Carjacking suspect enters guilty plea, faces 45 years

The Associated Press

ATLANTA — An Atlanta man charged with a series of carjackings that involved the killing of a Morehouse College student pled guilty to federal arms and carjacking charges.

Jason Byron Berry, 22, pled guilty to three weapons charges and one count of conspiracy to commit a series of carjackings.

He faces a mandatory sentence of 45 years, without parole, on the weapons charges, with up to five more years on the conspiracy count, according to the U.S. Department of Justice.

An accomplice, Terry Charles Williams, pled guilty to one count of conspiracy and one weapons charge.

Sentencing for both men is scheduled for Jan. 4, before U.S. District Judge Marvin H. Shoob.

Berry and Williams' crime spree began Nov. 8 near Santee, S.C. where officials say the two kidnapped a woman and her infant son, tied her up and took her car.

Oronde K. Allie, a Morehouse student, was their second victim on Nov. 20.

The 20-year-old was shot as he tried to escape, according to the Justice Department.

The next day, Berry used Allie's Mercury Tracer to carjack a Mazda driven by Keisha Danelle Lloyd, a Clark Atlanta University student.

Cobb County police said Berry drove Lloyd to a remote location in Cobb County, tied her to a tree and drove away in her car.

Berry, who had no prior felony convictions, was identified through fingerprints lifted off of the Mazda.

Faculty questions guide

By Ashley Hunt
News Editor

Student government's Student Guide to Faculty has raised many concerns among the GSU faculty.

Some faculty members said they believe students will not be given useful information to help them in their classes.

"I think that when we (faculty) have the opportunity to communicate, the more we can share, the better it will be," said Hal Fulmer, a communications arts professor and member of the Faculty Senate.

SGA's guide includes grade distributions such as the percentage of students who made an A,B,C,D or F in their class.

But Fulmer said he thinks this is not enough information to help the student.

"Without knowing the context that these grades were given, it is not as useful for the student," Fulmer said.

Fulmer said the guide doesn't tell students what kind of reading is required, how many tests a teacher gives, the amount of term papers (if there are any) and other information related to the class.

"It doesn't say how the teachers approach the class," he said. "Some teachers have different methods."

He also said a student's performance in a class will be different for each classification. A class that is strictly for upperclassmen will most likely require more than other freshman classes.

However, Fulmer said he does think the guide can help students with enough information.

"With more information, the better it will be and also to involve the faculty in the process," he said.

SGA president Lee Hyer said that he understands the faculty concern.

He also said that he would like to have more information in the guide such as a universal questionnaire that would include students comments about classes and professors.

As a part of the guide, SGA is asking teachers to reserve a course syllabus at the library.

"We are asking that professors make available a copy of the course syllabus at the library that students could go and look up," he said.

Hyer said the SGA guide is modeled after one at Georgia Tech. This guide published grade distributions along with students' comments about the professor as well as the universal questionnaire.

Hyer said that this guide will be a "pilot issue" and that if students and faculty want more, SGA "will listen to their concerns" and make needed changes.

In a previous article about the student guide published in The George-Anne, it was reported that the guide was a fundraiser.

However, according to SGA's Vice President for Academic Affairs Gavin Shook, the guide was not a fundraiser.

"The guide is not a fundraiser and SGA is making no profit off the book," he said. "The money for the book was raised by SGA."

Shook said SGA's intention for the guide was to do "something constructive for the students."

"We are not trying to change the teaching style (of professors), we are trying to give student more information about the teacher," he said.

Shook said that the grade distributions are only the start of what SGA said they would like to include in the guide.

He also said that only 500 copies of the guide will be distributed and that SGA will be looking for an "immediate response" of feedback from students and faculty about how they can improve it.

A committee will be appointed by the Faculty Senate Operations committee to act as an advisor to SGA on the guide.

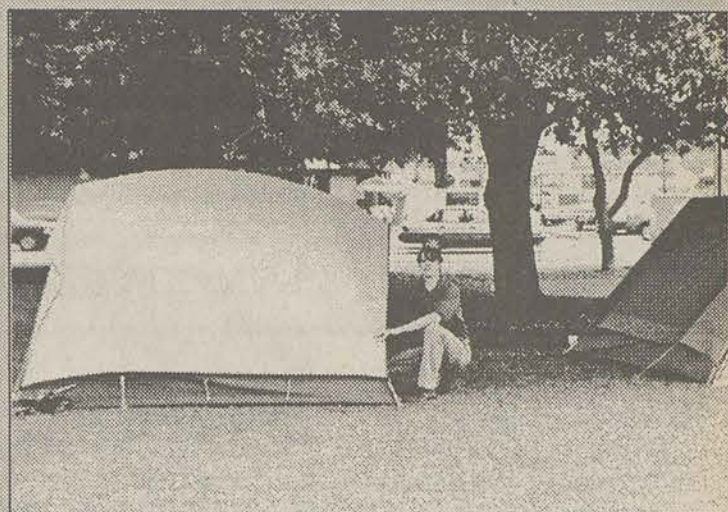

"They will see the guide before we put it out," Shook said. "They will see what we are putting in the guide and give us their opinions."

Students camp out for homelessness

Jerome New

Students camped out on the lawn of the Landrum Center to live like a homeless person for one night.

By Andrea D'Astoli
Staff Writer

A group of GSU students did not have a home Monday. Instead, their only roof was a tent pitched on the Landrum Center lawn.

These students were able to experience homelessness firsthand as a part of Homelessness and Hunger Week sponsored by the Office of Volunteer Services.

The "Tent Event" was set upon the lawn of the Landrum Center. The tents were provided by CRI, and ROTC stood watch during the night. The Landrum Center was opened for restroom facilities.

"Students talked about what they were going to bring from their apartment and they realized that most of the things they were going to bring were objects that many homeless probably didn't need or have," said Victoria Futch of Volunteer Services.

"I think that it affected students. They had to get up and go a distance just to use the bathroom."

Several student organizations such as the SGA and ROTC participated, along with a new student organization, the Circle K.

Jenna Boyd, a member of the Circle K, said that it was strange sleeping in a tent.

"Even though we were in the tents it was still cold and uncomfortable," she said. "It was strange not having a roof over our heads and sleeping in a tent and not our beds."

"There were a lot of people staring and looking at us as they went by. I guess homeless people are discriminated against for the way they look."

Although it was only for one night, the participating students said they will probably have a better understanding of how a homeless person lives from day to day.

Futch said that the students responded well.

"There was a lot of positive feedback," she said. "This is something that we will definitely do again next year."

Senator Coverdell discusses issues

By Melanie Weinberg
Assistant News Editor

U.S. Sen. Paul Coverdell held a town hall meeting via satellite Tuesday night at Ogeechee Technical Institute to answer questions pertaining to the budget, welfare, taxes, and Medicare.

He said that his goals are to work on a balanced budget, overhaul welfare, and lower taxes on Americans.

"The U.S. House of Representatives and the Senate will vote on historic measures that can change the way we govern ourselves in the U.S.," Coverdell said.

A phone call concerning the budget was called in from Atlanta. Coverdell was asked which programs are going to suffer a direct cut.

"The defense department is the only agency that over seven years would suffer a direct cut," he said.

In the next few days a decision will be made whether or not to propose a balanced budget.

The Medicare and Medicaid question dominated the meeting. Several of the callers were concerned if the programs' funding was going to be cut.

"We believe that managing Medicaid state levels will allow a better setting of priorities," he said.

Another issue that came about was that of the American troops in Bosnia and if there was going to be a cut on the military budget.

"I do not support the ground crew in Bosnia," Coverdell said. "I did however support the air strike."

