SGA expects as many as 2,000 voters in election

G-A Staff Reports

Turnout was average for SGA elections on the first day of voting Tuesday.

"By the number of scantrons we started with, I guess there were between 600 and 700 (voters)," said Kevin Kalicak, current SGA vice president. "During classes there was a slow but steady flow of traffic."

According to Kalicak, there were more students at the polls between classes.

"Hopefully if the turnout is the same as today, we'll have 1,800 - 2,000 voters," Kalicak said. "This new system will increase voter turnout. In years to come hopefully we'll be able to have voting at three locations at the same time."

Today is the last day of voting. The election tent will be located next to Hanner Fieldhouse from 9 a.m. - 3 p.m.

GOP calling for D.C. to elect a member of Congress

The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — House Speaker Newt Gingrich would like to make Washington, D.C. a Maryland congressional district and give city residents full voting rights in Congress, a published report said Sunday.

The district's 600,000 residents currently have a non-voting delegate in the House and no representation in the Senate.

Quoting unidentified federal and congressional sources, the Washington Times said Gingrich's plan calls for a House member with full voting privileges and a vote for Maryland's two senators.

'Trying to ... make our schools more effective'

Controversy stirring over Marvin Pittman

By Jana Mobley
Staff Writer

Editor's Note: This is the second in a two-part series examining the possible moving of the Marvin Pittman Laboratory School from the GSU campus. Today, this article looks at the proposal to move the school by Bulloch County School Board Superintendent Billy Bice.

The Bulloch County School Board has proposed to change the school system's five-year plan that will involve moving the Marvin Pittman Laboratory School 2.3 miles away from campus.

The proposed changes came about when the Bulloch County School Board found out that they may only be involved in a state grant for one more year.

In the Incentive Advance Funding Grant, Bulloch County earns money from the government depending on the number of students they have enrolled each year.

Currently they have about $20 million of local money to spend on school facilities, but since the grant is changing, the school board thinks that this will be its last year to have this money.

"Now that we are unsure of how much longer we will be involved with the grant, we feel that we should maximize the state budget," said Billy Bice, Bulloch County school board superintendent.

In order to get as much out of the budget as the county needs, they will have to build larger schools. This is very important because Bulloch County now has several elementary and middle school classrooms that are in mobile units.

"We are trying to get as many new schools built as we can with the maximum capacity so we can get the students out of mobile homes and make our schools more effective," said Frank Brocato, the Bulloch County school board associate superintendent.

The possible new site for the Marvin Pittman Laboratory School is on Langston Chapel Road.

The board is now considering building a middle school for grades six through eight to replace the William James Middle School.

"The Langston Chapel site is an ideal place for Marvin Pittman to be built because GSU will have the greatest access to that particular piece of land," Brocato said.

Although the proposal has not yet been made into a decision, the school board is currently examining many possibilities.

The school board is very supportive of the concept of Marvin Pittman and other county schools providing training for GSU's students.

They want to enhance GSU in all of their school systems but they don't think there is a necessity for Marvin Pittman being on campus.

"I have supported the concept of teacher training with GSU students and I intend to expand it," Bice said.

"I think that students are mobile and since Marvin Pittman will be changing to a kindergarten to fifth grade school, the students planning to teach upper grades will have to leave anyway," he said.

SGA debate draws few

Last votes being taken today in Hanner Fieldhouse

By Stephen Kirven
Staff Writer

A scant crowd showed up for the Student Government Association debate which was held for the presidential candidates Monday in front of a group of about five or 10 students under the Russell Union Rotunda. All three candidates, Mike Miller, Mario Hairston and Lee Hyer, appeared for the early afternoon debate.

Each candidate was allowed an opportunity for an opening statement, rebuttal and then answered questions from the audience were taken.

Miller asked Hyer about his ticket's "Day of Grace" proposal for student parking fines.

He questioned the idea of the plan because he thought Hyer was advocating taking parking spaces away from handicapped people.

"I am not advocating taking handicapped spaces away from handicapped people. What we are saying is to allow students who live off-campus, who usually ride their bikes to class and may be running late, to drive to class and park their cars close to the classroom," Hyer said.

A member of the audience asked the candidates what they would do to change the quality of education at GSU.

"One thing we need to do is improve the relationship between the faculty and the students," Hairston said. He also said we can incorporate off-campus programs so that off-campus students and on-campus students can act as one."

Another member of the audience asked what could be done to make GSU feel like a part of Statesboro.

Hyer said, "I would have a GSU-Statesboro banquet," said Miller, "and invite people from the community to come and listen to faculty talk about the various things they do around campus."

"I would hold informative sessions with various institutions on campus in order to tell them what we are doing and to get their input on what they expect us to do for them."

Hyer discussed having a shuttle system to some close apartment complexes in order to alleviate some of the parking problems on campus. He thought it was an issue that was worth investigating.

A member of the audience then asked the candidates what they see right and wrong about SGA.

"I really see nothing wrong with SGA right now, but SGA does need to be of a benefit to the students," Hairston said. "One way we can do that is to work with the students and find out what the problems are and do what we can to solve them. We are here to help the students as well as the community."

Unlike Hairston, Hyer found fault with SGA.

"Things are not running smoothly under the current administration," Hyer said.

Miller pointed to his plans on putting more focus on campus because of the low turnout at the polls.

"I am worried about SGA because only about 1,000 students came out and voted last year," Miller said. "Those people are the ones who decide who will run the campus. We need to focus on-campus before we can go off-campus to do things."

This year, in the first day of voting, Tuesday at the Union, approximately 700 students cast ballots.

Nursing department reaccredited

By Kim Wagner
Senior Staff Writer

After meeting the new guidelines provided by the National League of Nursing, GSU's graduate and undergraduate nursing programs were awarded the maximum eight-year reaccreditation.

"This accreditation is based on how well students learn and utilize information as well as the curriculum that is used in the nursing program," said Kaye Herth, nursing department chair.

In April, NLN evaluators visited GSU for four days. During the visit, evaluators talked with students and graduates, attended classes, looked at student files, went with nursing students to local hospitals and clinics, met with nurses at the hospitals to discuss GSU's student nurses and reviewed a detailed 200-page self-study report.

Before the reaccreditation could be officially awarded, Herth had to go before 12 nursing leaders at the Board of Review in October in New York.

"The final decision was made at this time, and at this meeting they said we were a model program," Herth said.

It is very important students graduate from an accredited program, she said. Most students wouldn't be interested in a program that wasn't accredited because it means the program hasn't met high quality standards.

Previous to this accreditation, the program had a five-year accreditation.

"Our (nursing) school is so young," Herth said. "The first time a program is accredited it can receive a maximum of five

CRI facility construction slated to begin in 1996

By Chris Sherwood
News Editor

Despite several problems in the past with the $9.3 million planned Campus Recreation Facility, construction should begin by early 1996.

"I can finally see the light at the end of the tunnel, I just hope it's not a train," said George Lynch, assistant dean of students.

The idea for the student recreation facility was first proposed eight years ago.

"In 1987, we first came up with a proposal for a recreation facility for students," said George Lynch, assistant dean of students. "In 1988, William Ehling (CRI Coordinator) was hired and I shared with him my proposal, and we sent it to John Nolen (vice president student affairs)."

The proposal was not acted on until the fall of 1990. The enrollment was less than 12,000. Almost 75 percent of the students were asked for input about the planned facility.

"In 1990, we took the proposal to the students," Lynch said. "We went to 126 organizations on campus and talked to 8,000 or 9,000 students."

After consulting with students, the school moved forward with their planning and decided on the amount the students would pay each quarter.

"Originally the students were going to give $20 a quarter," Lynch said. "Then they said they would sweeten the pot by paying $23 a quarter, with the extra $3 going to the fields."

According to Lynch, the state wouldn't give any funding for

"They said if you want it, you're going to have to pay for it," Lynch said.

Students will pay for the building and the interest, but once opened, the state will provide money for general operating expenses.

"Once the building is opened, the state will pay us roughly $4.50 per square foot to operate the building," Lynch said.

