Albany State students discontent with rebuilding

The Associated Press

ALBANY, Ga. — Albany State College students are complaining about a lack of progress in rebuilding of the college after last year's flood.

Barry Fullerton, a vice chancellor of the University System of Georgia, met with about a dozen student leaders and promised to persuade "someone to come down here and put a sledge hammer to some of these buildings very soon."

The students said Chancellor Stephen Portch told them Sept. 20 that the demolition of McIntosh Hall, a flooded dormitory, would begin within seven days.

But nothing has happened since, said Vincent Charles, a junior and yearbook editor. "If nothing happens by January, (Portch) is going to see the students," Charles said.

There were other complaints, some of which the students said predate the 1994 flood. They said:

- "Ghetto" conditions prevail around mobile homes used to house male students in the wake of the flood.

- The library, ASC's newest building, doesn't seem to have many new books and offers only limited access to the Internet.

- The school newspaper publishes only four times a year and the school yearbook published last year for the first time in six years.

Fullerton said he will take the students' concerns back to Portch. He said they will be used to help ensure a successful leadership transition next June, when ASC President Billy C. Black and Vice President for Student Affairs C.W. Grant step down.

Hyer makes it official

By Ashley Hunt
News Editor

SGA president Lee Hyer formally announced his resignation as student government president to the student senate last week.

Hyer read the press release announcing his resignation in a shaky voice to the senate and cited lack of course availability and a job opportunity with Congressman Saxby Chambliss as his reasons for vacating the presidency.

Hyer said he was 10 hours short of completing his degree and that of the two classes needed for graduation, only one was going to be taught in winter quarter, which he said would allow him to pursue only five hours a quarter.

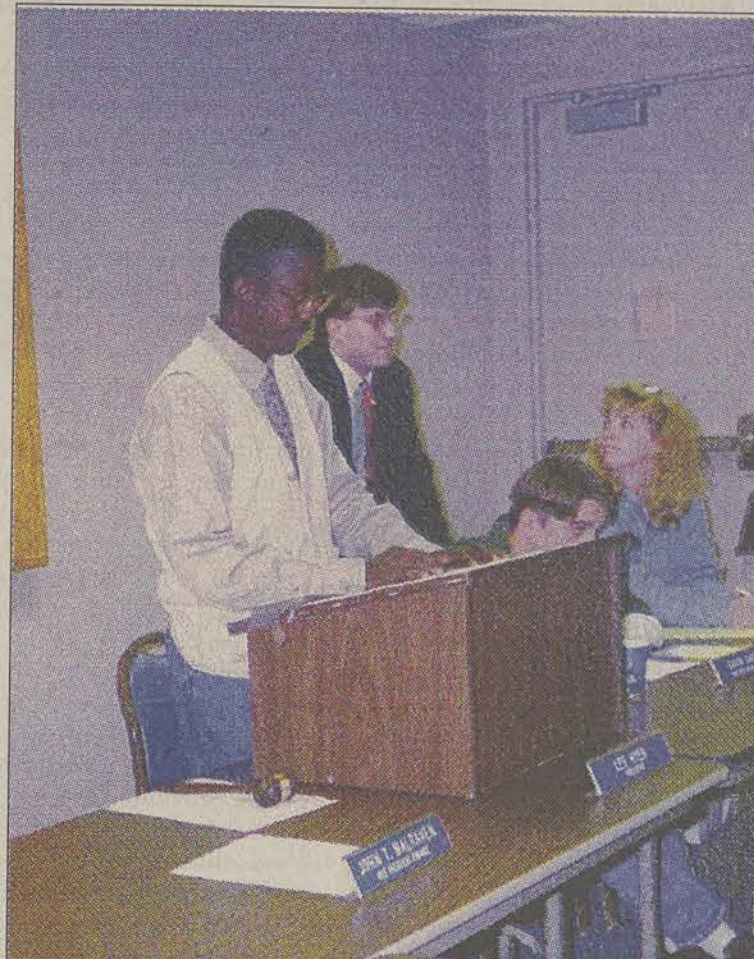

Hyer said that he could pursue both classes winter quarter as a transient student at Mercer University in his hometown of Macon.

"Effective Jan. 1, 1996 I will no longer serve as your president. My successor and I will use the remaining time of 1995 as a period of transition in order to forge an aggressive agenda for this organization to pursue winter and spring quarters," Hyer wrote in his letter to the student senate. "Writing this letter is perhaps one of the hardest that I have written in my entire career to date. I hope that you will share my optimistic outlook and approach the coming year with enthusiasm."

SGU President Nicholas Henry said Monday that Hyer's performance as SGA president was "excellent."

"I'm disappointed he's leaving early. I'm particularly pleased with his efforts to involve more students more deeply in the lives of both the campus and the community," Henry said.

Executive Vice President Carlton "Slick" Dickerson will serve as the interim president, but said he will not pursue the permanent role of president.

"In light of President Hyer's resignation, I have assumed the role of interim president while remaining executive vice president," Dickerson wrote in a letter to the senate. "In maintaining the position of executive vice president, I am not seeking the permanent role of president and there will be an opening for the position."

The executive SGA board will accept applications for the position until Nov. 28 at noon.

Dickerson said the board will review the applications and selections for the interviews.

Following the interview process, a new president will be chosen and confirmed at the Nov. 29 meeting.

A resolution proposed by Hyer was the creation of a student government alumni organization that was passed by the student senate.

The resolution calls for the 1995-96 student government association to create the SGAA for the "purpose of fostering contact with past members of the student government association."

"This was my brainchild," Hyer said. "I know people who have graduated from Georgia Southern who have been members of the executive committee who perhaps would like to see an event every Homecoming just for people who are members of the Student Government Association. I thought it might be a good avenue for us to pursue to perhaps raise some funds for the scholarships we give and things like that."

The SGA president will appear at the Hyer ceremony. Please see HYER, page 12

CLASS wants to give back to community

By Karen C. Newsome
Staff Writer

The College of Liberal Arts and Social Sciences (CLASS) and CLASS ACT, the college's community organization, are offering five receptions and discussions with artists and speakers as part of their Community Appreciation Series.

These discussions are offered to thank area residents for supporting the university. This series, designed to promote community awareness and involvement in cultural events offered at the college, is the result of a recommendation made by CLASS ACT.

The CLASS ACT committee is comprised of community members and is chaired by Jeffrey L. Buller, associate dean of the College of Liberal Arts and Social Sciences.

Buller said the formation of the committee was the brainchild of CLASS Dean Roosevelt Newson and was one of the first ideas implemented after his appointment to the position of Dean last year. Of the 35 to 40 community members invited to join CLASS ACT, 20 accepted and are actively involved. The committee meets the last Wednesday of each month.

"Our members include a cross-section of townspeople from business owners to employees," Buller said. "For example, Nancy Welch of The Statesboro Herald is a member and contributes great ideas concerning advertising and promoting events."

In addition, CLASS ACT members meet with candidates for faculty positions to encourage interest in Statesboro as a place to live, focus on the enhancement of the relationship between the university and the community, pass out brochures in places of business and are good outlets for the advertisement of events offered at the college to which the public is invited.

During the "phenomenal Day for Southern" in September, the community contributed an unprecedented $680,560 to the University Foundation and Southern Boosters.

As a result, CLASS ACT is sponsoring a series of five special events to "enhance the cultural activities offered," Buller said.

The Community Appreciation Series was kicked off Nov. 14, with a "Meet the Artists" reception in Foy Gallery 303 following a lecture-recital by music professors Natalia da Roza, pianist, and Gregory W. Harwood, musicologist.

The next special community event is scheduled for Jan. 11, 1996.

It will be a "Meet the Speaker" reception immediately following a Social Sciences lecture by Larry Platt entitled "Those Who Grieve Are Not Healed."

"Our college wishes to say thank you to Statesboro and the surrounding area by offering this series," Newson said.

GSU beats Troy State to advance in playoffs

By Ronnie Swinford
Sports Editor

TROY, Ala.—GSU used a late field goal and an even later pass interception to prevail over the Troy State Trojans 24-21 in the first round of the 1-AA playoffs this weekend.