"We should consider U.S. troops only in the role of anchoring transportation and distribution facilities," he said.

Coverdell also expressed the importance of NATO for U.S. security purposes.

"I don't want the United States to turn its back on NATO," he said.

Audrey Loeb, chair of the College Republicans, organized the meeting by contacting Senator Coverdell's office in Atlanta, and sending notices across campus to get students to come and listen.

"I am impressed with the turnout," she said. "There are quite a lot of students."

"I am pleased with Coverdell's responses," she said. "I felt that it was important that he clarified a lot of fallacies about cuts when they are actually reductions in the rate of growth."

"I have heard a lot of students on campus complaining about cuts and that children are going to starve," she said. "If we do not change spending habits, it's going to be our children that starve."

Past vice chairman of the College Republicans Emory Fivesh said that Medicare will go bankrupt in seven years if nothing is done.

"Republicans realize Medicare has to be changed for it not to go bankrupt," he said.

The idea that the country is going to run out of money was prevalent among other members of the College Republicans.

"People don't understand we can run out of money," Wes Shriver, vice chairman said.

Health Center's on-site payment plan to ease registration process

By Erika Anderson
Staff Writer

In an effort to make the registration process less frustrating and to please state auditors, Auxiliary Services is now requiring students who use the Health Center to pay on site for their prescriptions and lab services.

Larry Davis, director of Auxiliary Services, said that although state auditors have been concerned for years about the amount of bills in the accounts receivable, it was the desire to make the students' registration a smoother process that caused the new plan of payment.

"Students often end up confused, angry, upset or mad when they have to register," Davis said. "They end up having to go 14 different places to pay their fees. Hopefully this will solve some of the problems."

In the past, students were allowed to wait until the end of the quarter to pay for their prescriptions and lab services, such as X-rays. This often caused a problem during registration because students who had forgotten to pay for these services had a hold on their registration until their fees were paid. Therefore, many of the students complained about having to run around campus in order to get everything straightened out.

Auxiliary Services said they hope to reduce some of the runaround by having students pay on the spot for their services. Davis said that students would not be denied emergency services, but that there are many ways of payment.

"Students can pay by check, credit card or Eagle Express," Davis said.

In addition to Health Services, Davis said that he hopes to "consolidate each division of

Pilot responsible for plane crash

Randolph E. Schmid
The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — The pilot of an American Eagle commuter plane was to blame for a crash that killed 15 in North Carolina last December, the National Transportation Safety Board said Tuesday.

Pilot Michael Patrick Hillis incorrectly assumed that an engine had failed, the board concluded. He then failed to follow proper procedures for engine failure, single-engine approach, go-around and stall recovery.

The prop-jet crashed Dec. 13 while trying to circle for a second landing attempt. Hillis, co-pilot Matthew Sailor and 13 passengers died. Five passengers survived.

The board said that a contributing factor was the failure of airline management to identify and remedy problems in pilot performance and training.

Hillis was hired by the Flagship Airline, operating as American Eagle, after being recommended for dismissal by another airline, Comair. Flagship was not aware of that recommendation or Hillis' training problems, investigators found.

But the board postponed action on a recommendation that airlines be required to compile reports on pilot training and performance problems and to share them with one another.

Chairman Jim Hall had pressed for the requirement but acknowledged that it is a sensitive issue and other board members wanted more time to consider it.

This was the fourth fatal accident the board has investigated involving airlines not having all crew performance records on problem pilots, Hall said. A total of 72 people have died in such crashes. In some, airlines failed to seek out pilot background; in one case, a pilot lied to get a job,

Hall said.

According to the investigators in this case, a cockpit light went on as the plane was landing, indicating an automatic engine ignition had occurred. No evidence of engine problems was found and engineers pointed out that the light can be triggered by backward pressure on a propeller when the throttle is increased.

However, in training, pilots rarely see this light except in engine failure, they said, and that's how Hillis interpreted it. Instead of following the proper procedure and directing Sailor to find the cause of the problem, Hillis attempted to fly the plane while diagnosing the engine trouble.

Board staffers described that as a formula for disaster. The plane lost speed and drifted off course. Suddenly, a warning sounded, indicating that the plane was going too slowly to stay aloft. By then, it was too late and the plane crashed.

Hillis, 29, had once been recommended for dismissal at Cincinnati-based Comair, but was allowed to resign, safety investigators learned. A fellow pilot there said he was concerned that Hillis would "freeze up or get tunnel vision" in an emergency.

The study of the crew found Hillis had been a charter pilot from 1985 to 1990. He joined Comair on Jan. 8, 1990, and resigned Jan. 3, 1991.

Flagship hired him four days later.

The safety board interviewed the Comair pilot who recommended the dismissal and he told the agency that Hillis "had below average piloting skills that required my constant attention."

At Flagship, Hillis received unsatisfactory ratings during some training sessions but eventually was assigned as a pilot. The Federal Aviation Administration concluded that at the time of the accident he was fully qualified to fly the aircraft.

Indian reservation may have slot machine

The Associated Press

TACOMA — An initiative that would allow slot machines on Washington Indian reservations has become one of the year's most expensive campaigns, according to the latest figures from the state Public Disclosure Commission.

Three political action committees — a proponent and two opponents of Initiative 651 — have gathered more than $1,082,000. That includes $217,500 donated by three Washington tribes working against the initiative.

In comparison, Mike Lowry and Ken Eikenberry spent $3.3 million on their 1992 gubernatorial election. Other initiative campaigns this year have garnered up to $800,000 in contributions so far.

But whatever money is spent on the gambling initiative pales in comparison to what tribes could earn if the measure passes. Proponents said last week tribes could make as much as $1.8 billion or more each year from slots.

The proposal would also remove nearly all restrictions on gaming on Washington Indian lands.

Officials with the Upper Skagit Tribe told the state Public Disclosure Commission on Friday that the tribe had contributed $60,000 to the committee opposing the initiative. The Muckleshoots contributed $150,000 and the Tulalips contributed $7,500 to the opposition.

Proponents of the initiative have raised about $750,000 for the campaign, anchored by a $300,000 contribution from the Spokane tribe and a $225,000 contribution from the Puyallup tribe. They have paid out about $400,000 to initiative signatures.

Perot launches drive for new political party on California ballot

By John Howard
The Associated Press

SACRAMENTO, Calif. — Hours before the deadline, Ross Perot declared victory Tuesday in his quest to put the new Reform Party on California's 1996 presidential ballot.

But it could be weeks before state officials can say for sure whether he succeeded in the drive launched less than a month ago.

The Reform Party had submitted at least 95,000 voter registrations by early Tuesday, Perot said.

Thousands more were expected to be submitted at county registrar offices before the 5 p.m. deadline.

"As of this morning, we have 95,000," Perot told San Francisco television station KRON via a satellite link from Dallas. "We know it's done."

But we're going to work hard all day t day and turn in thousands more ..."

Meanwhile, questions arose Tuesday over whether a top Clinton campaign strategist offered to help the Perot effort in California.

Gordon Black, a pollster who sometimes advises Perot, said the offer of manpower was made by Clinton adviser Dick Morris and was quickly rejected.

Morris denied making such an offer. The dispute was first reported in the Cleveland Plain Dealer.

The Reform Party needed 89,007 verified voter registrations to qualify the party for the 1996 elections in the nation's largest state.

This state also has the earliest qualification deadline and the toughest requirements.

Perot reportedly has spent $100,000 a week on the California effort, including $360,000 on newspaper advertising.

The Texas billionaire launched the drive Sept. 28.

out shopping malls, and anywhere else Californians gathered, persuading voters to change their registration to the Reform Party — at least briefly — so the party could meet its deadline.