"We hope to have an artist rendering by this summer to put in the Student Union," Lynch said. "It won't be as state-of-the-art as UGA, but the students aren't paying $38 a quarter."

Among the options available to students will be basketball courts, weight lifting rooms, rock climbing walls, an indoor soccer field, an indoor track and several aerobic rooms.

OFF CAMPUS

Bad checks posted

By John Munford
Assistant News Editor

GSU students should take care not to pass bad checks at the local Arby's on Fair Road. Two checks that have been returned unpaid to Arby's are now posted at the front of the store, next to the cash register, for all to see.

The store's manager, Dawn Oglesby, said the owner, Chip Winner, likes to post the checks to "embarrass people about it."

"Some of the customers didn't like it, but he wants to make our customers aware of what's going on," Oglesby said. "I'm not sure it's such a good idea, but it's what our owner wants."

A problem arises, however, because the social security numbers and bank account numbers are still on the checks. Armed with these numbers, and the names and birthdates of the check holders, experienced criminals can fraudulently gain access to bank accounts and get a driver's license printed in that person's name.

Criminals may also use a victim's social security number to open a credit card account and have it sent to a new address.

"Someone may also work under your social security number," said Patricia Leonard, a service representative with the U.S. Social Security Office. "If the person works on it now, it could hurt you if it has been added to your record and if the benefits belong to someone else, we'll have to take them back."

The GSU Division of Public Safety reported nine cases of forgery and fraudulent practices in fiscal year 1994, down from 12 reports in fiscal year 1993.

Students do not have to provide their social security number on a check if asked, but the business does have the right to refuse to accept the check.

Well, here's your big chance. Ask us what you want to know, and we'll do our journalistic best to dig up some answers. Send your questions to "Q&A" at L.B. 8001, or come by Williams Center room 223. You could even FAX it to us at 871-1357. After all, the only stupid question is the one that wasn't asked.

Q: When will G-56 (the residence hall) be named? Who is in charge of naming it?

A: The administration hopes to have it named by the end of the year. A housing committee considers individuals who have contributed to the university and the community. They will eventually narrow down a selection and submit their choice to the President's Executive Council who will either accept the choice or reject it. The President's Council will ask for input on the choice from the Statesboro community. Once a choice has been made, the President's Council will submit the name to the Board Of Regents for final approval. A lengthy process to say the least.

Blood drive to be held Friday

By Kim Wagner
Senior Staff Writer

A Red Cross blood drive sponsored by Kappa Alpha is scheduled for Friday from 11 a.m. - 4 p.m. in a self-contained unit between the Union and the Williams Center.

In an attempt to prevent students from having to wait in long lines to donate, the sponsoring group has recruited donors.

"People interested in donating who don't have appointments should drop by to see if it's busy (at the unit)," said Nancy Martin, a consultant with the Southeast Regional Blood Center in Savannah. "If people with appointments don't show up then we will depend on walk-ins."

The goal for the drive is 65 productive units; however, more than 65 people are needed because some people will be deferred.

The unit can process about 65 to 70 units of blood during a five hour period.

"There is no way to contract any infectious disease when donating blood because the needle is used once and discarded," Martin said. "People donating receive a 'Save the World' t-shirt, a free mini physical, find out their blood type and also have their blood screened."

There will be another blood drive sponsored by Alpha Kappa Alpha fraternity on May 1.

People wishing to donate should weigh at least 110 pounds, eat a good meal previous to donating, avoid strenuous activity immediately prior to donating and not have donated blood within the last eight weeks, said Josie Murphy, director of Red Cross public relations.

Also a two-day blood drive will be held on May 30 and 31. At the drive, donors will not have to make appointments.

"At this two-day drive we're counting on getting as many students as possible to donate," Martin said. "During the months of May, June and July, the blood supply goes down 18 to 20 percent."

People don't realize that it takes a minimum of three days to process blood because eight tests are run on it, Martin said.

Sometimes a person can't wait three days to get blood, so it has to be on the shelf ready for use.

The George-Anne is always looking for writers. If you're interested in getting the experience employers are looking for, then come by room 223 in the Williams Center and fill out an application today.

Our Opinion

Extra organization needed

A promise is worth a thousand words, or in GSU's case, $3.3 million. That is the estimated amount students have paid for the future Campus Recreation and Intramural activity center.

When students began paying for this facility in fall 1990, they added $23 a quarter to their student activity fee toward the completion of the building. Based on 12,000 full-time students, $23 a quarter, for four years, the students have raised that $3.3 million.

This past quarter, the apparent target date for construction to begin was October or November of this year with completion by winter quarter 1997. Well, the latest word is the possible construction might have hit another snag. University officials have stated in the past that many of the problems that have occurred have been outside of their control.

The facility was supposed to cost around $7 million to complete and was supposed to be a state-of-the-art activity center for GSU students. It was supposed to be located on Register Road near the Veteran's Memorial Parkway. It was supposed to be available to all students and was supposed to have featured two floors of activities including a 20-foot climbing wall, hand ball, aerobic classes, an elevated running track and basketball and volleyball courts. Outside the complex, there was to have been extensive fields such as a track, baseball and softball fields and tennis courts which would all have had lighting.

If the problems the school has encountered on the project are as serious as they seem, something must be done with the committee who is in charge of this project. A gander at the personnel might show a missing element — extra organization.

The bureaucratic red tape of the Board of Regents has obviously slowed down the chances of stepping into a fine activity center, but internal complications have also played a part to this lack of construction action.

The committee, as well as, the students want this building, so let us use our senses and discuss the issue in a forum format for extra input.

We just hope that January 1996 is not just another date that will be pushed back once again.

The decision is yours — vote now

Do you know who Mario Hairston is? Do you know who Lee Hyer is? Do you know who Mike Miller is?

If you answered in the negative to any of the preceding questions, then you probably have not voted in the 1995-1996 SGA Elections.

On Monday, you must have missed the debate between the three presidential candidates, that is Hairston, Hyer and Miller, if you haven't figured it out.

On Tuesday, you must have missed the vote outside the Russell Union.

On Wednesday, you must have missed the vote at Lakeside Café.

So how about voting today, the last day of elections, while you still can. Today, from 9 a.m. until 3 p.m., outside Hanner Fieldhouse, you can vote for a SGA president, four SGA vice presidents and 29 senators.

Remember these individuals will be your government next year.

I'm really going to miss my graduating brother

REFLECTIONS

JULIE COLLINS

My brother will graduate this quarter. It's almost impossible to believe, because it seems like only yesterday we both were in high school. Now he's moving on to graduate school and moving out. YES! Don't get me wrong; I like my brother, and we have been getting along better—lately anyway. Yet, when we both moved back home, we were in each other's hair...we fought like cats and dogs. My brother has this certain, uh, shall I say charm? This unique charm causes us to fight so much.

First, he is a slob. Okay, granted, most guys are very sloppy when it comes to keeping the bathroom clean, or putting the top back on the toothpaste. But my brother goes beyond many, leaving clothes everywhere, food out, dishes dirty and dirty socks in every corner of every room. So I might not be Miss Spic-N-Span myself, but it drives me crazy when he won't clean up. It makes my messes look even worse since his messes are next to mine.

Secondly, he refuses to put the toilet seat back down. Yes, I know I harp on this rather sensitive subject time and time again. However, when your bottom has fallen into icy cold water at 3 a.m., you pretty much become an advocate for leaving the toilet seat in the down position. My brother says it shouldn't be down because that's making him go to more trouble, and why shouldn't I go to the trouble of putting it back up for him? Well, I could argue about this all day, but we all know the simple truth, including my brother. Toilet seats need to be left down.

And last, but never least with my brother — he whistles. No, this is not your ordinary happy tune. This is the whistling of a jingle from an annoying commercial, or TV theme song. I don't mind whistling to a degree, but when I leave the house with all these stupid jingles stuck in my head, it tends to get irritating.

We no longer argue like we used to, because we both are rarely ever home. When we do fight, our biggest problem is resolving the fight, since we both want the last word. Though nothing compares to the way we fought as children...now that was scary.