The Eagles were able to drive down and score the winning field goal with 1:48 left in the game. The 18-yard field goal by Eric Meng was his third try of the quarter and his first hit. But the play of the drive was a 27-yard completion from slotback Dexter Dawson to Maurice Bing, the completion came on fourth and nine and gave the Eagles a first and goal from the eight-yard line.

But the hero of the game had to be Rob Stockton, who with 10 seconds left in the game dove in front of an intended receiver and stole the pass and the win for the Eagles.

GSU ground along with 264 yards rushing. Troy State who was third in the country in rushing offense, averaging 271 per game was held to 248 for the game. The Eagles only completed one pass but it was a big one, and Troy State had 127 yards passing on 8 of 16.

The real story of the game was turnovers. Troy State turned the ball over four times and the Eagles made 17 points out of the Trojan mistakes. The Eagles are 14th in the nation in turnover margin with a 1.0 rating. That means they take two away for every one they give up.

GSU had no turnovers in the game.

The trend in the first half was Troy State running the ball down GSU's neck. The Trojans had seven rushing plays that gained at least 10 yards in the first half. But they could not convert their 178 rushing yards in the first half into any more than 14 points.

The Eagles offensive game plan never changed throughout the game as they continued to run the option. They were trying to out quick the bigger Troy State front and they were fairly successful in their efforts, 148 yards rushing in the half.

The second half was a defensive battle between two hard hitting defenses. Both defensive teams bent but would only break for touchdowns once each in the half. GSU was able to get into field goal possession three times but squandered two of those attempts. GSU gained 143 in the second half, and Troy put up 158 in the losing effort.

"Both teams came out and gave every thing they had," Troy State Head Coach Larry Blakeney said. "They found out how to stop our downhill sweep in the second half and that was the difference in the game."

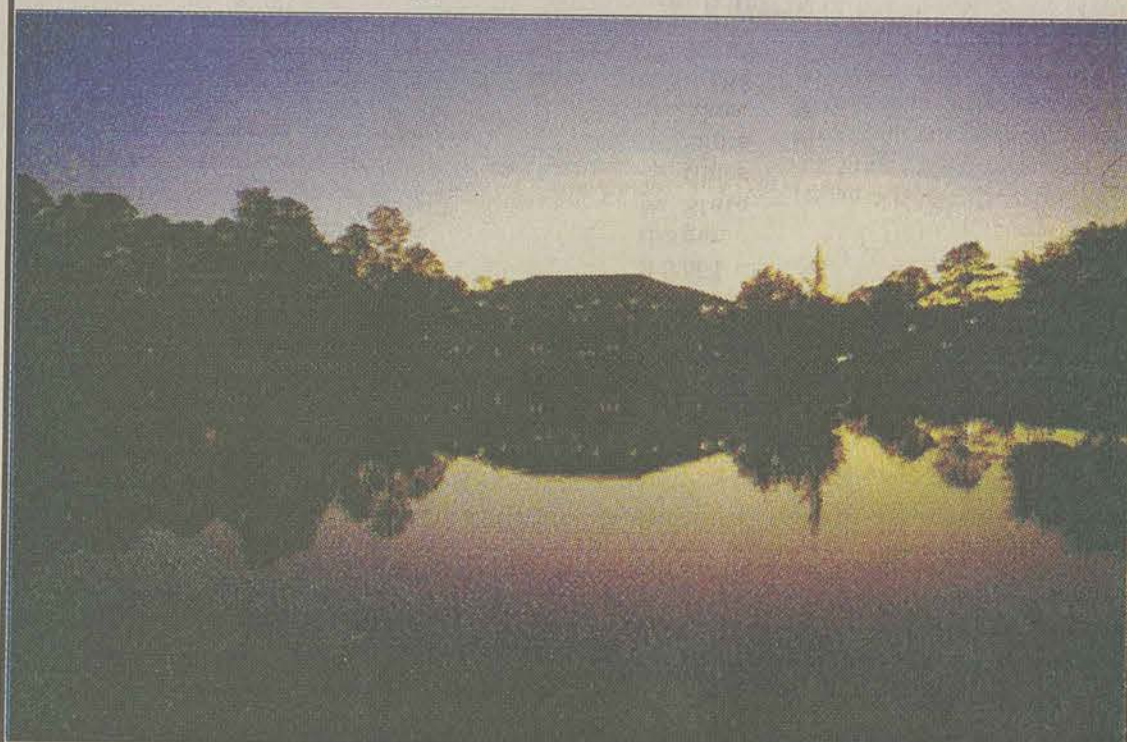

"We will go anywhere to get to play one more game," Head Coach Tim Stowers said. "I gave the game ball to Rob (Stockton), but our whole team deserves a game ball for this win."

"When we lose it will be my last game," Stockton said. "I just don't want to leave yet."

"Our whole team played well," senior slotback Dexter Dawson said. "We just don't want to lose, because when we lose it will all be over for the seniors."

GSU will face Montana this weekend, and with a win will face the winner of the Stephen F. Austin and Appalachian State game which will be held this weekend in Boone, N.C.

GSU chosen for Best Buddies chapter

By Meredith Whitt
Staff Writer

GSU has been selected to join the ranks of more than 180 other colleges and universities in the Best Buddies Colleges program, and hopes to become an official chapter on-campus winter quarter.

Schools are chosen based on the interest and dedication of students, said Mary Nicoletti, college "buddy" director.

Victoria Zwald, a faculty advisor in the early childhood department, was the one who brought GSU to the attention of Best Buddies International, she said.

"Best Buddies International seeks to improve the lives of those suffering with mental retardation through one-on-one interaction with dedicated members of the community as well as helping to find employment for those with developmental disabilities," Nicoletti said.

The organization first began in 1987 after the founder, Anthony Kennedy Shriver, noticed the positive interaction that existed between college students and those with developmental disabilities in the Special Olympics, she said. It has now expanded to over 180 schools and 8,000 members.

The Disabilities Awareness Day this past spring was the first chance GSU students had to learn about the program besides word of mouth. They accumulated over 60 signatures of students interested in the program.

All students involved in the program have agreed to a year-long commitment to the organization.

Georgia Medicaid funding could decrease

By David Pace
The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Georgia won't have to ante up as much of its own money to qualify for the maximum federal Medicaid grant under the Republican plan to revamp the health care program for the poor and disabled.

But if the state spends just the legal minimum to qualify for the maximum federal grant, overall Medicaid funding in Georgia over the next seven years would be $11.3 billion less or 37 percent less than under current law, according to a new analysis by an advocacy group.

The study, released this week by the Center on Budget and Policy Priorities, is the first to examine how the $163 billion in Medicaid savings built into the Republican balanced-budget plan could affect state Medicaid spending.

"There has been so much focus on the federal cuts, but the state cuts are potentially just as serious," said Richard Kogan, one of the authors of the study.

Federal Medicaid spending in Georgia over the next seven years under the GOP plan would be $6.1 billion less, or 34 percent less, than under current law, according to the study. State spending at the minimum required level would be $5.2 billion less, or 42 percent less, than current levels.

The GOP Medicaid plan is subject to change when the Clinton administration and congressional leaders sit down after Thanksgiving to negotiate a final balanced-budget plan.

Clinton has made protecting Medicaid one of the priorities of his budget agenda.

The GOP plan, as passed by the House and Senate last week-end, would require that Georgia put up just 53.3 cents for every $1 it receives in federal Medicaid funding. Currently, the state must spend 60.8 cents on Medicaid for every $1 it receives from Washington.

Georgia is one of 36 states that could spend fewer of their own dollars on Medicaid while still drawing their full federal share under the planned Republican Medicaid overhaul. No state would have its matching rate reduced.

If every state elected to put in the bare minimum, states could reduce their now-projected spending on Medicaid by up to $257 billion over the next seven years, on top of the $163 billion in planned federal savings, the study said.

Kogan said the main reason state Medicaid spending could fall so dramatically is that unlike the current Medicaid law, which provides federal matching funds for any eligible state Medicaid expenditure, the GOP plan would cap the federal Medicaid block grant to each state each year.

Georgia's Republican lawmakers maintain that the federal Medicaid grants under the GOP plan would be more than adequate to fashion a health care program for its poor and disabled residents, since most Medicaid rules will be eliminated.