Russ Verney, executive director of Perot's United We Stand America, said party workers had "counted and copied 94,956 voter registration forms as of 11 p.m. last night."

"That includes those we have signed up. It does not include those that been sent in by mail or hand delivered to the counties," Verney said.

California Secretary of State Bill Jones has until Nov. 13 to officially verify the signatures, although the validation likely will be announced early next month, said spokeswoman Shirley Washington.

"Ohio is next and Maine follows right on its heels," Verney said.

Perot has suggested strongly that he won't be the party's candidate but he won't rule himself out, either.

The party first tried to qualify for the California ballot through petition, which would have required 890,000 signatures, he said.

The party switched to the more difficult voter registration route after the secretary of state's office, acknowledging it made an error, changed the deadlines.

Many of the registrations appeared to be coming from San Diego County.

This city is — a Perot stronghold and Los Angeles and Orange counties, all in southern California, Washington said.

Also Tuesday, the Natural Law Party said it had submitted 128,000 signatures as it tried to qualify for the 1996 ballot.

The Iowa-based party, which is rooted into the Transcendental Meditation movement, has been quietly collecting signatures for eight months.

The two parties are seeking to become the seventh and eighth on California's crowded presidential ballot.

Children reunited with family

By Eileen Loh
The Associated Press

NEW ORLEANS — With a happy squeal of "Mom!", two little boys from Michigan were reunited with their parents Tuesday, hours after they were taken from a man accused of kidnapping them 10 days ago.

The boys' mother, Maria Alvarado, picked up 3-year-old Eleazar and wouldn't let him go. Her husband, Martin, grabbed Adan, 11, in a big bear hug. Elder brother Omar wrapped his arms around all four to make a huge family huddle.

Both parents cried almost uncontrollably, and spoke mostly in Spanish as they posed for pictures.

"We're very happy they found my brothers," said Omar, 18.

The family was reunited at New Orleans' Lakefront Airport, where the parents' plane arrived an hour before the boys were brought to them.

It was unclear where the boys were or what caused the delay.

The family left for home about 15 minutes after the reunion, and arrived in Benton Harbor, Mich., shortly before 11 p.m. EDT. Adan said he felt "happy" but wanted to sleep.

An FBI agent with the family in Benton Harbor declined to comment Tuesday night on whether the boys had been physically abused.

When asked if the suspect, Boyd Dean Weekley, had been "bad" to them, Adan replied, "a little."

The Alvarados are migrant farm workers from Texas who have traveled to Michigan the past four years to pick fruits and vegetables. They have nine children and live in a two-room wooden hut on a farm.

Adan and Eleazar disappeared while buying potato chips at a convenience store in Benton Harbor, while their mother washed clothes at a coin laundry next door.

They were found safe Tuesday, and the FBI arrested an ex-con just weeks after a priest helped bail him out of jail on child-fondling charges.

The FBI said agents arrested Weekley, 24, as he stood outside ever happened," said Rucker, who met Weekley when the man was serving time a few years ago for forgery and attempted escape. He insisted Weekley was not violent.

"He gave money to children's charities. He had a sticker on his car, 'Save the Children,'" Rucker said. "He cares for kids. It's a crazy care. He feels he's going to be their savior."

On Oct. 10, four days before the boys vanished, Weekley apparently stole the priest's car in Sioux Falls, authorities said.

The brothers and Weekley were seen Friday and Saturday in Montgomery, Ala., more than 650 miles from Benton Harbor. After getting a tip that Rucker's car had been seen in New Orleans, agents searched the French Quarter and spotted the vehicle, the FBI said.

The family was flown to New Orleans for the reunion in a jet supplied by Whirlpool Corp., at the request of authorities, company spokesman T.R. Reid said.

The Alvarados said the fact that they are migrants who spoke little English complicated the police search for the boys.

The parents are permanent U.S. residents from Monterrey, Mexico. Some of their children are Mexican citizens, and the younger ones are U.S. citizens.

"I had to have someone translate on the phone at the laundromat when I called 911," Mrs. Alvarado told the Detroit Free Press.

It wasn't until she passed a lie detector, she said, that police broadened their search.

Weekley wore a purple tie-dyed T-shirt, dirty black jeans and hiking boots to a hearing before a federal magistrate that was closed to the media. He did not answer reporters' questions. He was ordered held without bail.

He was charged in August with fondling an 8-year-old girl at a Sioux Falls, S.D., swimming pool. He was released in September after relatives and a prison chaplain, the Rev. Larry Rucker, raised $500 to secure his $5,000 bail.

Man wrongly imprisoned for owning weapons

By Joan Kirchner
The Associated Press

ATLANTA — A Marietta man sent to prison for stockpiling machine guns and pipe bombs had a right under the Second Amendment to own the weapons, his attorney argued Monday.

Attorney Greg Smith told a three-judge panel of the 11th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals that the federal government violated Donald W. Wright's right to bear arms by improperly using the Constitution's commerce clause to ban machine guns as a threat to the nation's economy.

"This is the slippery slope: can Congress ban any weapon?" Smith said.

But U.S. Attorney Kent Alexander, who argued the case on behalf of the government, said Wright is not protected by the Second Amendment because his weapons were not for use in a militia "of the well regulated kind envisioned by the Second Amendment."

The judges did not immediately issue a ruling.

Wright, 39, a member of an unregulated north Georgia militia group, said he had planned to bury the two machine guns and three pipe bombs that federal agents seized from him in August 1994. Wright said he would have used them only "in case of a holocaust or invasion or something."

Wright pleaded guilty to possession of a machine gun and possession of a pipe bomb. He is serving a 41-month sentence.

Wright conducted military drills in the north Georgia woods with a militia group of about 20 people. He said he decided to accumulate his weapons after listening to colleagues talk of the vulnerability of the U.S. government and watching the enactment of the Brady Bill requiring handgun registration.

"He is just a simple guy from north Georgia who thought he was being noble," Smith told reporters. "He possessed guns for defensive purposes in case of a national emergency."

Alexander and Smith offered different interpretations of the meaning of the Second Amendment, which reads: "A well regulated militia being necessary to the security of the free state, the right of the people to keep and bear arms shall not be infringed."

Smith said he thinks the amendment covers all people, not just those who are members of a "well regulated" militia.

"If two or three neighbors decided they wanted to get guns and call themselves a militia, that makes it all right?" Judge Phyllis A. Kravitch asked.

"I don't think you have to be organized at all to fall" under the protection of the Second Amendment, Smith said.

Woman spent health money on gifts

The Associated Press

AUGUSTA, Ga. — Healthmaster founder Jeanette G. Garrison liberally spent her health company's money on gifts, charities and political figures.

This included receptions for first lady Hillary Rodham Clinton, according to previously unreleased court records.

Mrs. Garrison, who pleaded guilty to 10 counts of a 133-count federal indictment, is to be sentenced Thursday for defrauding Medicare of millions of dollars.

Mrs. Garrison of North Augusta, S.C., used $3,000 of company money to underwrite a reception at an undisclosed location with Mrs. Clinton, a month before the 1992 election, according to checks found by investigators.

Another $300 went to help fund May 1993 reception in Vermont for the First Lady, according to the records, Morris News Service reported Sunday.

Court files show Healthmaster Inc. spent $62,000 on politicians or Democratic Party causes and thousands more was passed to politicians through Mrs. Garrison's employees and charged to Medicare as bonuses. Prosecutors said they believe that taxpayers paid for most of the spending because Healthmaster and Mrs. Garrison stretched the definition of "reasonable costs," business costs that Medicare will cover.

Healthmaster also spent money on politicians' favorite causes.

One example was a $1,290 check to Macon's Georgia Music Hall of Fame, a pet project of Gov. Zell Miller.