Once he was popping me with a wet towel, and I told him to stop. When he refused, I threw a plastic cup at him, and he walked around with a ring around his eyes for days. Another time, he hit me and I pushed him against the hinge of a door, scraping the skin from his backside (Ouch!). I was not always the culprit in these fights. There was one time that brother colored all my teeth black with a Magic Marker. And another time, we were fighting over a popsicle and he threw me down on the floor, which resulted in putting my arm in a sling.

My mother usually referred to our fights as stupid and useless. All I knew was that I always ended up losing and convincing myself that I let my brother win. There were many times he would pick fights because he wanted to toughen me up, since I was condemned to being a girl for life. And we all know girls can't fight, as he would often prove to me.

We both laugh now when we think of all those fights. Maybe one day I will look back on my brother being such a slob, and I'll laugh and say "Yep...that's my brother." Somehow, I find it doubtful — but I have hope. I am sure my brother has his qualms about me, but he doesn't have a column to write about it (smile).

I complain about his bad habits, but I would never want him to compromise anything about himself for anyone except himself. He may be a slob, but he's still my big brother. He sticks by me and backs me up. When I was a little, he'd scare me, giving me nightmares. But he'd also let me sleep with him when I was scared.

We both have always been protective over each other. In high school, he was a senior when I was a freshman. He drew me a map of the school, so I wouldn't lose my way. When I turned a corner, he was there watching over me, making sure no one stepped on my toes. There were numerous times he stuck up for me to people who hurt my feelings. I felt better about being a dinky freshman with my brother attending the same school.

When my brother went off to college his first year, I thought I would be ecstatic that he was gone. I wasn't; in fact, I was quite miserable. There was no one around to tell how my day went, or to discuss what happened last on "Beverly Hills 90210"...and I could not fight with him, because he was four hours away. I actually looked forward to the weekends he came to visit, and grew sad when he left again.

Now, he's graduating, and he will be leaving once again. I know that I will miss him and his terrible habits. I will miss him watching his "Star Trek" at 5:30, no matter what else was on TV. I will miss his ability to argue with me about anything, and to rationalize everything.

Though this time, I know it will be easier because I am older and more independent. As I grow older and more mature, I realize more things. I know that my brother is my protection, my vindicating shield. He is my safety net for when I stumble and fall. He tells me to go when I think I can go no more, and offers a kind word to me every now and then.

He is a slob, leaves the toilet seat up and annoyingly whistles the "Happy Days" theme.

I'll watch him graduate, and just smile... "Yep, that's my brother..." My big brother.

And I love him.

Learning through The G-A

BETWEEN THE LINES

JOHN MUNFORD

Life on a newspaper staff is not all it's cracked up to be.

There are many, too many, time constraints — at least if you want to perform well. My counterparts and I have skipped many a class here and there, giving less than 100 percent on a few projects. Often times, I have felt incredibly guilty because of this neglect for my studies.

A slew of above excellent (on average) educators have given me a hunger to learn, and I feel at some times I have let them down. Sure, not every one of them has been able to stir excitement in me; I still don't know how I made it through algebra. But I've lived to tell about it.

No. I lived to write about it.

Now, a majority of my guilt has been washed away, partly because I have learned many valuable lessons through my travails at this establishment, this monument of labor.

And to prove it to my teachers, who may have at one time said to themselves: this boy works too hard and needs to pay more attention in class, here is a small sampling of what I have learned while at The George-Anne:

1. There is no need to put off until tomorrow what you can do today.

Having set the collegiate record for waiting until the last minute to write the largest number of English 151 essays (I led the league that year, too), most people never thought I'd learn this lesson. But in the journalism business when you're scheduling interviews, it is best to plan your life as far ahead as you can stand it.

If it helps, get yourself a date book — the slightly organized life is always a better one. Life lived by the seat of your pants for too long takes too great a toll on even the most talented.

2. If you communicate clearly, the world is yours for the taking.

A large part of the learning process is listening for comprehension. Too often, the other part is neglected: communicating to the teacher what you don't understand. Therefore, lesson number three:

3. The only truly horrible, embarrassing question is the one that isn't asked.

Asking questions has become a part of my everyday existence. When I find out about a hot rumor or an interesting news idea, I ask myself first, "Who do I talk to?" and second, "What do I want to know about it?"

You guys and gals trust me to get the story right for you the first time. If I don't ask certain potentially controversial questions that I should reach inside myself for the guts to ask, I'm not only doing myself a disservice: I'm doing you wrong.

The only way to clear up the air when confusion pollutes it is by asking questions and demanding straight answers.

4. Have fun while you still can, for life is too short to end it asking yourself why.

Do what makes you happy, and do it without regard to how others feel about it. If you haven't found what makes you happy, then you really should take a quarter of school off and find it. Life throws enough shitburgers for us to eat without making ourselves more miserable by doing things we don't like to do.

5. Pride is not always a sin.

In some cases, pride is merely an extension of happiness: sharing personal joys with others. And it's okay if you overstep the bounds every once in a while, too, because if you don't believe in yourself, nobody will.

6. No matter how bad you think your life is, there's someone out there who's got it a million times worse than you.

While covering a Savannah Cardinals ballgame two weeks ago, I felt the kid in me rise and become envious of the players, who are being paid to play baseball every day.

"I have no athletic talent like these guys," I tell myself.

"I never had a chance," I tell myself.

"Only if," I tell myself.

Later in the game, through observational powers that my journalism teachers have beaten me to death with, I saw a group of wheelchair-bound fans perched in a special section.

"They'll never be able to play a simple game of catch," I thought to myself.

"They'll never feel the joy of making a great throw," I said to myself.

"They're the ones who should be angry, because they don't have the opportunities that I do."

That's when the real, empty pangs of guilt slammed their way into my stomach. I shouldn't complain just because I don't have the talent to play baseball. I have no reason on God's green earth to be jealous of anyone else because of their talent.

Because somewhere in these speedily tapping fingers, talent lurks, and I should be satisfied with that, and no more. I know what makes me happy.

And I'm doing it write now. If only getting a job after graduation was as easy as writing has become to me. But if it was, life would be just a little bit too easy.

I need a challenge every once in a while.

'Cocks win bird fight, 9-4

By Ronnie Swinford
Senior Staff Writer

The Eagle baseball team dropped the first game of a home-on-home series with the South Carolina Gamecocks Tuesday night at J.I. Clements' Field, 9-4.

The Gamecocks were led by two guys who were unlikely heroes. Six of their nine runs were driven in by first baseman Greg Pacitti and catcher Mike Wilson.

Coming into the game Pacitti was batting all of .194 (14-72). He went 3-5 for the game and hit a two-run home run.

Wilson was batting .208 (10-48) but hit a three-run homer and run scoring double in five at bats.

The Gamecocks, who are third in the Eastern half of the South Eastern Conference (SEC) with a 27-16 record, scored five runs in the first inning and four more in the third to give the Gamecocks a 9-0 lead after two and a half innings.

Ryan Cummings started the game for the Eagles and gave up seven of the nine runs. Jeff Keppen came in and gave up a homerun to the first batter he faced. Keppen gave up one more run in the third inning, but that would be the last for the Gamecocks.

Keppen pitched six innings and gave up two runs. He also struckout nine while allowing five hits.

"He has been battling with himself and struggling," said Coach Jack Stallings. "To see him come out and perform like that has to give him confidence, and it gives us confidence in him."

Also offense the Eagles came

out and showed that they were not going to quit. Donnie Coe had another 3-5 night and an RBI. This will push his average over .500 for the year.

"Coe has done a very good job for us at designated hitter," said Stallings.

"It feels great to play everyday," said Coe. "I am getting more confidence in my hitting with the increased opportunities."

The Eagles managed to rally for two runs in the fifth. Tyson Whitley opened the inning with a walk. Steve Wilson singled, and Sy Jones walked to load the bases. A balk scored Whitley and moved both runners over. Shane Marquis followed with a walk, reloading the bases. A wild pitch scored Wilson from third, but a double play ended the inning before the Eagles could take further advantage of USC miscues.