Miller wants to privatize

The Associated Press

ATLANTA — The governor is plunging ahead with plans to turn over numerous state operations to private contractors, a move that makes some legislators uneasy.

When Gov. Zell Miller formed his commission on privatizing state services seven months ago, he suggested its recommendations would require legislative approval.

Now Miller says some of the recommendations can be done without the General Assembly's permission.

"There are a lot of them that are going to require legislation," Miller told The Atlanta Journal-Constitution this week. "But what I can do administratively, I will. That's what a chief executive does. He executes."

Miller said privatization could mean budget savings that would help pay for a tax cut, higher teacher salaries and expected losses from federal budget cuts.

"When you take all those together, it makes for a very, very tight budget," Miller said. "Right now I've been spending all my time hunched over that table trying to make those numbers work, and they won't work. I can't balance the budget without getting some help ... from the private sector."

Some people want the process to slow down.

"This train is moving so fast we missed a couple of stops," said Tyrone Freeman, director of the Georgia State Employees Union. "Why is (the governor) not permitting the General Assembly to look at these things?"

The union, with the encouragement of at least three lawmakers, won a four-month temporary restraining order preventing Miller from privatizing the 402-bed Georgia War Veterans Nursing Home in Milledgeville.

The privatization commission staff is moving forward with bid specifications on the contract to run the home.

"It's our contention that the judge does not have jurisdiction," said Joe Tanner, the commission's executive director.

Tanner says the home, run by Central State Hospital, would continue to serve veterans, but lawmakers in middle Georgia remain uneasy.

In addition to the veterans home, Miller appears likely to push ahead with privatizing Lake Lanier Islands, five state park lodges, a conference center at Stone Mountain and the processing of automobile titles.

"Before we turn the whole operation of state government over to a bunch of people that are profit-minded, I think we ought to look long and hard at it," said Rep. Ken Birdsong, D-Gordon.

George Israel, chairman of the privatization commission, said the commission was making an effort to include lawmakers.

But Sen. Floyd Griffin Jr., D-Milledgeville, said he learned that the commission's staff was planning to recommend the privatization of the war veterans home last month.

"How can the governor expect me to support a major item like this ... if I don't even know how they derived the study to justify it?" said Griffin.

Kingston upsets women over Hooters speech

By David Pace
The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — In a week of partisan confrontations over the future of the federal government, Georgia Rep. Jack Kingston had his own showdown with women lawmakers upset over his speech defending the Hooters restaurant chain.

Kingston, a Savannah Republican, took to the House floor last Friday to blast the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission for its efforts to force Hooters to hire men as well as women to wait on tables.

"They are saying that Hooters needs to teach employees to be more sensitive to men's needs," he said. "They are sensitive to men's needs. That is why they are making millions of dollars. There is nothing that men like more than an abundance of Buffalo wings and breasts."

Rep. Pat Schroeder, D-Colo., said Tuesday that when she and several other women members of Congress complained to Kingston the next day about his remark, Kingston insisted he was talking about chicken breasts.

"Yeah, sure," Schroeder said. "We didn't come to town on the turnip truck."

"I think most women members would find (the comment) distasteful," she said. "If we flipped it and we were getting up and talking that way about males, I think they would be very upset about it."

In a telephone interview Tuesday, Kingston defended his remarks, saying none of the women who work on his staff found anything offensive in the speech.

He also insisted that Schroeder's attack on House Speaker Newt Gingrich as a "cry baby" was far more offensive than his speech. Schroeder's comments were in response to Gingrich's complaint that President Clinton had not treated him with proper respect during the flight to the funeral of slain Israeli Prime Minister Yitzhak Rabin.

"I don't think it was in bad taste," Kingston said, accusing Schroeder of trying to impose "thought control and political correctness" on members of Congress.

Inmate asks judge
for longer sentence

The Associated Press

BISMARCK — A prison inmate, fearful of being released penniless into frigid January weather, has asked a judge to tack another three months onto his sentence.

"I am likely to freeze or starve. I feel I am being put into a position to commit more crimes just to survive," Thomas Mallum wrote in a letter to South Central District Judge Thomas Schneider.

Mallum, who is scheduled to be released Jan. 7, asked Schneider to add another two to three months to his sentence, so "I can be released in better weather, under better conditions, because I will more than likely be homeless."

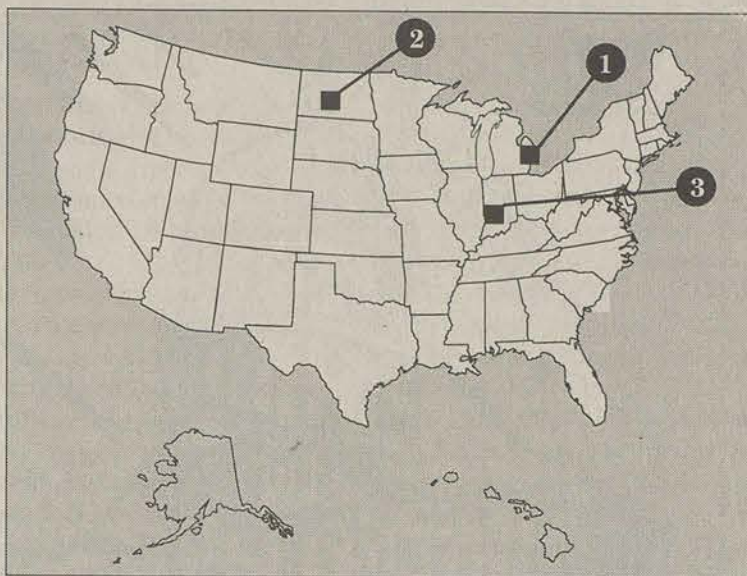

Mallum said he has just enough money to last only a few days.

Schneider turned down the request because Mallum's sentence cannot be lengthened without another conviction.

But the judge posted a copy of the letter on a courthouse bulletin board, scrawling a one-word comment: "WOW!"

Mallum, 32, is serving an 18-month sentence for Morton County burglary convictions.

He has a number of prior convictions for sex offenses, most of which involved indecent exposure.

Man carries son's
corpse to the park

By Tom Hays
The Associated Press

NEW YORK — The father took his 4-year-old son to his grandfather's house. Then it was off to the park, where they sat side-by-side on a bench.

Throughout, the son never stirred.

The reason: His father allegedly had beaten him to death before they even left their home.

Eduardo Perez, 27, "basically was carrying a dead child around for four hours," police Capt. James Campbell said.

The father told authorities he didn't mean to kill his son Joseph — that he only knocked him down with a pillow — and that he thought the boy was sleeping during their journey through the Bronx.

Perez said he finally realized something was wrong after he propped the boy up on a park bench, sat next to him and fell asleep.

When Perez awoke, he discovered Joseph had fallen off the bench. The father then called police.

An autopsy, however, showed that several blows to the head had separated the boy's spine and bruised his brain, said Ellen Borakove, a spokeswoman for the medical examiner's office. Fists, not an accidental fall, appeared to have caused the fatal injuries, Campbell added.

Investigators said they uncovered no evidence that the child had been beaten in the past, or that Perez was abusing drugs or alcohol at the time.

An unemployed data processor, Perez lived with the boy and his mother, Laura Dauphin, 27, in a basement apartment. The father regularly cared for his son on weekdays while the mother worked, police said.

Perez was again left in charge of Joseph on Monday.

He told investigators that while straightening the home at about 11 a.m., he accidentally hit the boy in the face with what was described as a heavy, canvas "military type" pillow, Campbell said.

Perez was arrested and charged with murder.

Hilo morgue cremates the wrong body

HILO — Police are investigating an incident in which the wrong body was cremated.

Clifford Dodo, vice president of Dodo Mortuary, complained to the Department of Pathology at Hilo Hospital.

The error was discovered when family members, expecting to view their deceased father, discovered another body in his casket, Dodo said.

Somehow, the body of Heiji Muneno, 77, whose family had ordered cremation, was mistakenly identified and tagged as that of Zacharias Maneja, 97, whose family had arranged for a casket burial.