Other company donations went to a 1992 fund-raising golf tournament for the Richmond County Sheriffs' Office, the Peace Officers' Association of Georgia, the Georgia Press Association for journalism scholarships, and a St. Patrick's Day parade float. About $2,200 went to North Augusta High School.

Also $500 was spent on a February 1993 "doctors' day" reception in Albany.

Healthmaster was also generous to some of its employees. One got a company-paid honeymoon cruise, another a baby shower, and a doctor got a family YMCA membership.

Our Opinion

Panel's bike proposal is a reasonable solution

The proposal from SGA's bicycle safety committee is a logical solution to the ongoing issue of what should be done with bikes on campus.

Its chief merit is that it does not propose sweeping limits on where bikes can be ridden on campus.

What it does propose — and this is reasonable — is that bikes should be off-limits in high-traffic pedestrian areas where there is an increased likelihood of accidents. These areas include Lakeside Café and the Union rotunda.

The idea that bikes should not be ridden in the outside dining area of Lakeside is also logical. The managers of a privately-owned restaurant would rarely allow people to bike freely through their venue, endangering and annoying their customers. Managers at GSU shouldn't allow it either.

The introduction of bike safety programs into GSU 120 classes also makes sense, though we question how effective such programs would be. Unless adequate enforcement of bike safety on campus takes place, those bikers who are reckless will continue to be a threat.

We also question the idea of extending class breaks to 15 minutes instead of 10. The obvious scenario is that students would often use the extra time to socialize or study, and that professors would often keep their classes late if they believe 15 minutes is unwarranted. People will be in a hurry anyway and still inconvenience others.

In general, the committee's proposal represents a clear repudiation of the Faculty Senate concept of banning bikes, and therefore should be commended.

Why do the construction crews for Herty and Hollis get to take over the whole parking lot? We pay to park there — they don't!

Dear Stadium Police — I thought that the home fans at football games were supposed to be rowdy. You obviously don't think so since you threaten to put at least one fan out per game. Cut us some slack; be glad that the team has some that are willing to come and cheer instead of not come at all, like most of the student body. Thanks from the "rowdies" on the 50-yard line.

Urban attitude of superiority is closed-minded

AMANDA CREWS

MANAGING EDITOR

I had an accent.

The irony of the situation was that we were in Valdosta, Ga. I wanted to tell all those Atlanta folks to take a look around. The very same accent that was apparently so darn funny allowed me to fit in around the town, not them.

my life. However, I do not attack people who choose to live in cities. That's their business. If living in a city is what floats their boats, then by all means a city is where they need to be.

Granted, a city does have more in the form of cultural experiences, shopping malls, etc. to of-point them out to me on a daily basis.

Yes, there is not a lot to do on a Friday or Saturday night. This just forces us to be a little more creative or drive a few extra miles.

Yes, it seems like everybody in the town knows everybody else, and they even have a tendency to stick their noses in other people's business. On the other hand, though, you learn at an earlier age to tell people to butt out.

Yes, you do have to deal with small-town politics. Everything seems to be based on who you know or who you are related to. This can be frustrating, especially if you don't know the right people, but on the other hand, it does provide a good laugh now and then.

Finally, though, there are some definite advantages to small-town life. A small town provides a sense of security that cannot be found in a big city. Who in Atlanta sleeps with their doors unlocked?

Life in a small town also follows a much slower pace. This is my personal favorite. Much can be said for a low-stress lifestyle.

As for all you city folks, you seem to criticize small-town people for allegedly being so close-minded about alternative lifestyles.

Take your own advice. Realize that each person marches to the beat of a different drummer.

A SMALL TOWN PROVIDES A SENSE OF SECURITY THAT CANNOT BE FOUND IN A BIG CITY. WHO IN ATLANTA SLEEPS WITH THEIR DOORS UNLOCKED? LIFE IN A SMALL TOWN ALSO FOLLOWS A MUCH SLOWER PACE ...

Before the summer was over, they had started calling me "Belle," as in southern belle.

Eventually, I got used to the nicknames and the teasing even though it bugged the living daylights out of me.

I shouldn't have to get used to it, though.

What makes city dwellers think they are so superior to others?

Personally, I prefer to live in a small town and probably will continue to do so for the rest of fer its residents, but on the other hand, it also has a lot more crime, pollution, overcrowding, and so forth.

I can see both the pros and cons of living in a city. Why can't city folks look at small towns in the same open-minded fashion?

Believe it or not, there are both advantages and disadvantages to living in a town with a population of 10,000 or less.

The disadvantages probably seem obvious to most city folks. They better be obvious since they

The 'primitive wage' is too common in Statesboro

Yo! Yo! Yo!

"Primitive wage." If you happen to hold a job here in the metropolis, "primitive wages" is most likely what you get.

Logically speaking, if you're a doctor or the manager at the hot dog joint, then of course your wage may be a little higher. Most of us college students need a job of some sort to cover or help pay the grand costs of an education.

Any wage under $5 an hour is quite primitive in my category of wages. Packing groceries at the supermarket or cooking at the grill should get at least five bucks an hour. For first few weeks, anyway. During those first few weeks I can sympathize with the employer, but after you've shown the boss you're not a slacker that wage should rise.

UNO! Statesboro is not full of slackers.

College students provide dependable, usually well-experienced, and non-slack work for their employers. We aren't high schoolers holding a job for the first time. I love to work, but when I know these places of business are taking advantage of the situation, it sucks!

CHANCE FULK

What is the situation? The situation is that the local employers know that there is an abundant supply of labor in town. Some of us have to work sooner or later or all the time.

and waitress there was getting exploited with the "primitive wage."

We didn't slack and you probably don't either. Offbeat, but true — this club didn't hook us up with the gratuity; it went to

THE WAGES HERE, ON THE AVERAGE, ARE INCREDIBLY LOWER THAN NEARBY AREAS AND MUCH OF THE U.S. ONLY THOSE OF YOU WHO WORK PROBABLY NOTICE THE "PRIMITIVE WAGE."

So the employer really does not have anyone on his or her back pushing higher wages on the average in town.

For example, I wait tables whenever I am holding a job. Last year I waited tables at a private club in town. $4.25 an hour, and that was after six months of service. Every waiter pay our "primitive wage." Simply crooked!

On the other end of the spectrum, I was making bank elsewhere in our beautiful United States of America. I have worked other jobs, in Macon and Atlanta, such as cooking for low-key restaurants and so on making five or so bucks an hour. That was even in high school.

After all, we give Statesboro our business and killer service. May we have a cut in the success, such as decent and updated wages? The wages here, on the average, are incredibly lower than nearby areas and much of the U.S. Only those of you who work probably notice the "primitive wage."

This wage problem is not a problem citizens can fix through legislation, judges, or anything of that matter. Only raising the minimum wage by the federal government would eliminate the "primitive wage." I don't see that happening anytime soon.

If it did change, average wages in Statesboro would still remain at the minimum. There exists a problem, though — where does it come from?

Just thought I'd bring this out to all you guys and make it aware. The working class here in the 'Boro has put up with the "primitive wage" for awhile.

Can anything be done to extinct these insulting low wages? Drop me a line.

You got the Chance to make a change!

Varnell's cop comments 'insolent'

Editor,
This letter is written in response to the "What's Happenin'" column in the Oct. 9 issue of The George-Anne, written by Tracey Varnell. After reading this column, both I and my fiancée became outraged at the insolent and unwarranted remarks written by Ms. Varnell about the Statesboro Police Department. As both citizens and students, we were deeply offended by the remarks made in the column.