In the seventh inning the Eagles again mounted a rally, scoring twice. Jones reached on a two base error to start the inning. Marquis was then hit by a pitch, and an error by the shortstop loaded the bases. A single by Coe drove in Jones. A groundout to second by leadoff hitter Kevin Killimett drove in Marquis for the Eagles last run of the game.

GSU left 15 runners on-base, and left at least two baserunners stranded in six innings.

Freshman closer Tod Lee posted another good performance. He came on in the ninth inning and, after giving up a single to the first man he faced, struckout the side.

"He has pitched extremely well for us as a closer this year," said Stallings. "I wanted Todd to get a little work and he has pitched well for us almost everytime out this year."

SPORTS ANALYSIS

Survey of football season ticketholders reveals frustration, anger

By Jeff Whitten
Sports Editor

Let's play jeopardy. The category is ... GSU football.

The answer is, "Make available public water fountains/coolers so fans will not have to stand in the concession stand line and PAY for water."

The question is, "If you could change one thing about being at a GSU home football game, what would it be?"

Or how about this one?

"Make a commitment to return Erk's program to where it should be."

The question is, "What can we do to make you a Southern Booster again?"

Attendance is down, from a per-game average of 17,033 in 1991 to last season's average of 13,545. Student attendance dropped from an average of 4,055 in 1990 to 2,972 in 1994.

For many, the reason for the drop in fan attendance is as simple as 6-5, the record of last season's team.

But from the season ticket-holder's perspective, it is more complicated than that. The win-loss record appears to be their primary complaint, but other issues — the kind of music played over the PA system upset many — from concession stand service to traffic control surfaced in a survey mailed soon after last season ended.

Season ticketholders were mailed the survey, designed and conducted by John Wesley, GSU's Director of Marketing for athletics, because Wesley felt it was important to gauge

"The survey came out of my desire to find out who our customers were and how we could serve them better," Wesley said.

"The other reason I developed the survey was I just had an inkling that the fans, our customers, really had a lot of pent-up frustration and needed some way to vent that," he said. "And vent they did."

73.2 percent of season ticket-holders are also members of the Southern Boosters organization. Wendell Tompkins, an associate director of Southern Boosters, said the boosters currently number around 1,800.

2,000 season-ticket-holders were mailed surveys. 397 responded, a number Wesley said was good considering the length of the survey and the nature of mail surveys in general.

Dr. Jim Randall, a professor in the marketing department, and a group of students then did the number crunching.

Who are the GSU football season ticketholders?

1. Alumni — 59.8 percent.
2. Southern Boosters — 73.2 percent.
3. Live in Statesboro or Savannah — 64.3 percent.
4. White — 97.9 percent.
5. Males — 84 percent.
6. Married — 81.6 percent.
7. Affluent — 71.4 percent have annual household income of $50,000 or more.

GSU on right track

By Scott Garner
Senior Staff Writer

In college baseball, late April and May are just like the months of September and October are to major-leaguers. For the GSU Eagles, that means put up or shut up.

The Eagles, who started the season red-hot, have been plagued by hitting slumps, pitching slumps and injuries. Still, GSU has managed to keep a respectable second-place spot in the Southern Conference standings and will likely finish the regular season there.

With only a weekend series with Furman and the SoCon tournament left in conference play, the Eagles are making it their mission to play the best baseball possible down the stretch.

For Steve Wilson, the Eagles' dominating catcher, that means adjusting to pitchers who are adjusting to his .400-plus average and great power numbers.

"I'm seeing a lot more off-speed and breaking stuff away," Wilson said. "I'm having to stay in there and be patient and wait for the pitchers to bring one in on me."

GSU skipper Jack Stallings has also attempted to help Wilson out.

"We didn't move Cy Jones to the five spot [hitting behind Wilson] because he wasn't doing a good job as our leadoff man," said Stallings. "Instead, I did it to help Steve. Pitchers have been pitching around him and walking him. It's really a tribute to Cy: pitchers don't want to walk Wilson just to have to face Cy."

Another change for GSU is the use of Donnie Coe in the designated hitter slot. Coe has responded by hitting over .500. Coe's playing time has come at the expense of Mark Hamlin, but Hamlin remains a power threat as a pinch hitter.

Stallings has also had to deal with pitching problems. Jeff Keppen had been struggling until Tuesday's game with South Carolina, when he struck out nine batters.

"The performance by Keppen was heartwarming," said Stallings. "He's been struggling and it's good to see him break out like this and pitch well."

Stallings also has confidence in his hard-throwing relief pitcher Tod Lee, who was inserted in the ninth inning of the South Carolina loss.

"We like to make sure that Tod gets some time in, because three or four games off could make him rusty," said Stallings.

If Stallings can get his troops playing like they were at the beginning of the season, they have a chance to play ball well into May.

"We seem to be coming out of the slumps and staying in ball games, and this is the time of the year to do that," said Stallings.

After all, this is October for college ballplayers.

renew your annual commitment to Southern Boosters, what were the reasons?

Appendix F: What can we do to make you a Southern Booster again?

Appendix H: If you could change one thing about being at a GSU home football game, what would it be?

At press time Wednesday Appendix G was unavailable.

The answers reveal frustration with and a fair amount of hostility toward the administration and the coaching staff.

More than a few season ticketholders lashed out at students for not attending games, while others bashed rap music and the lack of a college atmosphere.

One respondent wanted a changing room for dads with infants. Others wanted fewer night games.

One particularly concise season ticketholder put it this way: "Piss poor season."

Tribe's Alomar aching to play

By Chuck Melvin
The Associated Press

WINTER HAVEN, Fla. — It's not officially baseball season until someone asks Sandy Alomar, "How's your (fill in the blank)?"

This year, it's the left knee, and the celebrated Cleveland catcher says it's coming along just fine.

The oft-injured Alomar banged up the knee last July, but he kept playing on it until he tore some more cartilage while sliding into second base during a game in Puerto Rico in November. He flew to Cleveland for arthroscopic surgery and didn't get back to squatting behind the plate until this month, although he played some more winter ball as a DH.

"It's not 100 percent because I haven't caught since seven months ago," Alomar said. "This is the first time I've squatted down, this spring training, since I had the surgery. I'm just taking it slowly. I'm getting the strength back, and I'm able to squat down. As long as I'm able to do that, I just have to take care of it so I'm able to start the season healthy."

Alomar can't deny that he's spent more than his share of time on the disabled list, but he doesn't like the suggestion that he's injury-prone. The record seems to bear him out, because except for the knee, which has become a recurring problem, his injuries border on the freaky.

Twice, he's been hit on the bare hand while reaching for pitches, splitting the webbing between his fingers. Once, he missed three months after needing surgery for a back problem that developed while he was driving from Ohio to Florida for spring training. He's had an inflamed rotator cuff, a strained hip flexor and a fractured finger.

Through it all, fans have loved him, both for his engaging personality and for the potential he showed as a rookie in 1990 after coming to the Indians from San Diego in the Joe Carter trade.

"HE FEELS HE OWES IT TO THE FANS TO COME BACK AND HAVE A GOOD CAREER."

— MIKE HARGROVE,
INDIANS MANAGER

He hit .290 that year, becoming a unanimous choice as AL Rookie of the Year and the first rookie catcher ever to start an All-Star game.

The reputation he built that year has followed him ever since. He was voted a starter in two more All-Star games in spite of the injuries that kept him from truly deserving those votes.

"If I heard him say it once I heard him say it a hundred times: He feels he owes it to the fans to come back and have a good career," manager Mike Hargrove said. "Sandy doesn't owe it to anybody but himself to do that. But that's Sandy's mentality. Sandy is a really good person and he's got a lot of talent. You like to see people like that do well."

Last year, it was no coincidence that the Indians had their best season since the 1950s at the same time as Alomar had his healthiest season since 1990. He played in 80 games, hit .288, put together a career-best 14-game hitting streak and threw out 35 percent of the runners attempting to steal on him.