Apparently Maneja's body was cremated by mistake, and Muneno's body was preserved for the funeral. Family members are awaiting assurance from hospital officials about the positive identification of cremated ashes.

Hyer's resignation makes good president a quitter

The news of SGA President Lee Hyer's resignation, which becomes effective Jan. 1, met mixed reviews from students.

While Hyer undoubtedly did more to bring student government to the forefront than past presidents, some think of him as a quitter and an opportunist now, only out for his own best interests.

But he did make quite a contribution.

Jack Nolen, GSU's vice president for student affairs, said Hyer "raised the level of awareness of student government to a height we haven't experienced in many, many years."

Indeed, nobody can argue with that statement.

Beginning summer quarter, Hyer appealed to Mayor Hal Averitt to increase the lighting along Lanier Drive in an effort to increase the safety of pedestrians. He also informed him of safety threats, including alligators in the lake adjacent to Buffalo's and Players Club.

Hyer became a major advocate of the effort to keep Marvin Pittman, the laboratory school for education majors, on the GSU campus.

In response to student outrage at the proposed bike ban on the pedestrian, Hyer formed the bike safety committee to look at employing a possible alternative.

In one of his last actions as president, Hyer proposed several changes to the student government constitution. Some of the changes included allowing a major officer of a campus organization to run for an executive officer position of SGA, making specific regulations for SGA elections and allowing executive officers to hold an internship, co-op, or student-teach during their terms.

Hyer also established the Student Government Alumni Association in order to create a network of former SGA members.

Not only did Hyer bring student government to an all-time high in awareness and activity, he also crusaded for the students' voice in local politics. Hyer founded Students for Statesboro, a group focused on getting students involved in local government and instrumental in the election of graduate student Cory Andrews to the Statesboro City Council.

Despite all of Hyer's sparkling accomplishments, however, he might now be remembered not as the SGA president who did the most but as the SGA president who quit.

It seems unfortunate to tarnish such a record of hard work and campus involvement.

We, at The George-Anne, wish Lee Hyer well in his new position as campaign manager for U.S. Rep. Saxby Chambliss, but hope he learns to be a bit more dependable.

If the new SGA president works as hard in the remaining two quarters of the term as Hyer has worked these past two quarters, then SGA will surely continue to be an active and vital force on this campus.

Sen. Nunn's exhaustion is disappointing

CHRISTOPHER COLE

EDITOR

The two-party system in the south crashed and burned last month when Sam Nunn ejected himself from the cockpit.

Realistically, Sen. Nunn was the only copilot left who truly had the expertise to fly the unfriendly skies of modern politics and keep that shaky bird of southern equilibrium in the air. And when he's gone, the billowing breezes of change will hit that flight harder than even the worst windshear on a USAir commuter jet.

And regardless of which party you may find attractive, if either, you would be missing the poignancy of this moment if you didn't hear the death knell of an entire era. You're also not a true southerner if you cannot see what's happening here.

The southern conservative Democrat has become a virtual Tyrannosaurus Rex for our time, a wild beast who always had a piece of turf during his heyday but has now been relegated to the fossils.

And his disappearance is unlikely to bring any benefit to the Republican or Democratic parties or the American people (notice those are three different categories) — in fact, this will only work to their detriment in the long haul.

Southerners have always had a tough time balancing two parties at once because there is such a cohesion of values among people of this region. You look at California or New York — or even the clone they have in Florida (people campaign for NYC mayor in Miami Beach ... go figure), and you see something altogether different. The attitude isn't the same — divisions are more acceptable and accepted than it is here.

That makes the south unique to a degree, but not better. It really just creates a facade of unity that belies deep divisions philosophically, as in any other region. People like Nunn allowed the two-party system to thrive while appealing to the general interests of his constituency.

Nunn might have switched to the Republican party at any time during his Senate career with only a minimum of flak back home — that's what Strom Thurmond did in South Carolina, and look how long he's lasted! I could list tons of people who successfully moved from conservative Democrat to Republican. The trend, while fascinating, hasn't always been good for the country.

Even if, at times, Nunn's values didn't tow the party line in Washington, his presence there contributed to a balance of power which is healthy for American democracy. People drone endlessly about the suffocating gridlock of national politics, but the alternative is a dangerous one. It is never safe for one party to seize absolute control, and that's not what the framers of our Constitution intended.

In my view, the government of England is inferior to ours because of its power imbalances; that's why ours has prospered and they're still wearing those funny wigs.

We're supposed to have a two-party system, or at least two branches of government with opposing ideas, so that extremism can never flourish.

I have a tendency to appreciate what Republicans are accomplishing right now, but I'm not ready to sacrifice the principles of our government for the short-term political interest.

Look at this rationally, no matter which party you support. After the Civil War, Republicans had complete control over the north and Democrats ran the south (except when Reconstruction intervened). For many, many years Democrats controlled the south and you couldn't get elected if you were part of that "Yankee party." I've heard horror stories about southern GOP groups that could meet easily in a closet (and usually, that was the safest place for them to meet!).

Even when it became clear during New Deal liberalism that Democrats were no longer compatible with southern values, it was almost impossible to elect a southern Republican. People were simply trained to vote Democrat. That damaged the south and the country because people never got any relief from big government.

The tables have finally turned, and the south is a GOP stronghold. But will the Republicans also split into factions and divide the nation? Time reveals all.

Sen. Nunn's exhaustion from the political scene is disappointing. Perhaps his time came and went. Forgive him for upsetting the balances.

Racism is a two-way street ... let's stop teaching it

AMANDA CREWS

MANAGING EDITOR

All the people who say that racism is a persistent and growing problem in America are right, but they neglect to point out two facts. First, racism is not a monopoly controlled by white people. Rather, racism is a two-way street. Anyone can be guilty of it. Second, there is a solution to the problem.

When I was about seven years old, I lived in a neighborhood where my white face was a liability. My name might as well have been Rosa Parks because I was never allowed to sit down on the school bus. My brother and I were not even able to sit in the back of the bus. If we dared to sit down anywhere, we would have been beaten within an inch of our lives. My eleven-year-old brother faced a possible gang beating from high school football players every time he stepped out the door, simply because he was white.

Some people reading this column right now may be getting their jollies out of our predicament, but this type of behavior is inexcusable. Today, tomorrow and forevermore, it is and will continue to be wrong for a person, no matter if he or she is purple, green, yellow or polka-dotted, to treat another human being in such a way.

A former roommate of mine looked at me one day and said, "I hate you because you're white and for what your white ancestors did to mine."

Some people told me I ought to be thankful for her comment. They said at least she was honest with me, instead of pretending to be my friend while hating me all the time.

Yeah, and I ought to be thankful she didn't stab me in my sleep, either. That is not the point, though.

The point is, her comment was a racist one, just as racist as anything a Klansman with a hood might say. Anyone who says she wasn't being a racist is suffering from serious delusions and should seek therapy immediately.

Had she said "I hate what your white ancestors did to mine," I would not only have understood, but I would also have agreed. I despise slavery and all of its implications. I have never been able to fathom how anyone could believe enslaving and degrading an entire race is in any way acceptable.

My problem with my ex-roommate's comment was that she directed her hatred toward me personally simply because my skin is white.

First of all, how does she know that my ancestors owned slaves? They may have been the most vehement abolitionists in the country. They might have done everything in their power to end the institution because they saw it as the utter abomination that it was. Since I have not researched my family tree, I do not even know who they were or what they stood for. How, then, can she presume to know?

Also, even if my ancestors did own slaves, how can I be held responsible? I cannot control what my immediate family (my brothers and my mother) chooses to do. How in the world can I control what my relatives did 100 years before I was born? Just because I share their skin color does not mean I condone what they did.

I know that white people today are racist. It's not something that ended with the abolition of slavery by any means. When I enter a restaurant with my three roommates and the hostess tries to seat just three of us because mine is the only white face, I know it's a problem. When I go into the jewelry store with my roommates and I am the only one the salespeople want to help because my color happens to suit them, I cannot deny the existence of racism.

There is a simple solution to this complex problem, though. Racism is a learned concept. We must stop teaching it.

If our generation would right now make a conscious decision not to teach this ignorance to our children, then our children's children won't be having this discussion.