We agree that students have the need, and the right, to congregate and "have a good time," even at, God forbid, a keg party. However, Ms. Varnell seems to have ignored one important observation: underage drinking, drinking and driving, and playing loud music which disturbs neighbors is against the law.

We realize that keg parties don't ALWAYS lead to this kind of description, but nine tenths of the time, they do.

Now, correct us if we're wrong, but isn't it the duty of the police department to enforce the law? Understandably, it's annoying to have your kegger broken up by the boys in blue. To be honest, we're not sure that the officers breaking the party up wouldn't rather be there, lifting a brew or two with some pals, but unfortunately, they have a job to do. And breaking up parties, regrettably, is part of that duty.

Ms. Varnell went further to say that the reputation of the Statesboro Police Department is affecting enrollment, keeping prospective students away. We find it hard to believe this is true, but if it is, then GOOD. We'd rather have a student not come here because "he/she won't be able to party," rather than come here, do poorly, cause problems with the community, and stink up the university's reputation.

If the reputation of the police department keeps a student away, that student doesn't need to come here. It's time that students start remembering that we came here to get an education, not to get drunk every night. Keggers aren't part of the curriculum.

If parties keep getting raided by the police, then students haven't learned their lesson. There's an old cliché, "If you can't do the time, don't do the crime."

We hope that Ms. Varnell remembers one day that she took cheap shots at the police department, so when one day, when she needs them, she'll feel guilty. I hope that, the good Lord willing, Ms. Varnell never falls victim to a crime. Unfortunately, the world isn't a safe place anymore. For Ms. Varnell's sake, we hope the officer who may come to her aid has a poor memory and forgets the insolent remarks she made.

Go ahead officers, do your jobs, and do them well. Some of us appreciate it.

Column on Christians was 'sacrilegious'

Editor,
This letter is in response to Jana Newsome's article ("True-blue Christians — the next extinct species?," Oct. 17). Although I am not a "true-blue Christian," I feel that Ms. Newsome's article was sacrilegious.

Now some people may not be considered perfect Christians, but does that make them any less a Christian? They still choose to believe in a higher being and an after-life; they have still accepted Jesus as their savior.

Ms. Newsome states that she is not perfect Christian either, but how many Christians can say they are? Is that any reason to turn people away from Christianity?

I read this article and was appalled. The statement, "If you're not serious, then just get out" — I am sorry but that is bullshit. And I apologize for using such language, but that is the best way I can describe her statement. How can she say she is a "true-blue Christian" when she is making comments like that?

For future reference, I recommend Ms. Newsome inform these so-called "hypocritical Christians" of how they could become better Christians, instead of telling them to take their beliefs elsewhere.

I myself would probably not be considered a Christian (obviously Ms. Newsome would agree) but comments like Ms. Newsome's should be considered outrageous and anti-Christian.

Didn't see 'humor' in editorial cartoon

Editor,
I have been told that I have a good sense of humor, but I fail to see the humor presented in the "Racial harmony? Or a distortion of Dr. King's vision?" cartoon in the Oct. 19 issue.

The humor is appalling to any African-American who reads the cartoon. It has taken a historical statement that has brought pride in millions of African-Americans and ridiculed it.

Not only did it ridicule Dr. King, but it portrayed Oct. 16's

Day of Atonement as though it was nothing more than a vicious plot.

I am sure that some are saying, "It was only a cartoon." But when I read it along with my coworker, we were both offended. I know The George-Anne did not draw the cartoon, but your social responsibility as a journalist is not to cause negative resentment from your readers.

There is enough racial tension in the world today without The George-Anne adding to it.

The George-Anne has a responsibility to the students at GSU, so the editor's lack of discretion is easily seen in the choice of a cartoon that was published. This cartoon is the exact tool that causes racial friction.

Hopefully, next time the editor will choose a cartoon that is not degrading to any racial, ethnic or religious group.

Smokers don't need to throw butts everywhere

Editor,
Why is it smokers feel free to toss their cigarette butts on the ground? Each morning I sweep up about 50 to 100 cigarette butts around one of the buildings on campus. That amounts to thousands of cigarette butts thrown on the ground on this campus every day. Smokers from every walk of life do it. I know of one building where the only smokers are managers. I can't understand it. Smokers, take some pride in our campus and dispose of cigarette butts properly.

Million Man March will unite blacks

Editor,
The Million Man March is over. Its ideals were excellent. It asked for black men to take pride in who they are.

You can get lost in the sponsorship by Farrakhan, but remember the times make the man.

Thomas Jefferson and George Washington owned slaves and they are widely respected, so how can I let Farrakhan hold me back.

I am interested to see if this march has any effect. I will believe it had an effect when I quit hearing black people to refer to each other as nigger, motherfucker, bitch, and whore.

How am I expected to react when I hear black people call each other by these names out loud and in public?

I will believe it when black men quit expecting sex from unmarried black women. I am ready to believe it, I want to believe it. I am eagerly waiting on the change. I believe that no matter how whites react, black people are in charge of their own destiny.

Imagine how whites will react when blacks score higher on the SAT, when blacks exceed whites in academics, when black illegitimacy is lower than whites, when black on black violence is rare? How will whites react when you take away their excuses?

Football in Georgia

Are you ready for some football? If so, what kind?

Is there anyone else out there who is tired of the amount of respect that GSU football gets in this state? No this team is probably not as good as any of the national championship teams, but considering the other choices in the state we look pretty damn good.

I am and always will be a UGA football fan. But realistically, they suck. I know all of those players have been hurt this year, and that has caused the performance to drop, but even a bad Georgia team should beat Ole Miss. Since Vince left so has the heart of the team. I am not saying that Dooley was the best coach in the history of football, but he wasn't bad, and he is centuries ahead of Goff. And the next three games are not real easy.

They have Florida coming into Athens this weekend. Just for the record, I hate Florida but they are going to bury the 95 Dawgs next to UGA I, in the cemetery in the endzone. Then they have to take on Auburn and Tech. Auburn is good and Tech ain't half bad, so the Dawgs could finish like puppies, 0-3.

Well at least Tech is good. Well if you consider holding Florida State to 42 points good then maybe Tech is getting better.

Hiring that new coach O'leary was a great choice; he gave Tech a heart, but they need a couple of years, watch out in the ACC in a few years. (Watch out for second place, Florida State will lose their first ACC game in 2159, when the conference expands to 54 teams and they have to play Nebraska in Lincoln in the snow.)

Then I come to the most heartless team in the state, the Atlanta Falcons. Yes I know the letters need to be capitalized, but I just can't. I have been a Falcon fan as long as I have been a Braves fan, and just for the record, it has been hard.

The Falcons have this knack for finding new and exciting ways to lose. You can watch them for a year and see why the run and shoot is a college offense.

But the Falcons O isn't the real problem; the defense is. The defense is a meandering group of followers, and when Deion left so did their leader.

He was the best corner in football, and Atlanta still had the worst pass defense in the league. So let's get rid of our equalizer, and try without him.

Real good thinking, Falcons. (Hint to Atlanta, San Francisco wouldn't get rid of Jerry, and Dallas wouldn't get rid of Emmitt, so why get rid of our star?)

So now Atlanta has a lot of nice players that all get along, but when the big games come, what happens, they melt.

Why?

I will tell you why. They have the talent to at least make the playoffs, but without that leader, they can't get up for those big games, like the 49ers twice a year and the Cowboys normally once a year.

At least when they had a 6-10 record, they would upset a big team occasionally, now they are bland and in need of a facelift.

So with these options, we still get little respect but Falcons watch out, GSU is coming.

Eagles need five to beat Charleston So.

