growth of students to growth of construction, which is appropriate. We need to catch up to provide the best services we can to the students, and we're in the process of doing that.

G-A: But you plan to be here for awhile? Do you have any plans or aspirations ...

NH: I have no plans, and I hope the university has no plans for me.

G-A: There's nothing you're looking at right now. But if something came up that was appealing to you, would you consider it?

NH: Well, I think by definition anyone would.

G-A: What would be appealing to you?

NH: Oh, I don't know. I'm very happy in this position.

G-A: I have just one little question for you. Is the rumor true that you drive your convertible around with the top down in 30 degree weather?

NH: You can go out and look — the top is down.

G-A: So it doesn't matter what the weather is?

NH: My preference is that if you have a convertible, not to put the top up.

G-A: What model is it?

NH: It's a 1995 Camaro convertible with a stick shift.

Special pricing & loan program also available to faculty & staff

*Deferred Apple Computer Loan offer expires February 17, 1995. No payment of interest or principal will be required for 90 days. (Some resellers may require a deposit to hold merchandise while loan is being approved.) Interest accruing during this 90-day period will be added to principal, and the principal amount, as so increased, will thereafter bear interest which will be included in the repayment schedule. Monthly payment is an estimate based on the following information: For the Performa® 636 w/CD system shown here, a purchase price of $2,052.16, which includes 6% sales tax, including loan fees, the total loan amount is $2,171.60, which results in a monthly payment obligation of $37. For the Performa® 6115 w/CD system shown here, a purchase price of $2,900.16, which includes 6% sales tax, including loan fees, the total loan amount is $3,068.95, which results in a monthly payment obligation of $53. For the Power Macintosh® 7100/80 w/CD system shown here, a purchase price of $3,900.80, which includes 6% sales tax, including loan fees, the total loan amount is $4,127.83, which results in a monthly payment obligation of $70. Computer system prices, loan amounts and sales taxes may vary. See your authorized Apple Campus Reseller or representative for current system prices, loan and tax amounts. Loans are for a minimum of $1,000 to a maximum of $10,000. You may take out more than one loan, but the total of all loans cannot exceed $10,000 annually. A 55% loan origination fee will be added to the requested loan amount. The interest rate is variable, based on the commercial paper rate plus 5.55%. For the month of November, 1994, the interest rate was 10.85% with an Annual Percentage Rate of 12.10%. 8-year loan term with no prepayment penalty. The monthly payment and the Annual Percentage Rate shown assume the 90-day deferral of principal and interest described above and no other deferral of principal or interest. Students may defer principal payments up to 4 years, or until graduation. Deferral will change your monthly payments. The Apple Computer Loan is subject to credit approval. Apple Computer Loan and 90-Day Deferred Payment Plan offers available only to qualifying students, faculty and staff. Offers available only from Apple or an authorized Apple Campus Reseller or representative. ©1994 Apple Computer, Inc. All rights reserved.