I'm grateful to my mother for the way she raised me. I can honestly say that she raised me to be colorblind. The words "white" and "black" were not in my vocabulary. She taught me through her actions, not just her words. Of all my mother's good friends, only one was white. I then had no fears of other people growing out of my ignorance.

It is not good enough to say to our children, "Don't judge other people based on the color of their skin or their religion, etc."

If little Johnnie or little Susie never sees anyone who looks different from him or her sitting across the dinner table, then his or her parents might as well not even tell the child not to be racist in the first place. He or she will think, "Mommy and Daddy say that, but they don't really mean it."

Even worse, these kids grow up thinking they aren't racists, when for all intents and purposes, they might as well be. They talk a good game, just like their parents did, but they keep a distinct line between themselves and anyone of another race.

Having parents who are racists is not an excuse to continue to be ignorant, though. Obviously, the two-year-old child dressed up in a KKK outfit on Geraldo is solely the responsibility of the parents. At some point, though, we have to be adults and decide for ourselves if we accept what we have been taught. At that time, if we continue to be racists, then it is nobody's fault but our own.

To stop the problem, all of us, no matter what our skin color, must teach our children to be colorblind.

In a way, I know this seems like a simplistic ideal, but I need to keep believing it's possible in order to maintain my sanity.

Carter urges camp leaders to send refugees home

By Chris Tomlinson
The Associated Press

GOMA, Zaire — Former U.S. President Jimmy Carter urged Hutu refugee camp leaders Tuesday to cooperate with plans to send 6,000 refugees a day home to Rwanda and Burundi.

According to the plan drawn up by regional officials, refugees who volunteer will be returned peacefully, Carter told about 50 leaders from refugee camps around Goma.

The camp leaders, members of a new Hutu political party, The Movement for Return of Democracy in Rwanda, appeared reluctant to cooperate with any repatriation effort.

"No intimidation to prevent the return of refugees will be permitted," Carter cautioned. "I expect your full cooperation in assisting us in organizing the return of the refugees."

The camp leaders, in a joint communique they gave to Carter, demanded direct negotiations with the Rwandan government, new elections in Rwanda, and the integration of Hutus into the Rwandan army with a goal of making it 50 percent Hutu and 50 percent Tutsi. Rwanda's new government has refused to negotiate with the Hutu leaders, considering them architects of last year's genocide in Rwanda.

More than 500,000 people, mostly minority Tutsis, were butchered in the spring of 1994 before Tutsi-led rebels seized power in Rwanda, driving the Hutu-dominated government and army into exile.

Zaire, Burundi and Tanzania are host to nearly 2 million Rwandans who fled, in fear they would be killed in retaliation for the genocide. The refugees have strained relations between Rwanda and its neighbors, especially Zaire.

Earlier attempts to persuade the refugees to return home have failed, largely because of Hutu extremists who beat and killed refugees who expressed a desire to go home. The extremists also convinced many refugees that returnees were murdered by Tutsis.

Carter, accompanied by his wife, Rosalynn, met with the leaders in a large tent in the middle of the sprawling Kibumba refugee camp. About 250,000 refugees live in the camp, most in makeshift shelters of sticks and blue plastic sheeting.

He told camp leaders the repatriation plan was negotiated with Rwandan and Burundian government leaders and had the full backing of Zairian President Mobutu Sese Seko and the U.N. refugee agency.

Details of the plan will be finalized on Nov. 27 in Cairo, Carter said.

The former president also told the refugee camp leaders that the International War Crimes Tribunal for Rwanda will issue indictments soon against those involved in the massacre.

Carter said he has assurances from the Zairian president that his government will arrest and deliver anyone on the list to Arusha, Tanzania, where the tribunal will sit. He said none of those indicted will be turned over to the Rwandan and the Burundian justice systems.

During the meeting, Carter said the international community will monitor the return of refugees and assure there are no abuses by the Rwandan government.

"I am convinced that those who are not guilty can return safely," Carter told the camp leaders.

Carter was to fly to Kampala, Uganda, later Tuesday for meetings with Ugandan President Yoweri Museveni.

Mayoral election alerts the Justice Department

The Associated Press

A white candidate defeated a black for Waynesboro mayor in a controversial runoff election that has drawn attention from a federal judge and the Justice Department.

Martin Dolin, a department-store owner, defeated retired schoolteacher William Patterson 794 votes to 667, election supervisor Terry Campbell said.

The election was one of numerous municipal runoff ballots Tuesday in cities throughout Georgia. Others plan runoffs Nov. 28.

Patterson was the leading vote-getter Nov. 7 of four candidates in the general election, with 36.9 percent of the votes.

That left him a few votes shy of the 37 percent plurality he would have needed to win under an agreement reached the previous week by the city of Waynesboro, the Justice Department and the American Civil Liberties Union.

The city withdrew from the agreement the eve of the election and restored a majority-rule vote, which would have mandated a runoff even if Patterson had won 37 percent.

The Justice Department and the ACLU want U.S. District Judge Antony A. Alaimo to enforce the plurality vote.

They contend that Waynesboro's traditional majority-rule elections violate the Voting Rights Act by making it more difficult for a black candidate to win.

A ruling in the ACLU's favor would restore the general election results.

Campbell said turnout was larger than those in previous municipal elections, almost 48 percent of registered voters.

"We've really never been anywhere near that before,"

Campbell said.

Incumbents lost their seats in Darien, Brunswick and Valdosta in runoff elections while two political veterans in St. Marys survived challenges.

SNOOZE

You slept through morning classes. And now you're gonna blow off the afternoon. The sad thing is, your parents have no clue. They think you're working hard. They're convinced you're busting your butt. They're so damn proud. If only they could see you now. Lying there like a lump. Suddenly guilt sets in. You feel so low. Quickly, you reach for the phone and surprise the folks with a call. Ahhh, now you can sleep in peace.

Woman tries to increase fan club membership with article

The Associated Press

ROSWELL, Ga. — Kit Brandt Talreja hoped an article in the local newspaper promoting the Hillary Rodham Clinton Fan Club would attract new members.

It didn't. It's not surprising, considering Talreja's home sits less than a mile from east Cobb County, home of the nation's most well-known Republican, House Speaker Newt Gingrich.

"In this area, they just laugh at me," said Talreja, coordinator of the Atlanta chapter of the Democratic first lady's fan club. "None of the people around me here are members."

I still have friends, but they just don't care what I'm doing here."

Talreja's membership list has jumped to 48 — up from 19 when she took over as head of the club in March.

Most of the members live in Atlanta, but a few hail from communities in Gingrich's predominantly GOP district.

Gingrich doesn't have a fan club, unless the 119,000 or so who voted for him in his last election count.

"We have not been contacted by anyone who has shown interest in forming a fan club," said Allan Lipsett, Gingrich's spokesman. "He does have a lot of fans, though."

When asked about Gingrich, Talreja shows restraint.

"I think I would like to keep my mouth shut on Newt Gingrich."

I have no comment. So that's it."

Reflections at the end of the quarter

Well it is the end of the quarter, and what have I accomplished?

I pissed one person off real bad; he called me at home and called me a racist.

I guess that is par for the course with this job. But for the record I am not a racist: I am a journalist, there is a big difference.

Also I have heard a comment that I don't cover all the sports, like rugby, lacrosse, men's volleyball and Frisbee golf, etc.

I try to cover all sports that I can, but I have to cover official sports first, and what I can second.

I have a small staff. They work hard, but there is not enough time in the day to cover all the intercollegiate and club sports.

I like to watch rugby. It is a great game, but I don't fully understand it or have time to write about it.

I also think that lacrosse is a cool game. Other than hockey, it is the only sport that you can beat another player with a stick and get away with it. I have to admit that I don't fully understand the purpose of Frisbee golf, but then some people don't understand why I like to play golf, so live and let.

But I have left you coverage; it is under the features section.

Also, there have been some complaints about no intramural coverage.

The reason is because it is so hard to get the proper information from CR/I. They are always two days behind in there records, so when we print the standings they are usually four days old.

Now I would like to leave you this quarter with a few headlines that I wanted to run and couldn't.

Be warned: some are crude, some are slams and some are just funny.

Eagles use Trojans 24-21

(Yes it is crude but they deserve it for yelling things at the players after the game.)

