Georgia Southern University Police Department Receives State Certification

The Georgia Southern University Police Department has received again state certification status from the Georgia Association of Chiefs of Police, representing the completion of a rigorous, multi-step process that recognizes the Department as one of the top law enforcement agencies in the state.

Of more than 500 agencies in the state, approximately 100 are certified and among those, only four are universities. Additionally, the Georgia Southern University Police Department is the only law enforcement agency in the area certified by the Association. The state certification program is a voluntary program that certifies that departments operate under specific professional standards.

"It is a great honor for our University's Police Department to receive this certification, and an even greater honor to be one of only four universities in the state to have received this status," said Georgia Southern University President Brooks A. Keel, Ph.D. "Our public safety officials and staff go the extra mile to ensure our campus is safe, which is important for our community, students and parents."

To become certified, participating agencies must conduct a thorough self-analysis to determine how existing operations can be adapted to meet the Association's strict certification standards. When the procedures are in place, a team of trained assessors verifies that applicable standards have been successfully implemented. A joint executive committee then determines if all requirements for certification have been met.

"I couldn't be more proud of the men and women of the University Police Department," said Michael J. Russell, Chief of Police at Georgia Southern University. "They are true professionals and this is a huge accomplishment for them. They work hard every day to make the campus safe and secure, and this is a well deserved honor."

Georgia Southern's Police Department was initially certified in October 2010 after nearly a year of setting procedures, writing policies and conducting training. The certification lasts for three years and in October 2013, the Department received another on-site assessment that looked at how the Department met each of the approximately 100 standards set by the Joint Commission for all agencies statewide, and was awarded re-certification.

A team of six Georgia Southern University students earned three awards on Friday, March 7 during the fifth annual FastPitch Competition in Savannah, an event created to help local entrepreneurs start new ventures and grow existing ones.

Organized by Georgia Southern University, The Creative Coast and the Advanced Technology Development Center (ATDC) Georgia Tech Savannah, the competition allowed entrepreneurs to pitch a three-minute presentation to local community and academic leaders, experienced investors, potential partners and members of the business community. Teams competed in three categories: Student Entrepreneurs, Early Stage Entrepreneurs and Local/Existing Entrepreneurs. Participants were judged on the criteria, impact, implementation, presentation, structure and delivery of the pitch.

Jacob Alves, Jonathan Chambers, Troy Cox, Andres Florido, Adrian Marshall and Francis Okechukwu make up the team, "Go Local," named for an innovative mobile app that connects users to local events and venues. The team won first place in the Student Entrepreneur category, the Grand Prize "Overall Winner" award in the Final Pitch category and the Audience Choice Award. In addition, the team received $2,500 in seed money to aid their start-up company and costs.

"Go Local" was also offered a one year free membership with Georgia Southern University's City Campus Virtual Business Incubator, a tool to support the start-up company with equipment usage, consulting and access to banks and investors.

"We're very humbled and honored to be a part of this experience, especially in the student category where we're just getting started," said Jonathan Chambers, co-founder of "Go Local" and graduate student. "We really learned quite a bit about what it takes to take an idea from conception to a profit-making company. It's been an awesome ride. Our team has jived so well together, and we're going to try to make this happen."

Originally formed during Georgia Southern University's 3 Day Startup (3DS) Program in February, the "Go Local" team won that event, which secured their application acceptance in the FastPitch competition.

Dominique Halaby, director of the Bureau of Business Research and Economic Development, says, "With continued dedication and support, we will keep building an ecosystem and culture where innovation is rewarded, entrepreneurship is celebrated and jobs are created."