By Mike Davis
Staff Writer

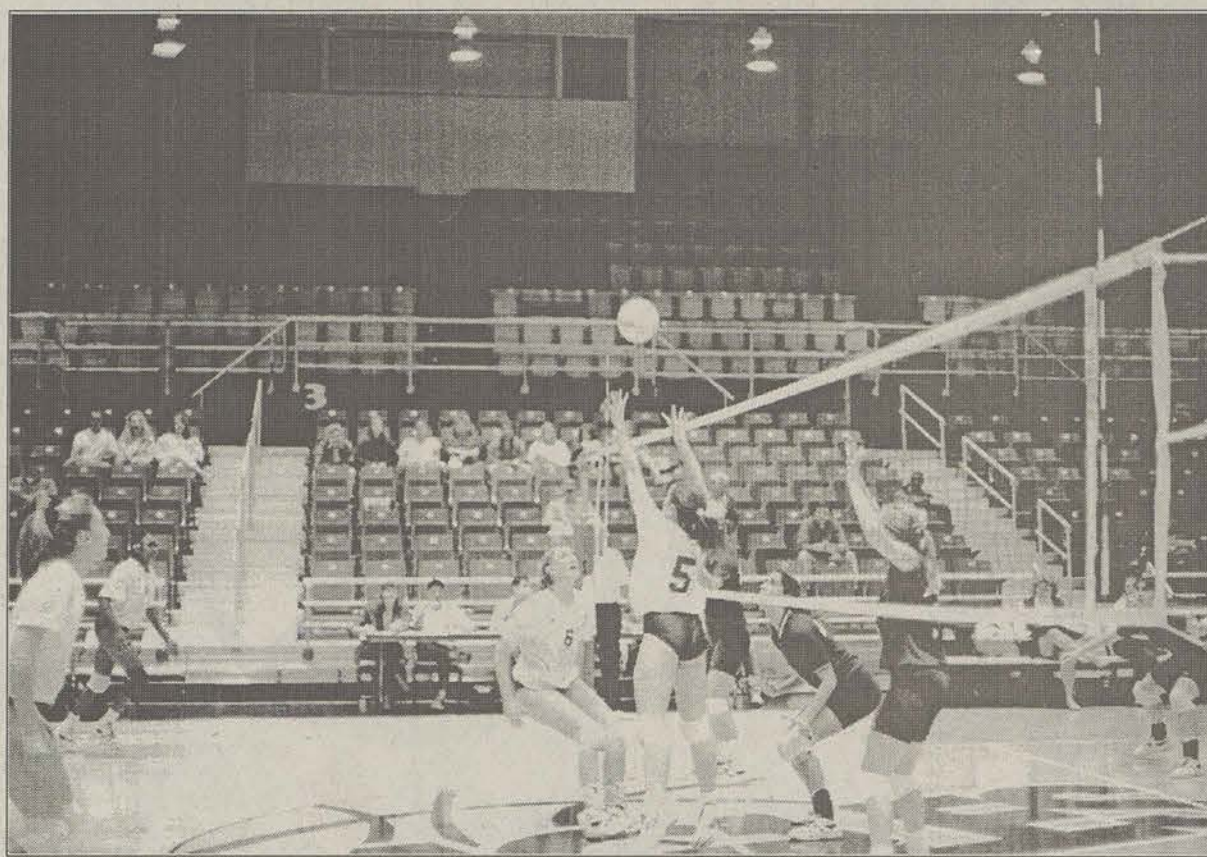

It was starting to look familiar to Coach Dee Nichols and the Lady Eagle volleyball team.

After the win last Monday against South Carolina State, breaking the six-game losing streak, the Lady Eagles dropped their next two matches against ETSU and lone conference leader Appalachian State, smashing their hopes of winning two consecutive games.

It was obvious in the previous two losses that the lack of motivation was beginning to settle over the Lady Eagles, who were finding themselves tied with Western Carolina and UT-Chattanooga in the cellar of the Southern Conference. The mental mistakes began to take effect on GSU, leaving Coach Nichols trying to figure out where the explosiveness they had earlier maintained had gone.

Nichols, knowing that five of the next six games would be conference play, desperately needed a win Tuesday night against Charleston Southern University. Her team fulfilled that need as they came from behind to put away the Lady Bucs in a five-game match (12-15, 15-6, 13-15, 15-9, 15-10).

Starting the match without Litonya Thompson and Jenn Lett on the floor, the Lady Eagles fell behind early, due to three hard-hitting Lady Bucs; Kandace Kessel, Allison Arreola, and Carrie Fenwick, who all finished in double figures in kills. Errors once again resulted in easy Lady Bucs points, which turned a relatively close game into a Charleston Southern win.

"I feel that everybody has a fair chance to earn a position," Nichols said in referring to the start of Stephanie Simpson and Jeana Arthur instead of Thompson and Lett. "The freshmen earned their starting spot."

After losing the first game, Thompson and Lett found their way onto the floor, and both had impact on the second game win. After jumping to a quick 4-0 lead, the Lady Eagles, behind Megan Pheiffer, Stacey Lewis, and Thompson, were able to control the attacks made by the Lady Bucs and tied the match at one apiece.

In the third game, Nichols began to see something that she desperately did not want to see. The mental errors began to take toll on the Lady Eagles after jumping out to an 8-3 lead. Charleston Southern came with four unanswered points to cut the lead to three. With GSU then gaining just one point, the Lady Bucs reeled off four more points to take the lead 11-9. Big blocks by Pheiffer and Julie Phliger tied the game once again, but then Charleston Southern was able to take advantage of more errors made by the Lady Eagles and score the last two points to take the lead in the match.

With the Lady Eagles finding themselves once again in that familiar position, they fell behind 7-3 early in the fourth. But then with the serving of Amy Flaherty, who finished with a season high 60 assists, GSU clawed its way back to take a 9-7 lead. Defensively, Pheiffer and Lewis once again added key blocks and digs to keep the Lady Eagles on top and send the match to a fifth game.

"We held our focus," Nichols said. "We had big plays from Stacey Lewis, but it was altogether a team effort in the fourth game. We eliminated the mistakes that we had previously made."

The fifth game saw several lead changes as the GSU and Charleston Southern battled for a lead. After the Lady Eagles tied it at 8-8, Lett sent one of her nine kills to the Lady Bucs side of the net to give GSU the advantage for good. Thompson had two big blocks to preserve the lead, giving the Lady Eagles the win and sending Nichols home knowing that the explosiveness was still there. It was just a matter of using it.

"Lewis led the team tonight," Nichols said. "She had a great game, but the whole team played together and that is what wins matches."

Thompson led the team in kills with 22, and Lewis finished with a respectable 17 of her own to go along with her 16 digs. Pheiffer contributed 14 total blocks with 15 kills and 15 digs in the winning cause.

With six games remaining on the regular season schedule, the Lady Eagles will now travel to Davidson and Marshall before returning for two conference matches. The current record stands at 7-19, 2-7 in the Southern Conference.

Dawson and Robinson: Speed in the backfield

He is a laid-back person with a lot of personality. He is a native of Camilla, Ga. and attended Mitchell-Baker High School.

Dawson said his greatest influence is his mother, and he attributes his talents to God.

"I always try to work harder no matter what I am doing," said Dawson. "What might be acceptable for some, is not acceptable for me. I always see room for improvement, I guess I am my own biggest critic."

As to the apparent chemistry between Dawson and Robinson, Dawson attributes this success not only to the abilities of Robinson, but to the team.

"We are just a part of the big picture; without the talents and determination of the rest of my teammates it wouldn't matter what kind of chemistry Kenny (Robinson) and I share."

The other part of the duo is Robinson. He is a sophomore quarterback who has proven himself as an asset to the Eagle line-up.