"That was a big year for him," Hargrove said. "It was critical for him to have that kind of year for his own peace of mind."

Alomar still considers his most important function to be defense, including his handling of the pitching staff. At that, he's one of the best.

Hargrove, meanwhile, has him hitting last in the Cleveland lineup, mostly because the Indians are loaded with good hitters but partly to keep Alomar from pressing. Alomar doesn't seem to mind.

"When you have a guy hitting ninth who can hit home runs and hit around .280, that's going to help the ballclub a lot," Alomar said. "If you have a guy hitting in front of Kenny Lofton getting on base, it's going to help Kenny produce, and you're going to have a leadoff hitter who's going to give you a lot of RBIs, too. This club is very powerful and hits for average and runs. I want to be part of that."

Morphins bag first win ever

By Jeff Whitten
Sports Editor

The losing streak from hell is over.

The Mighty Morphin Softball Rangers, an independent B-league intramural team, ended their self-described two-year losing streak Tuesday night by beating fellow B-league independent Fully Loaded.

This according to Michael Burton, a Morphin co-captain and outfielder. Burton contacted The George-Anne by telephone late Tuesday evening.

"We didn't win a game last year," he said. "We were 0-6. Then we started out this season 0-1, which makes it a two year streak."

"We're 1-1 this season, that's .500."

Butler said this season's team has most of the same players from last year's 0-6 team.

"We're not that bad," he said. B league teams are comprised of what Burton described as most people.

"The A league has top notch people, the C league is people who just want to goof off," he said. "They play with their outfield in."

"He was really awesome tonight, making diving catches," Burton said.

The Mighty Morphin Softball Rangers co-captain wasn't sure who his team's next opponent was, but was certain the next game would be played Wednesday at 9 p.m.

"Whoever it is, I figure we'll beat them," Burton said.

"We're on a roll. We have to win three games to make the playoffs and we're on a pace to do it."

"Ahh, it feels like an awakening. It's like your first time," he said. "You're nervous. You go through it, you get a certain glow. It's orgasmic."

Efforts by The George-Anne to reach co-captain Scott Haymen, a first baseman, were unsuccessful.

Players uncertain of baseball's future

By Jim Cour
The Associated Press

PEORIA, Ariz. — Ken Griffey Jr. fretted impatiently during his forced vacation and dreamed of a day when he would play in the World Series.

Randy Johnson, who may be headed for a major-market team if the Seattle Mariners decide they can't afford to keep him, finally got a chance to throw his 98 mph fastball again. He was dismayed the gap widened even more deeply between his sport's haves and have nots.

Jay Buhner, he of the bald head and goatee, became a rich man and then was stunned to see what happened to the players after the end of baseball's 7 1/2-month strike.

The Mariners' players will never forget the ordeal they went through. Now, they're facing new, more difficult times and an uncertain future.

"I think that this has showed everybody, whether you're a player or an owner, that nobody's above this game," Griffey said.

The players held their ground during the 232-day strike that cost a staggering $750 million. The owners lost the money. They didn't get their salary cap and they didn't beat the players. Or did they?

Some small-market clubs have said they're only going to spend so much money and they won't go over their player budgets no matter what. The pendulum has definitely swung in favor of the owners, Buhner said.

"Basically the teams have the players over a barrel now," Buhner said. "I don't know whether I'd call it collusion or what I'd consider it, but there's definitely been a change in the game. Even some of your front-line guys have had to take major pay cuts."

Johnson, one of baseball's premier pitchers, will be gobbled up in less time than it takes for him were a lot of free agents in Homestead, Fla., who were as good as Bosio and Martinez. More importantly for the owners, they were cheaper.

"Obviously, the stronger clubs have gotten stronger and the weaker clubs have gotten weaker by getting rid of some of their players who were making a lot of money," Johnson said.

Griffey ($7 million), Johnson ($4.15 million), Bosio ($4 million), Buhner ($3.6 million) and Martinez (3.3 million) are the five highest-paid Mariners players this season.

That's more than $22 million for a team that wants to have a $30 million payroll this season. The players have their haves and have nots, too.

Because the Mariners didn't get a salary cap to compete with the New York Yankees and the Toronto Blue Jays in the battle to keep and attract players, they could lose Griffey.

Perhaps the best player in baseball at 25, Griffey may opt to become a free agent after his contract runs out following the 1996 season if the Mariners don't show him they can win in the next two seasons.

The five-time All-Star center fielder has given the Mariners an ultimatum.

"It depends a whole lot on whether we win or lose," Griffey said. "I'm not here to make friends. I'm here to win."

During the strike that began Aug. 12, Buhner was tempted to go as a free agent to Baltimore.

Oriole rookie slugger pounds ball

By David Ginsburg
The Associated Press

CLEARWATER, Fla. — Conversation around the batting cage stops when Sherman Obando steps to the plate.

The strapping Baltimore Orioles' outfielder has a habit of launching baseballs into oblivion when he gets his bat flush on one of those fat batting practice pitches. He deposited several into a row of palm trees beyond the left-field wall at Jack Murphy Stadium on Sunday.

"Foul ball!" teammate Jack Voigt yelled after one of the blasts, a vain attempt to minimize the impressive drive that was no less than 25 feet within the foul pole.

Obando usually uses no more than a flick of the wrist during BP. Imagine if he tried to put all of his 6-foot-4, 215-pound frame into a swing — just to see how far the ball would go.

"It would break my concentration. That's not something I want to accomplish," he said. "I try to hit to all fields."

"I know I can hit the ball hard. But if I want to watch the home runs, I will watch it on TV."

Obando had the opportunity to do just that last Thursday, as his game-winning homer in the 10th inning against Texas was featured at the top of ESPN's nightly SportsCenter show.

Obando would like to make a habit of hits like that. First of all, though, he's got to make to the Orioles' 28-man squad.

Hitting isn't a problem. Obando led the International League last season in slugging percentage (.600) and doubles (35) while finishing second with a .330 batting average. He had 20 homers and 69 RBIs despite having his season end in mid-August after he broke a bone fouling a pitch off his leg.

Seems that even his foul balls are hit hard.

Baltimore manager Phil Regan loves Obando's bat. But the Orioles already have one full-time designated hitter, Harold Baines, so Obando may need to prove that he is not a liability in the outfield in order to secure a spot on the team.

"Hitting I can control and adjust," Obando said. "Experience is important in playing the outfield, and I don't have that. But I am trying."

Obando is a strapping specimen who has the least body fat on the team.

The Orioles plucked him from the New York Yankees in the Rule V draft two years ago, then kept him on the 25-man roster as required.

Obando, who had never played above the Class AA level, hit .272 in just 31 games in his debut with the Orioles in 1993. Baltimore sent the Panama native to the minors last season for more seasoning, and he now claims to be ready to make a return trip to Baltimore.

"I'm working hard, and so far things are working out the right way," he said. "Hopefully I'll make this team and help them to the World Series. Those are my only goals right now."

Author exiled for asserting women's rights

The Associated Press

DHAKA, Bangladesh— The trial of feminist author Taslima Nasrin for allegedly blaspheming Islam was postponed on Saturday by a month.

A Dhaka magistrate accepted her attorney's plea that there was no proper government sanction to proceed with the case.

"A junior official who gave the approval for the trial was not authorized to do so," said Kamal Hussain, Ms. Nasrin's attorney.

Ms. Nasrin is living in a self-imposed exile in Sweden since last August to escape death threats from Muslim fundamentalists who offered a reward of dlsr 5,000 to anyone who kills her.

The court says her presence is not required during the trial which may last several months. If found guilty, Ms. Nasrin could be jailed for up to two years.

Abul Kashem Mohammad Kamaluddin, Dhaka's additional chief metropolitan magistrate, adjourned the trial until May 17 when the prosecution counsel failed to produce documents authorizing her trial.

Hussain asked the court to drop the blasphemy charge against Ms. Nasrin because an interview with an Indian newspaper, which formed the basis of her trial, took place outside the country.

Muslim radicals were outraged by her reported demand that the Koran, the Muslim holy book, be revised to give more rights to women in this male-dominated society.