GSU pounds purple Paladins

(I hate Furman.)

Eagles blow out Flames or

Eagles defeat Jerry's Kids

(Liberty University is nicknamed the Flames, and they were founded by Jerry Falwell, no disrespect is meant to the Muscular Dystrophy people)

Eagles outclimb Catamounts

My personal favorite is any time we get to use Catamounts in a headlines.

It is Western Carolina's mascot, and any school stupid enough to have the name deserves the punishment.

These purported headlines as mentioned before are not intended to be derogatory or offensive to anyone.

THESE ARE ONLY MENTIONED FOR FUN.

GSU is in the Great Eight, lets try for the Final Four against Montana.

GSU Eagles impale Trojans, 24-21

By Ronnie Swinford
Sports Editor

TROY Ala. — GSU's prayers were answered when senior safety Rob Stockton dove in front of Joe Jackson, Troy State's intended receiver and intercepted a pass with 10 seconds left in the game Saturday. The turnover clinched the Eagles' 24-21 heart stopper. The win is the first for GSU in the playoffs since the first round of 1993.

"I just kept thinking 'make the play' and someone did," Head Coach Tim Stowers said after the game. "They are as fine of a team as we have played this year, but we made one more play than them, so we go on."

The margin of victory for the Eagles was not the score as much as the turnover margin. Troy State threw two interceptions and lost two fumbles, GSU didn't throw an interception or lose a fumble. GSU also scored 17 of its 24 points after turnovers.

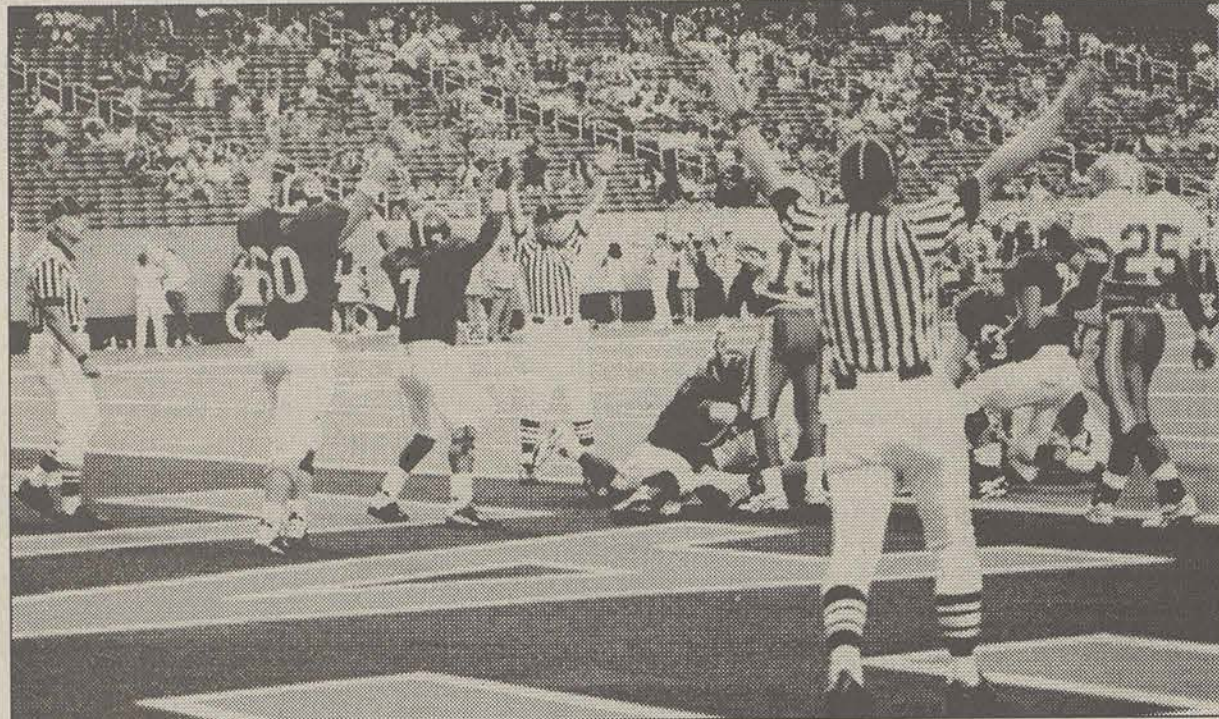

The Eagles started the game on defense, and the early results were not good. On the first play from scrimmage Ted Yarbrough, Troy's tailback ran up the middle for 23 yards.

Three plays later, GSU got its first break in the game when Troy quarterback Jeremy Rowell made a bad pitch and Rob Stockton recovered it at the GSU 28.

GSU took advantage of the turnover, with a nine-play 64-yard drive. The scoring play came on fourth and three from the Troy 34-yardline.

Charles Bostick took the snap and pitched left to Marlow Warthen, Warthen took the ball and split two defenders, he then outran everyone to the endzone for the score. GSU led 7-0 after the extra point.

After the two schools traded punts, the Trojans started a drive, if you can call two plays a drive. Troy got a big run from Arrid Gregory for 35 yards. And then on the next play Troy used a 39-yard half-back pass from Tony Donaldson to Andy Swafford and the score was tied at seven.

But the first quarter scoring blitz was not over. GSU got the ball on their 49, after a 10-yard return and a 15-yard late hit penalty.

They drove the ball with the option attack to the Troy 20 yardline. On second and six from the 20, Dexter Dawson took the option pitch to the right side. He then hit a gap in the defense and turned the ball back to the left and out ran the defense to the endzone. GSU led again by seven this time 14-7.

The second quarter was a stark contrast to the first. Troy had the ball for over 10 minutes in the quarter, but could only get seven points, courtesy of Yarbrough, from a yard out. At half time the score was tied at 14.

GSU got the ball first in the second half and made a mess of their first series.

The first play was a fumbled pitch, and a penalty for illegal touching of the ball, Warthen slapped the ball out of bounds, and it went forward. Then next play gained 17 but the Eagles still had to punt.

Troy got the ball at the their 22 and made a costly mistake. One third and six Rowell threw out wide to Letrell Brown, he caught the ball, but then Stockton and Brancis Williams hit and forced the ball out, Williams grabbed it and never stopped enroute to a 46-yard interception return touchdown, GSU led 21-14.

But Troy was not to go down without a fight, and on the next drive used up 4:45 in an 80-yard drive for a score. It was the Yarbrough show as he gained 41 of the yards including the eight-yard scoring play.

Neither team could score again in the third quarter, but GSU did start a drive. The Eagles drove to the Trojans nine before stalling and trying the field goal. Unfortunately Eric Meng missed the 26-yard attempt and the score was still tied at 21.

Troy State started from the their 20 after the field goal and slowly marched the ball into GSU territory when they got greedy. Rowell dropped back to pass and was sacked by Anthony Williams and Lee Brooks, Brooks recovered the ensuing fumble and GSU had the ball at its 40.

Again GSU was able to run the ball and get into field goal position, but again Meng missed although this time from 42 yards out and the score was still tied at 21 with 5:59 left in the game.

GSU stopped the Trojans cold and forced them to punt, GSU took possession on their 44 with 4:31 showing on the clock.

The ensuing drive was nothing but big plays. On the second play Dawson took the pitch right and hit a big hole for 20 yards to the Troy 36. Then four plays later Dawson came up with another big play.

On fourth and nine from the 35, GSU came up in the shotgun, Bostick took the snap and rolled right, Dawson had lined up in the backfield and Bostick pitched it to Dawson. Dawson ran wide right and then pulled up and hit Maurice Bing on the slotback pass for 27 yards and first and goal from the eight. The Eagles got the ball to the Troy two yardline and then on fourth and goal called on Meng. This time Meng split the uprights and GSU led 24-21 with 1:43 left in the game.

The Trojans came out in the shotgun formation and proceeded to move the ball down the field. They completed six passes and were helped by a 15-yard personal foul penalty. Troy drove the ball to the GSU three before they ran into some problems. Rowell took the snap and rolled right, he was pressured and sacked by Ed Thomas for a loss of seven. Troy then hurried to the line and spiked the ball to stop the clock. They had used all of their time-outs earlier when GSU had the ball.