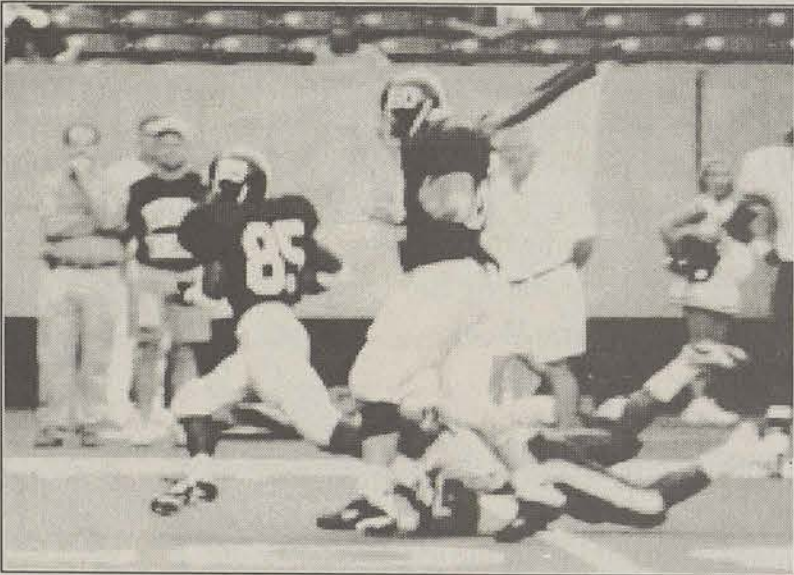

Last year Robinson was named Freshman-of-the-Year by both the league coaches and the media association. He also tied former GSU quarterback Tracy Ham's freshman record of 11 touchdowns.

Robinson is an early education major who is from Concord, N.C.

He has a younger brother (Cody Robinson) who also plays for GSU, as well as an older sister. that can truly understand the type of pressure we (quarterbacks) face day to day," said Robinson.

Together the two have completed 63 of 109 pass attempts

Dawson is GSU's senior slotback who has amazed fans with his speed and agility for years. Dawson's athletic accolades are numerous but the latest addition to the list is breaking a stadium record with an 85-yard punt return. Also during the second half Dawson reached 768 career punt return yards.

Dawson has the ability to take punishment and the talent and

With all of Dawson's athletic honors, it would be easy just to see Dawson as an electrifying playmaker. However, Dawson is more than just an athlete. He has also shown that he excels in the classroom. Dawson is a justice studies major with 3.02 GPA.

Dawson's plans include law school, and during his off time he

GSU travels to Johnson City to take on ETSU Buccaneers

By Carolyn Wynn
Staff Writer

This weekend the Eagles will leave on a seven-hour journey to Johnson City Tenn. for the Saturday game against the Buccaneers of East Tennessee State University.

The Buccaneers are led by Head Coach Mike Cavan. Cavan is a graduate of University of Georgia. He is in his fourth season as head coach and has an overall record of 17-23 at ETSU. Last year the Buccaneers ended the season 6-5, and 5-3 in the conference.

ETSU is currently 1-6 overall, and 1-3 in the Southern Conference.

This match-up is the fifth time the two teams have competed against each other. Within the series, GSU has won three of those five times with only one of those times being in Johnson City.

ETSU plays in Memorial Center, built in 1977, the stadium seats approximately 12,000 and the field is astro-turf.

This week the Buccaneers are coming off a loss to Furman.

"Made some costly mistakes inside the Red Zone, the 20-yard line," Cavan said.

Last week the Buccaneers gave Furman three first downs on penalties alone. In total ETSU received nine penalties, had one missed field goal, and a fumble. The Buccaneers have also only gotten inside the 20-yardline 20 times in the past seven games.

Even with ETSU's record, this team can not be underestimated. They were successful 75 percent of the time that the Buccaneers did move inside their opponents' 20-yard line.

They also have All-Conference players James Russell, a defensive end, a first team selection and Donnie Abraham, linebacker and a second team selection. The Buccaneers also have a strong special teams with Cory Collins, a 5'11, 195-pound senior punter who is ranked fourth in the Southern Conference.

Cavan also credits Jerry Chapman with being another reason for the success of their special teams.

The Eagles have not been as successful on the road previously, and have been equally unsuccessful playing on astro-turf.

However, after coming off the second of two Eagles shut-outs in a 27-0 victory over The Citadel, GSU has the momentum to continue success in conference play whether at home or on the road.

Deep Thoughts

Anytime I see something screech across a room and latch onto someone's neck, and the guy screams and tries to get it off, I have to laugh, because what IS that thing.

What's Happenin' By Tracey Varnell

As a fourth-year student here at beautiful GSU, I've noticed quite a few things about students. You can tell almost everything about a person by the way they act. The older I get, the more apparent age differences become.

You know, you can always pick the freshman out of the bunch. They're always obnoxious. You can always tell that they've just squirmed out from under mom and dad's tight grasp and they don't know how to act.

The most annoying freshman will waltz around under the impression that the world revolves around them. They assume that you know who they are, what their name is, and that everyone gives a crap about what they think.

BUT the really annoying freshman is the one who thinks that college is all about parties and getting laid. Their lifestyles consume them to such a great extent that they forget exactly why they're here. Yeah, they're real cool ... until they have to go back home to mom and pops because they flunk out.

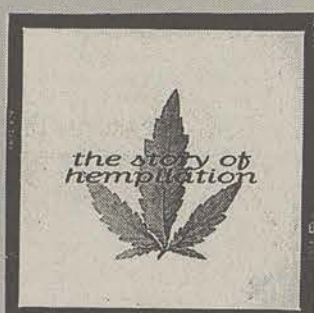

It's sad to see people waste their money on absolutely nothing. Some of us could use it if your parents want to donate the money you waste to a worthy cause. The point is, if you don't want to learn, please spare us all.

Here's a prime scenario: You go to hear a guest speaker. You are interested in the topic. By this time, you have entrenched yourself into the department of your choice. You have come to support your field of study, the guest speaker, and the faculty that worked so diligently to arrange this speaker. The speaker gives his lecture and calls for questions from the floor.

Suddenly, a loud roar erupts from the back of the room and engulfs the whole auditorium. You turn to see what the problem is and realize that all the idiots are quickly flooding out of the room. They don't just walk out quietly. Instead, they stand and chit-chat about what Bob and Theo or whoever are doing later.

You would like to have heard the questions that were proposed because you have questions of your own that might have gotten answered through the Q & A process. But no, all the freshmen who are REQUIRED to come to the lecture are yapping and hanging out in the back of the auditorium.

This is the most rude, most egotistical, most ignorant action a student can do. It proves to your teachers and your peers that you are totally incompetent. So do us all a favor, stay home. If you have to come for your class, at least have the brains to keep your mouth shut.

Hempilation Capricorn Records

By Chris Henry

Staff Writer

Hempilation is the newest advocate in a series of controversial attempts to promote the legalization of marijuana. Artists with similar interests in NORML such as The Black Crowes, Cypress Hill, Blues Traveler, Sacred Reich, Ian Moore, 311, and many others have come together in an explosive cry for "true hemp awareness."

One of the most phenomenal and outstanding aspects of this recording project was the merging on the business end of Capricorn records and NORML as a collective influence on marijuana legalization.

NORML refers to "The National organization for the Reform of Marijuana Laws." The views of this organization, although well-known throughout the underground music community, are usually gravely misunderstood by many people with closed minds or dissimilar interests. NORML does not advocate the use of marijuana nor do they claim that marijuana is a harmless substance.

What they do believe is this: • Marijuana is a "sister-drug" to alcohol and should be legally accessible to adults who choose to consume it within their own homes.