"A newspaper report can't be the basis of trying an eminent author. She has denied having ever made that suggestion and the government has failed to verify the facts of the case through investigation in the country where the offense allegedly took place," her counsel said.

Aaron Tippin performs Saturday

Special photo

Tippin will be joined by The Positions and Kinchafoonie Cowboys.

Special to the George-Anne

Tickets are still left for the second annual Musicfest '95. Approximately 700 tickets have been sold by the ticket office on the GSU campus.

This is expected to be a big event for GSU. The Kinchafoonie Cowboys are the opening act for the star of Musicfest Aaron Tippin and will take the stage at 5:30 p.m.

The Cowboys have opened for country greats like John Anderson, Trisha Yearwood, Billy Ray Cyrus, Doug Supernaw and Tracy Lawrence. Brad Hallford, the lead guitarist for the group, said these opportunities have provided the group with valuable experience and increased CD sales. Their first release entitled "Sowega" sold over 2,200 copies. Hallford said that negotiations are under way with a major label for future recordings.

Aaron Tippin will take the stage at 7:30 p.m. The 36-year-old is famous for such songs as Blue Angel and Working Man's Ph.D., and his current album,

Lookin' Back at Myself, has achieved platinum status.

Despite his success, Tippin has remained a down-to-earth country boy who remembers his roots on the family farm. He is no stranger to heavy equipment and hard work. In fact, Tippin is a "machine freak" and "high tech redneck." He even runs his own tractor on his farm 60 miles outside Nashville, where he is also building a home.

Tickets for the concert can be purchased at the GSU Ticket office or Walker Pharmacy at 681-0123 or 1-800-351-7469 with a small service charge added. Reserved seats are $12, general admission is $10 and GSU student tickets are $8.50 with a student I.D.

VIP packages are available for $50 each. The package includes reserved seating in the Eagle Club section of Paulson Stadium, preferred parking, a post-concert party with Tippin and the chance to win door prizes. For more information, contact the Chamber of Commerce at 764-6111.

Movie features GSU student and war veteran

By Erika Anderson
Staff Writer

GSU student Rodney Abercrombie will get to have something most of us would like to have -- his name on the big screen.

"73 Easting," a new movie by Universal Studios, scheduled for summer 1996 release, will tell the story of the 2nd Army Cavalry Regiment of Desert Storm. Abercrombie was a member of that regiment.

"A battle map has lines, and each line has a number," Abercrombie said, "73 is where we fought a major battle."

The battle of 73 Easting was perhaps the biggest battle of Desert Storm, Abercrombie said. It was the only battle that Iraq made a major effort to fight.

"We fought the Republican Guard, which is the elite fighting force of Iraq," Abercrombie said, "Iraq actually tried to fight back."

Abercrombie, a 29-year-old psychology major, served in the 2nd ACR as a tank gunner, as well as assistant tank commander. The tank that Abercrombie was controlling was the first tank to emerge on the battlefield.

"My commander was controlling the squadron so I had to control the tank," he said.

Abercrombie was awarded a decoration for valor for saving the lives of Iraqi soldiers who had surrendered.

"From a distance, we didn't know they were surrendering," Abercrombie said. "I jumped off the tank with bullets still flying to save them. I had Iraqi soldiers kissing me on the cheek and calling me a hero. I know that will be one scene in the movie."

The movie will be directed by John McTiernan, director of movies such as "Terminator," "Hunt for Red October" and "Die Hard 3." It will be produced by Joseph Veccio, who produced the Sylvester Stallone movie, "Oscar."

Special Photo

GSU student Rodney Abercrombie got to meet former Chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff Colin Powell while in Iraq.

Abercrombie's character will be a co-star and will appear early in the movie.

"The script is 200 pages long," Abercrombie said, "My character appears on page 38, which is about 20 minutes into the movie."

Abercrombie also said that he should get between $10-20,000 for the use of his name in the movie.

"As far as my getting paid for using my name in the movie, I'm just excited about my name being in the movie," he said.

Abercrombie's biggest hope is that the movie will bring out the emotions of the soldiers.

"You'd be surprised to see the grown men cry at Christmas midnight mass," he said. "So many people don't realize the emotions that the soldiers go through. First there is a fear of the unknown, then a don't care feeling, and finally a sad feeling."

Abercrombie said that although war is a harsh experience, he has many "good memories" of Desert Storm.

As a transfer student from California, Abercrombie is an officer in the ROTC program and is in his 3rd quarter at GSU.

"I've been out of Georgia since 1986," he said. "It's been a big difference coming back here."

As far as the movie is concerned, Abercrombie said that he is very excited about the fact that his name is "going down in history on the big screen."

"Someday," he said, "my grandchildren are going to say, 'Hey that's my grandpa.'"

Saturday night:

Skin Job at Blind Willie's

Paul Ferlita Guest Columnist

This week, I have been chosen to tell you about this hot bed of excitement that we call Statesboro, Ga.

Last week was pretty slow due to the holiday, but Blind Willie's was packed as expected for Floyd's Funk Revival.

This week finds Blind Willie's completely booked yet again. The Brooks Brothers play tonight (see below). Fighting Gravity is scheduled for Friday night. On Saturday, Skin Job comes back to Statesboro. They're a heavy sounding band from Tampa; they should rock the house down.

If your not into the rock sound, on Friday the Country Club is holding their Battle of the Bands. The winner of this contest will open up for the Country Hunk, Aaron Tippin.

This one is a tough call on what will attract the most people. My suggestion is to simply support local music and go to a show, not to a party.

Speaking of local music, I was recently assured that the Hat Party will occur this year. Check here for more details about that little Statesboro gem.

Review: The Brothers Brooks

Tim and Gregg Brooks have been building a cult-like following throughout the middle Georgia area. This Thursday they bring their "Southern Fried Rock&Roll" to Blind Willie's. They are touring in support of their self-titled debut album. The album is a diverse collection of sound blending soul and funk with good old fashioned southern rock&roll.

While listening to The Brothers Brooks, a person can definitely feel an Allmanesque vibe; however, the Allman Brothers are not their only influences. Tim and Gregg also throw in a touch of The Black Crowes as well as a dash of Muddy Waters. While making their musical stew, the Brothers also added a lot of their own spice to liven up the mix, and they succeed with flying and swirling colors.

Thursday night should be a great show. Blind Willie's should fill up quick, so get there early. Don't forget to bring your Birkenstocks.

'Rob Roy' not all bad

By Eric Bray
Staff Writer

Lately there have been whispers of award-winning potential at next year's Oscars for "Rob Roy," the new film set in twelfth-century Scotland. Considering the Oscar's degeneration in its quality of choices, this may be true.

It seems nowadays all you have to do to be a nominee is make a dry, grandiose and melodramatic film with over two hours of running time. "Rob Roy" certainly fits the bill, though it's not all bad.

One thing it does offer is an all-star cast. Liam Neeson ("Schindler's List," "Darkman") is cast as Robert Roy McGregor, which is commendable considering Sean Connery would be the most expected lead in a Scottish setting.

Jessica Lange ("Cape Fear") stars as his wife, a character made inconsistent by the fact that at times she is strong and tough but at others she goes all weepy as soon as Liam spouts, "Yer dear t' me, Lassie."

John Hurt (the guy from "Alien" out of whose chest the creature burst) plays a corrupt nobleman, and Tim Roth ("Reservoir Dogs," "Pulp Fiction") portrays his English lacky.

Roth is despicably evil in his role, though quite engaging in frills and a powder wig. His performance is typically exceptional, but the character is loathsome to the point that he lacks credibility.

Eric Stolz ("Pulp Fiction," "Little Women") makes his appearance as Neeson's do-nothing flunky. His name is awfully high in the credits to be playing a role in which the guy says very little until the middle of the movie where he is cut down unexpectedly.

Overall, the plot is disappointing. Ultimately it boils down to a scandal in which 1,000 pounds, loaned to Rob Roy by Hurt's character, is stolen by Roth. McGregor's lack of nobility causes trouble for him as he tries to overcome the oppressive system ruling the land.