The next play would be the interception by Stockton, and the game was over except for the obligatory kneel down play by GSU.

"We knew that we would have to play four quarters against GSU," Troy State head coach Larry Blakeney said. "Their kids came to play and just beat us, we played well enough to win, but mistakes cost us the game."

Troy State amassed 375 total yards of offense to GSU's 291 but the story was Troy's four turnovers to GSU's none. GSU only completed one pass in the game, and that came on the slotback pass.

"The fullback came out untouched, I just slid over and dove in front of him," Rob Stockton said of his interception. "It is defiantly the biggest play of my life."

"I would have had to find a new college if I had missed another one," place-kicker Eric Meng said. "I just wanted to make the kick at the end."

COACH PROFILE

Coach hopes to bring winning attitude to GSU basketball

By Mike Davis
Staff Writer

When Coach Gregg Polinsky accepted the job as head basketball coach at GSU, he took the final step in reaching his goal.

Fourteen years of assistant coaching brought glory and at the same time frustrations. None bigger than his desire to be a head coach, to teach young players first hand about the game of basketball and also the game of life.

Polinsky was patient though, enduring plenty of attention, mostly at Alabama. Coaching great players with a commitment to the program seemed to be the ideal job. It was obvious that after Wimp Sanderson was succeeded by fellow-assistant and now head coach Dave Hobbs, Polinsky's desires of head coaching were looking slimmer each year. After hearing the needs of GSU, he decided to leave.

"Gregg is very knowledgeable," Coach Hobbs, who is in his fourth year at the helm of the Crimson Tide, said. "He is very detail oriented with a lot of energy. He relates to the guys well because they know right off what to expect of him. He demands hard work."

For Hobbs, Polinsky's decision to leave Alabama left mixed emotions.

"Of course, we didn't want to lose him," Hobbs said. "We've gone back a long way. But this was a valuable opportunity for Gregg. I know what he was going through, but I hated to lose him."

Leaving the place he spent over half his coaching career at was something that Polinsky had no problem in doing, even though it meant departing the relationships that evolved between himself and the other coaches.

"Dave Hobbs was great throughout the process," Polinsky said. "When I was contacted, I told him and he was very supportive, even though he would occasionally ask me if I was sure I wanted to go. He's a great coach and I give a lot of credit to him."

While attending New Mexico, Polinsky played on two very good teams with Michael Cooper, former Los Angeles Laker. Even though he was a step slow, Polinsky feels that the experience helped him as a coach.

He then continued his playing career at Northern Arizona, where he was allowed only 3/4 a year of eligibility. After that year, he stayed on as a graduate assistant.

"I matured some at Northern Arizona," Polinsky said. "I thought I would have a whole year of eligibility but the NCAA didn't give it to me. Those programs did help me by teaching me work ethic. I understand my players more because I went through what they are now going through."

Polinsky started his coaching career as an assistant for two years at Howard Junior College. He traveled to Texas for three years before joining the staff at Alabama for nine more.

Now, here at GSU, Polinsky gives credit to his family, who he feels would have been supportive in any circumstance.

The situation Polinsky found himself in at GSU was not exactly a good one.

With probation still looming from instances that occurred last year, he is faced with a young and inexperienced team to go against a tough Southern Conference.

Recruiting will play a major part in the rebuilding of GSU basketball, and Polinsky is determined to bring in some young talent and get Eagle fans excited about basketball.

"I am looking for somebody that's got a hunger for information," Polinsky said about the characteristics he looks for in a player.

"He has to want to be coached. He has to be respectful to his parents. That tells me a lot. I want someone who is accountable and responsible."

For this year, Polinsky hopes that his players will continue to work hard and improve, because he knows from plenty of experience, that will be the key to winning.

MEN'S BASKETBALL

Eagles get their first win of season

By Ronnie Swinford
Sports Editor

A depleted bench and new walk-on greeted the Eagles as they tried to win their last exhibition game of the season. The Eagles managed to squeak by with a 82-76 win over the Vasda USA team.

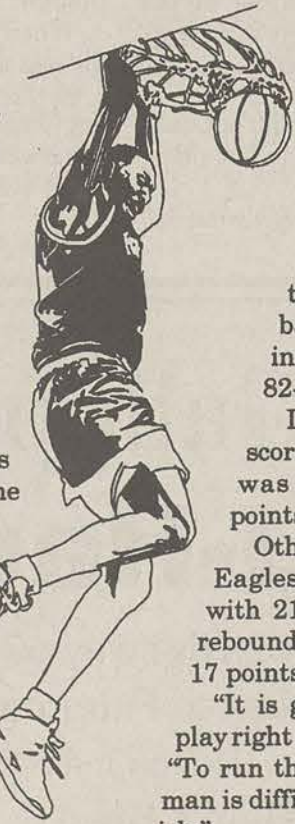

The game started with the Eagles blasting out to a 22-2 lead after five minutes.

GSU was led in that streak by Ryan Parker and Fernando Daniel who both had six points and two assists apiece. GSU was able to stay ahead and increase the lead to as many as 27 points in the half. The Score at the half was 51-35.

Top Eagle scorers in the half were Daniel with 19 and Duane Goebel with 14. But Goebel also had four fouls and walk-on Andre Wilkes had three.

This caused some problems for the Eagles because they only had six players dressed for the game.

The second half of the game was a complete reverse of the first with the Vasda USA team scoring at will and the Eagles hanging on for dear life.

GSU scored five points in 11 minutes to allow the Vasda team to close to 58-50 with nine minutes left. The Vasda team continued to fight closer, and with two minutes left GSU led by only two, 75-73.

On GSU's next possession, with the shot clock running down, Ryan Parker hit a three from 23-feet and the Eagles were up enough for the foul fest that would occur as Vasda tried to scratch their way back, but it would be in vain as GSU won 82-76.

Leading the way scoring for the Eagles was Daniel with 22 points and two steals.

Other scorers for the Eagles included Goebel with 21 points and seven rebounds, and Parker with 17 points and 10 assists.

"It is great to be able to play right away," Parker said. "To run the team as a freshman is difficult, but that is my job."

"I am just happy that these kids got the win," head coach Gregg Polinsky said. "Eventually we want to run the floor more, but with limited numbers of players it is hard."

"We made big stops down the line, and that is important for a young team," Polinsky said. "We just want this team to be as good as they can be."

Lady Eagles pull SoCon upset

By Mike Davis
Staff Writer

For Coach Dee Nichols, the over-all season record does not truly convey the year of the Lady Eagles volleyball team.

After being eliminated by ETSU in the second round of the conference tournament (15-11, 15-6, 15-7), the Lady Eagles ended with a somewhat disappointing record of 9-25 while finishing at the bottom of the regular season standings.

Yet, the Lady Eagles pulled out a so-called first round miracle by defeating Appalachian State (8-15, 15-11, 15-8, 10-15, 15-11), which might have been the distinguishing factor in making the season a good one.

The Lady Mountaineers, the number one ranked team in the conference, came into the match with a conference record of 13-1 with only one conference loss in the last two years. Not to mention that in the last meeting between the two teams, the Lady Eagles only managed to score four points during the course of the match.

Appy started the first game of the match the same way they left Hanner Fieldhouse nearly a month ago, but in the second game, the Lady Eagles tied things up behind senior Litonya Thompson.

GSU shocked the spectators by taking the lead over the top-ranked Lady Mountaineers in the third game, leaving themselves one game short of the upset. The GSU defense held the explosive Lady Mountaineer hitters to only eight points, mainly behind junior Stacey Lewis, who finished with probably her greatest defensive performance of the year.

"Stacey Lewis played great," Nichols said. "She finished with 33 digs and lead the defense. Our defense was the key to the win, without a doubt."

In the fourth game, Appy had 17 kills, most of which was handed from Sheri Leverette, in played great as usual, and Amy Flaherty made good decisions and was consistent throughout the match."

Thompson, along with her record-breaking number of kills, also contributed 25 digs, while Lewis hit 14 kills of her own. Jenn Lett and Megan Pfeiffer had 9 kills apiece in the winning effort.