• Marijuana should be "immediately rescheduled" so that physicians can prescribe it to sick and dying medical patients.

• And that the United States government should allow farmers to cultivate hemp as a staple crop.

NORML's latest press release best explains their position on marijuana reform ... "We are not trying to get people to smoke marijuana, but rather to get the government to stop arresting those who do."

As far as the music goes, I personally found it was far past my expectations. This isn't just another cheesy compilation CD thrown together just to make a buck. The music on this CD was well-chosen. Not only did it bring out some of the best talent within the groups participating in this venture, but spoke well of the cause.

A few of the "high" points of this CD would definitely have to be 311's "Who's Got the Herbs," Blues Traveler's "I Want to Take You Higher," Widespread Panic's "And it Stoned Me" and Sacred Reich's speedy rendition of an old Ozzy tune "Sweet Leaf." If I were to rate this CD on a scale of 1 to 10, I would give it a 9.

'America the beautiful'

By Scott Morris

Staff Writer

"The River's Edge" is a rough slice of life from a rotten fruit known as middle America.

The story starts with a boy tossing his sister's doll off a bridge to its demise in a river. The boy, Tim, sees a lurking creature standing over a naked girl's body. The girl, Jamie, was killed by John, her boyfriend. He killed her, as he almost proudly tells his friends, because she was talking trash about his (dead) mother.

Tim's older brother, Matt, was well-played by Keanu Reeves. This was back in his pre-Bill and Ted days. The director was smart enough not to let him talk too much, and if he did not get altogether that insightful.

An entire group of Jamie's juvenile delinquent friends went to see her dead body by the river bank. Her pale eyes stared each and every one of them right back in their eyes. What do they feel? Is there a feeling that should go along with the death of a friend? They felt nothing.

Lane, one of the aforementioned youths, was portrayed by Crispin Glover. Lane had twisted this entire episode into some sort of Stand By Me-esque loyalty test. He thought that they should be doing all they can to save John from the electric chair. Each of the youths went through the inner battle of either telling the authority figures, whom they hate and do not respect, or to let their friend's death go without justice served.

One of the girls in the group, Clarissa, hooks up with Matt one night. They realize that Lane is not only trying to control the entire group's thoughts and actions, but what he wants them to do is aid and abet a future felon. They decide to break off from Lane's logic.

EXTRA! EXTRA! Get your lust here!

By Tracey Varnell

Arts and Entertainment Editor

Warning: Contains Adult Themes. Theater Performance is presenting "Les Liaisons Dangereuses" from Wednesday, Oct. 25 until Saturday, Oct. 28.

"Les Liaisons Dangereuses" is written by Christopher Hampton. It is described by its current cast as being "filled with trickery, deceptions, revenge, love, lust, and passionate warfare." This play is a definite must-see for anyone who can respect quality entertainment.

"Les Liaisons Dangereuses" is set in middle 18th century France at the height of aristocracy just before the French Revolution.

The lead female role, Madame Merteuil, is executed by Laura Middlebrooks. The lead male role of Le Vicomte de Valmont will be played by Christian Medovich. Madame Tourvel will be played by Kim Barbin, and the character Chevelier Danceny will be assumed by Kiley Kail Kemp.

The two lead characters are involved in a love affair based strictly on manipulation. Basically, all the characters are constantly calculating who their next lover will be and how they will get to that person. This play is loaded to the hilt with subplots and lines with multiple meanings.

The play gained familiarity in the late 80s when Hollywood took hold of it in the movie "Dangerous Liaisons." It starred John Malcovich, Glenn Close, Keanu Reeves, and Michelle Pfeiffer.

The novelty of this production is that its theme of sex and power is still relevant to our society and is, in fact, identical to our times.

"Les Liaisons Dangereuses" is being directed by Gary Dartt. It will be performed in McCroan Auditorium, located on the lower floor of the Administration Building on Sweetheart Circle. Tickets are sold at the ticket office on Herty Drive and at the door. The doors will open at 8 p.m. but come early to assure yourself a ticket.

Medovich, who will be performing his last show, said, "I couldn't ask for a better show to leave with, especially with the talent of my fellow actors and director. I'd like to give special thanks to Gary Dartt and Bill Fields."

Medovich designed the set, and Astrid Burnett is in charge of lighting. The music will feature many classical pieces.

So, come out and do so early to get a good seat to see this lust-filled shocker. GSU's Theater Performance has a great reputation for putting on smashing productions.

MOVIE IN REVIEW

'Strange Days' — far enough into the future?

Eric Bray

Staff Writer

The premise behind "Strange Days" is not all that strange. It's a science-fiction movie set just a few years into the future.

"Strange Days" depicts the last hours before the end of the millennium in which the world seems to have hit those final stages of decrepitude before going out with a bang.

Ralph Fiennes ("Schindler's List," "Quiz Show") portrays Lenny Nero, a shady opportunistic street-hustler who peddles a gizmo allowing users to experience other people's pre-recorded sensations. Through the device he comes into possession of images exposing corruption in the Los Angeles Police Department and the activities of a psychopathic murderer/rapist, which are linked in some confusing way.

The concept of this machine is made real through the use of camera perspective. It also shows great insight (thanks to writer James Cameron). Not only does it take the idea of virtual reality to a new level, but its use as a futuristic drug is realistic, indicating how technology with benefits often winds up being exploited for thrills.

The only problem is it's too advanced for the near future. We're going to need some drastic breakthroughs before the end of the year to achieve the sophistication in "Strange Days."

This is not the only aspect I consider incongruous with my own predictions for the year 2000. The film holds a pessimistic view regarding the world's sociologistreet-rat role of Nero.

Angela Bassett ("Waiting to Exhale," "Vampire in Brooklyn") costars as Fiennes' butchy cohort. She gives emotion as well as some good butt-kickin'.

She takes more beatings than Ike Turner gave her in "What's Love Got to Do With It" in one scene that is a thinly-veiled rip-off of the Rodney King incident.

Juliette Lewis ("Natural Born Killers," "Cape Fear") offers gratuitous nude shots as well as a shameful rendition of P.J. Harvey's "Rid of Me."

In retrospect, I could have starred in that role. Not only do I have a better singing voice, but I've got bigger boobs, as well.

Other sleazy roles are filled by the gravelly-voiced Michael Wincott ("Robin Hood," "The Crow") and Tom Sizemore ("Natural Born Killers," "True Romance").

To create the illusion of New Year's Eve, the producers charged 17,000 people $10 admission into an actual rave party and filmed it live, telling them to act as if it were New Year's Eve, 1999. The effect was not only quite realistic but profitable when you think about it.

NOT ONLY DO I HAVE A BETTER SINGING VOICE, BUT I'VE GOT BIGGER BOOBS, AS WELL.

cal direction.

This movie suffers from the problem most sci-fi films exhibit: it's not set far enough into the future.

This flaw may be credited to the fact that he wrote the concept in the mid-80s.

Fiennes was another disappointment. He's an excellent actor, but his graceful, delicate demeanor does not suit the grungy,

Auxiliary Affairs."

Plans are currently underway to change the plan of payment in other areas of Auxiliary Services, such as parking and food services.

"One thing we're looking at is sending a list of fees in a registered letter that the students would have to sign for," Davis said.

Students have mixed views regarding the new process. Lange Bone, a senior psychology major from Augusta, said that she thinks that there are good and bad points.

"I think it's good that they are trying to help the registration process because I know that I'm always having to run around during registration, but I think it might keep some of the students from going to the Health Center because of lack of money," Bone said.

Davis said that so far, the report from the Health Center is good.

"We want the students to know that we really are trying to solve their problems with registration," he said.