The story drags in many places. It shouldn't take two and a half hours for such a simple plot to unwind. Furthermore, melodrama takes the place of emotion until much too late in the film when Roth rapes Lange.

The most disappointing feature of all is the plot's lack of historic significance. The film could have taken place in a thousand other time periods or places.

Really, the Scottish setting just provides generic Highland wardrobes and beautiful scenery. The landscapes are enchanting but this is not appealing enough to tide you over through the full length of the film.

This backdrop is accompanied by a nice musical score by Carter Burwell ("Barton Fink," "Miller's Crossing"). His direction is less melodramatic than the conduction of those in other films, such as "The Hudsucker Proxy."

The film's main flaw is not so much attributable to poor acting as it is to the characterization to which the actors are put. The story is hoaky at times and the aspect of the "honor-bound, rugged-yet-sensitive hero" is laid on a little thick.

The movie is not all that bad, it just seems like they were trying to win an award when they made the film instead of concentrating on genuine quality.

Persistence pays off

The Associated Press

ATLANTA — Jim Grimsley has a knack for beating the odds.

The 39-year-old Grimsley's first novel, "Winter Birds," went unpublished for years.

After coming out in German, the book found an American publisher, has won several awards and is in its third printing.

Grimsley, well-known in Atlanta as a playwright, is also a hemophiliac who was diagnosed as HIV-positive in 1984 but has not contracted AIDS.

His novel is autobiographical.

It tells the story of a family hiding under a run-down house from a drunken father and fleeing in the middle of the night to seek shelter with neighbors.

Beginning 20 years ago while he was a student at the University of North Carolina, Grimsley spent 10 years working on the novel, which is written in the second person and centers on an 8-year-old boy with hemophilia.

Publishers expressed admiration for Grimsley's writing but rejected the book as too gloomy, but Grimsley persisted.

PJ Harvey To Bring You My Love (Island)

Polly Jean Harvey is one of the most exciting British pop-rock women to ever walk the face of this fine planet. She first appeared on the music scene in 1991. In the short amount of time that PJ has been recording, she has already won awards such as, "Best Songwriter" and "Best New Female Artist," both from "Rolling Stone," she has also received extensive recognition from "The Village Voice" and the New York Times.

Polly's newest album, "To Bring You My Love," is her best work to date. Her song writing skills are exceptional on this album. PJ managed to write 10 superb songs and record them all back to back. At a time writing one good song is a major task, Polly Jean shows the world how it is done.

There is truly not one bad song on this album. Sadly though, the worst song on the record is the only one that commercial radio stations care to play. If you ever watch MTV, then you have most likely seen "Down By the Water." It's a great song; however, it does not stand up to "Send His Love to Me." This is clearly the best written and best sounding song on the album.

Another factor causing this album to be so great, is the paring up of PJ and Flood. Flood assisted Polly during the production of "To Bring You My Love." Flood is probably best known for his work with both U2 and Nine Inch Nails. On this new album, he proved that he is still the best producer in the business. Unlike Steve Albini, who directed Rid Of Me, Flood made this album sound the best that it possibly could.

Lastly, if you're still not sold on how great of an album this is, I need only say one thing, her name is PJ.

Axiom Ambient Lost In Translation

This album is a little dated, but the public needs to hear it. Lost in Translation is a Two CD compilation that was released by Axiom Records. Both disks only contain four tracks each, but all eight are the best techno to ever come out of Axiom. Each track contains three to four songs, each displaying the mood of the track. The tracks also have really neat names like Eternal Drift and Dharmapala.

In a day and age when "Raves" are cool, ambiance holds a warm place in my heart. While everyone else is trying to create music that is 400-beats per minute, the bands on the Axiom label are creating moods.

The compilation features the works of The Orb, Tetsu Inoue, Pharoah Sanders, and even Funkadelic. Each of which have their own sound, but have been blended together in this fine project.

Lost in Translation is one of those albums that a person should not be without.

'Contract with America' now printed on underwear

By Larry Margasak
The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — In Washington's political culture, secret documents are leaked and become public. Now, two artists have found a way to take the most public document, the GOP "Contract With America," and make it private.

They've created Contract With America underpants for men and women.

The 10 main points of the GOP's 1994 campaign agenda are printed on the back of the cotton briefs. On the front: a handmade, silk-screened picture of House Speaker Newt Gingrich, R-Ga.

Republicans are allowed to wear the briefs, but the artists were not trying to be complimentary.

"There is a personal threat here to our personal lives and liberties, to reproductive rights and sexual orientation," said

Marshall Reese, 39, who created the underwear with fellow artist Nora Ligorano. "So we thought, let's make a really ridiculous, absurd product."

"We feel they're trying to censor us, in a way," said Ligorano, 38. "The contract is a very serious issue. You sit on the contract. It is a metaphor."

Reese and Ligorano, both of Brooklyn, N.Y., had 120 pair silk-screened and enclosed a card numbering each one. Ten pair, run off as tests before the signed copies, were sent to selected politicians, including Gingrich, Senate Majority Leader Bob Dole, R-Kan., and President Clinton.

Gingrich-led Republicans contend that most Americans support the contract and that Democrats are too liberal and out of touch with constituents.

Issues cited by Ligorano and Reese, such as abortion and gay rights, were kept out of the contract but could be debated later this year.

Ligorano and Reese displayed the underwear at a New York gallery in late March and early April, in an exhibit entitled "Pillars of the Clean Order."

Dirty clothes were piled in three hampers with white pillars rising from them. On top of the pillars were books by well-known conservatives.

On clotheslines above the pillars and laundry hung the underwear.

The brochure accompanying the exhibit, at the Center for Book Arts in Manhattan, said the artists "call into question the new Republican ideology."

What laundry list of change does this Republican vision bring to bear?

"The underwear hanging above the hampers of dirty laundry suggests that the new Republican philosophy fantasizes a simplistic and sanitized version of America. ..."

Language not wanted in class

The Associated Press

AUGUSTA, Ga. — Some Richmond County parents and educators are trying to keep whole language out of the classroom say the teaching philosophy is not as effective as more traditional textbook lessons.

County school officials are expected to vote this week on the future of whole language, which can be best described as teaching children how to read and write by integrating word and sound recognition with activities.

Many teachers also blend the whole language concept with more traditional textbook lessons.

The concept has been challenged over the past few months, with about 100 parents and teachers debating its merits in a series of forums.

Some say it's only a vocal few who are challenging the approach and school officials are catering to them. Critics of whole language contend the concern is valid, regardless of how many people show up at meetings.

"The people that were at the forums, regardless of the repeats, each stood for parents who could not attend," said Andy Cheek, president of the Rollins Elementary School PTA and whole language critic.

He said while many parents are very concerned about their children's education, a significant number don't express and interest at all.

"We don't need to tailor our programs to those who are not concerned — the lowest common denominator."

Some educators say many parents aren't completely clear about what exactly whole language is, but that isn't a problem as long as children are learning.

"Believe it or not, I think most of the people I've talked to who've expressed opinions really feel like they don't know enough about it," said Sue Burnmeister, president-elect of the Richmond County Council of PTA.

Teachers may also criticize the method, but often blend the approach into their lesson.

Former hostage is suing government

The Associated Press

ATLANTA — Former Middle East hostage Terry Anderson, who is suing the federal government for failing to release documents on his seven-year captivity, told journalists Friday they need to fight hard for open government.

Anderson, who was taken hostage in Lebanon in 1985 while a correspondent for The Associated Press, said it is the media's job to needle government officials into complying with the Freedom of Information Act.

"That's the major threat to it, that we get complacent," Anderson told about 180 people at a Georgia First Amendment Foundation luncheon. "It's a hard fight. It's got to be continual. It's got to be loud."

Anderson is seeking to force the CIA, FBI and other agencies to release records detailing U.S. efforts to free him over the years. Anderson sued after the agencies responded to his FOI requests by sending newspaper articles and boxes of blank documents.

"I'm not angry at the government. I'm not angry any more than you get angry at a puppy for peeing on the carpet," Anderson said.

"But like a puppy, they need to be trained. You've got to rub their noses in it."

Anderson said he may return to the Middle East next year for the first time since his hostage ordeal — if his wife gives him the OK.

"I don't think there are any long-lasting negative effects from those seven years," Anderson said as he jokingly jerked his head backwards in a fake twitch.

on Register Road," Lynch said. "The building will finally be bid out by July or September. The construction should take roughly 14 to 18 months."

The new facility

"We have one of the most prestigious designers (Hastings-Chivetta) working on it," Lynch said. "They are known worldwide, and they specialize in designing recreation centers."

Although the facility will not be open 24 hours, the hours it does operate will be contingent on student demand.

"If the students want it opened at 6 a.m., then we'll open at 6 a.m.," Lynch said. "We will let other people use it, but the governing board will be predominately made up of students."

Non-student use

"The students will be make the plans as to where, when, and who can use it. It's a $7 million building so we don't want to let it be vacant," Lynch said.

Faculty and staff who want to use the facility will have to pay an amount similar to that of the students.

"In that situation (faculty and staff using the new building), the academic affairs vice president will give a lump sum of money based on the number of faculty and staff (to cover all of the faculty and staff)," Lynch said.

Delays

"It (the project) is finally back on campus. It's (the proposal) has been kicked around (in Atlanta with the Board of Regents), and there have been a lot of delays," Lynch said. "We were told by the time the students who were freshman in 1990 were seniors, they would be in the building."

According to Lynch, the process reveals a typical bureaucracy because the school honestly believed the deadlines that we were told.

"As they say, the best-laid plans don't always work out," Lynch said. "Dealing with deadlines, you learn they are passed out like popcorn."

Because of the many delays, the project could still be on the backburner with the Board of Regents, but Lynch said he has gotten full support on the facility from the administration.

"Dr. Nolen has been one of the strongest supporters," Lynch said. "Without his leadership we would still be in the talking stage. President Henry has also been very supportive."

Fields

Approximately $2 million of the $9.3 million will be used for the building of several athletic fields adjacent to the new building.

"If the good Lord's willing and the creeks don't rise, the fields (that will be located adjacent to Register Road) should be completed by or during fall," Lynch said.

There will be four new softball fields that will have 350 foot fences. These would be bigger fields than the current ones in the sports complex.

CRI facility at UGA

Currently, the University of Georgia is building a new recreation facility for the students.

"UGA is going to have a 400,000 square-foot facility, but they are going to have all their eggs in a basket (by locating all of the campus recreation facilities within the building)," Lynch said. "We wanted to have a satellite system. The way campus will be laid out, we will have four different recreation sites (Hanner, physical fitness weight extension area, sports complex, and the new facility)."

gram," Herth said. "The graduate program is recognized nationwide because of the nurse practitioner program. The undergraduate program is also recognized nationwide for its innovative curriculum."

sional delegation includes six members born elsewhere, five of them Republicans. Two of them, House Speaker Newt Gingrich and Rep. John Linder, are from Pennsylvania, while two other Republicans, Sen. Paul Coverdell and Rep. Bob Barr, were born in Iowa.

Rep. Jack Kingston was born in Texas, while one Democrat, Rep. John Lewis, is from Alabama.

The increase in officeholders with out-of-state origins extends to the Legislature and is tied to the influx of large numbers of whites from other states to suburban Atlanta, which is heavily Republican.

Lobbyists lure lawmakers with gifts

By Dick Pettys

The Associated Press

ATLANTA — Lobbyists curried legislators' favor with boxes of cigars, racing tickets and the usual wining and dining in March, the last month of the 1995 session, reports showed.

Total lobbyist spending for the month was just $65,974, lowest of the 1995 legislative session but enough to push overall spending for the session to $432,103—$56,000 more than in 1994.

House Speaker Tom Murphy, D-Bremen, who has a fondness for chewing on unlit cigars, got a $41 box of stogies from the Georgia Mining Association, $34 worth of cigars from the Atlanta Board of Education and a $125 box from the union that represents state employees.

"They weren't dime-store cigars," David Rolf, lobbyist for the Georgia State Employees Union, acknowledged. But he said they weren't the most expensive, either. "It was a large quantity of nice cigars."

He said it was a thank-you gift to Murphy for helping pass a bill simplifying grievance procedures for state employees.

Five legislators got tickets to an Atlanta auto race and free meals at the event from Texaco.

Rep. Vinson Wall, R-Lawrenceville, said he asked for his two tickets.

"I'm a ... (racing) fan and Texaco has a car that they run. I just asked if they had a couple tickets I could use and they did," Wall said.

Rep. Lynn Westmoreland, R-Tyrone, said Texaco offered him the two tickets he got.

"They asked me if I liked racing ... (so) I went and enjoyed it very much," Westmoreland said.

Also given tickets were Reps. Billy McKinney, D-Atlanta, Vernon Jones, D-Decatur, and Charles Bannister, R-Lilburn. Bannister got four tickets and lunch passes worth $280; the others got two tickets and lunch passes worth $140.

A few legislators found time for golf as the session was winding down. The lobbyist for the Independent Insurance Agents of Georgia picked up the golfing tab for Reps. Robin Williams, R-Augusta, Joey Brush, R-Applying, and Ben Harbin, R-Augusta.

Williams and Rep. Jimmy Benefield, D-Jonesboro, also were treated to a round of golf by the lobbyist for Norfolk Southern Railroad.

The $100 tab for Rep. Hanson Carter, D-Nashville, to go quail hunting was picked up by the Georgia Mining Association.

The biggest spender for March, at $3,966, was the Georgia Poultry Federation, which rushed in to feed lawmakers when their work ran through lunch and sometimes dinner. The group spent $1,144 on the last day of the session providing barbecued chicken sandwiches.

Rep. Mike Evans, R-Cumming, topped the list of legislators receiving gifts from lobbyists in March, at $491. That included $435 in air fare to Washington after the session, paid for by the Georgia Association of Petroleum Retailers.

Evans said the trip allowed him to testify before a Congressional subcommittee to argue against centralized auto emissions testing, which the Association of Petroleum Retailers also opposes.

The early bird will not get his choice of schools

The Associated Press

ATHENS, Ga. — Clarke County school officials said Thursday that parents who come out early this weekend hoping to be first in line to choose their children's schools will be wasting their time.

Some parents are planning to camp out at one of the county's two high schools where officials will start taking applications for school choice Saturday morning, and parents have been asking that the school gates be opened early to allow them to get in line, Jimmy Morris, a spokesman for the county school system said Thursday.

But he said being early will make no difference.

"We're just taking applications," Morris said. "That's what some parents don't understand. They think they'll walk out of the school on Saturday knowing where their child is going to school."

Denise Horton, who does not plan to camp out, said she probably will fill out the application for her 9-year-old daughter Rachel next week. Mrs. Horton said she wants Rachel to stay in Barnett Shoals Elementary School, where she is in the third grade.

Mrs. Horton said she initially opposed the choice plan, but her main concern now is that the county is moving too fast and making too many changes.

"I don't think there's any way for parents to make sound, well thought-out decisions for the schools they can use," she said.

Clarke County is the first school system in Georgia to offer parents a choice since desegregation in the 1960s. Mandatory zone lines currently determine which schools students attend.

Scott Collins, who has three daughters in public school, was on the committee that drew up the controlled choice proposal in January. He said the committee rejected rezoning because it would have created odd-shaped districts.

"That plan was going to cause wholesale disruption," he said.

The county's plan is expected to satisfy a Justice Department deadline to end the disproportionate busing of about 500 black children in the 11,000-student district.

Fewer southern natives are representing Georgia

The Associated Press

ATLANTA — The Georgia roots many Democrats in the state like to talk about are much less valuable politically than they used to be, a political analyst says.

"Back in the '50s it would have been a novelty, and probably a political liability in most parts of the state" for a non-native to seek political office, said Emory University political science professor Merle Black.

"But what's happening is the native white population, which used to hold all the political offices, is getting smaller in the South."