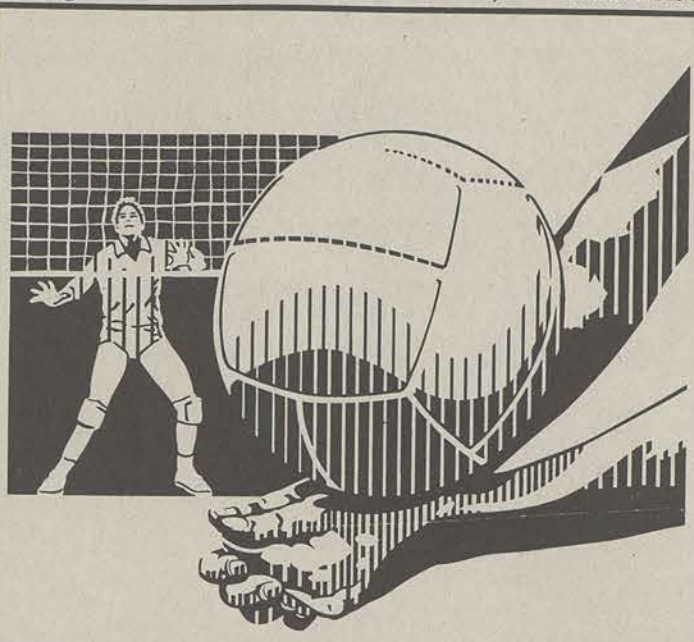

"The schedule was 100 percent more difficult this year," Nichols said on her overall opinion of the season. "We certainly lost games we shouldn't have lost, but I really don't feel too bad. We played so many matches, and throughout the course of the schedule, the girls stayed motivated and never lost the desire to play."

GSU lost their second round match to ETSU in three sets, in which Coach Nichols plainly felt that her team just didn't perform well. The defense did not put on the show that was seen against Appalachian State.

"Take nothing away from ETSU, because they are a great team," Nichols said. "But we did not play to our potential. I think playing immediately the next day had some effect on us."

Marshall was definitely the dominant team as they breezed through and won the tournament, allowing themselves a spot in the NCAA brackets.

Despite the obvious seasonal results, the young and now experienced Lady Eagles will have an enormous foundation to build on, as any team would after beating the number one school in the conference.

the succeeding effort to tie up the match.

GSU played their best game of the year in the finale of their showdown with the Lady Mountaineers. Once again, the GSU defense stopped numerous attacks and capitalized on ASU errors, which seemed to be the key factor throughout the match. Without a doubt, beating Appy made the 9-25 season a bit more gratifying.

"We knew that Appalachian State was tough," Nichols said. "But I told the girls that we had nothing to lose. They all played with great intensity."

Two school records were broken with Thompson finishing with 36 kills and Lewis with 33 digs. Amy Flaherty equaled her career high in assists with 64.

"They had a great night," Nichols said. "Litonya and Lewis

NCAA penalizes two Eagles

G-A Staff Reports

The GSU Eagle basketball team was accessed more penalties by the NCAA Eligibility Committee on November 21.

Jeff Cliett and Dave Coradini were both suspended from the game against the Vasda USA exhibition game and the regular season opener against The University of Georgia.

The most recent events are in connection with the events from last December, when Cliett and Coradini were each suspended for two games for their participation in academic irregularities.

The NCAA, following a review of GSU's internal investigation, felt the players' original actions deserved a four-game suspension. The committee's initial decision was based on early information, which did not completely

COLLEGE FOOTBALL

Ward is UGA's triple threat

By Ed Shearer
Associated Press

ATHENS, Ga. — Hines Ward strongly believes his versatility will be a plus when he completes his college career at Georgia and takes his talent to the next level.

He's been a quarterback, tailback and wide receiver during his first two seasons with the Bulldogs.

He envisions himself as a receiver in the NFL, taking a path to the pros similar to that of Bert Emanuel of the Atlanta Falcons, who was a college quarterback at Rice.

He points to another Falcon, Eric Metcalf, as having the versatility to perform at several positions—receiver, running back and punt returner.

"I kind of see myself as Eric Metcalf," Ward said. "I can play wide receiver or go in and play a little scatback, and I've always been a punt returner and kickoff returner. God blessed me with a lot of talent."

After using him at tailback his freshman season, the Bulldogs opted to move Ward to a receiving spot when practice began in August.

When star tailback Robert Edwards went out with a broken foot in the second game, Ward moved back to tailback, but didn't stay there long. Mike Bobo was lost for the year in the fourth game, forcing another move for Ward, this time to the position he played in high school at Forest Park—quarterback.

Besides twice learning new positions this season, the 6-foot-1, 185-pound Ward has had to play with pain—a broken bone in his right wrist that doctors have said can't be hurt any more by continuing to play.

"Sometimes it hurts bad, but I don't think it's affected my throwing," Ward said. He'll probably have a pin inserted in the wrist after the season.

Ward said he never considered leaving a game because of the way the team has had to overcome so many injuries during the season.

"I couldn't quit on these guys," he said. "I'm not going to give up."

When Ward checks in for spring practice he's not sure what position he'll be playing.

The Bulldogs fired Ray Goff before the season finale against Georgia Tech on Thursday.

Ward doesn't want to get involved in a quarterback controversy when Bobo returns.

"Bobo's an excellent quarterback, and he knows the system well," he said.

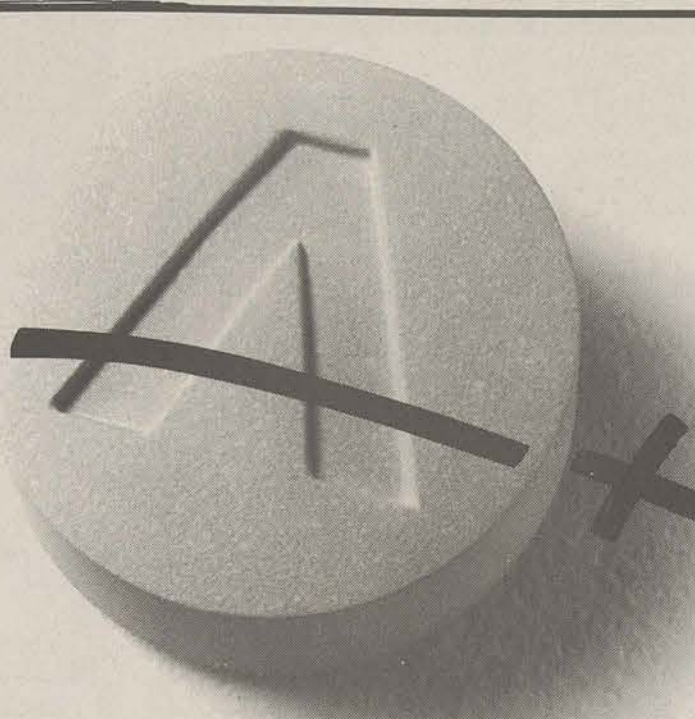

Ward said he has plenty of time to decide whether to compete with Bobo for the quarterback spot or move back to a receiving post.

He's convinced that the new coach will go along with his decision because "I don't think they would make somebody play a position that they don't want to play."

As a freshman last season, Ward rushed for 425 yards and three touchdowns, caught 19 passes for 101 yards and a score and returned 18 kickoffs 353 yards.

Going into the Tech game, Ward had passed for 630 yards and two touchdowns, rushed for 244 yards and two touchdowns and caught 18 passes for 249 yards.

Local dog became famous

By Stacy Clemons
Features Editor

Look over there, it's a bird, it's a plane, no it's a man on a bicycle with a dog on his back. You're not imagining things; it is exactly what you see.

At the beginning of fall quarter '95, many GSU students witnessed this spectacle and wondered how it was accomplished.

Their curiosity was somewhat ended when the dog, known as Sweethard, was unfortunately killed when she was hit by a car.

It took Dexter Jefferson, better known as DJ, about six months to train Sweethard to stand on his back as he rode his bike around the area.

"I started training her as soon as I could and she caught on quickly," Jefferson said. "Sweethard was not that hard to train and she seemed very interested in the new trick she was learning."

DJ and co-owner Iris Kraft trained this full-bred Doberman pinscher to perform tricks.

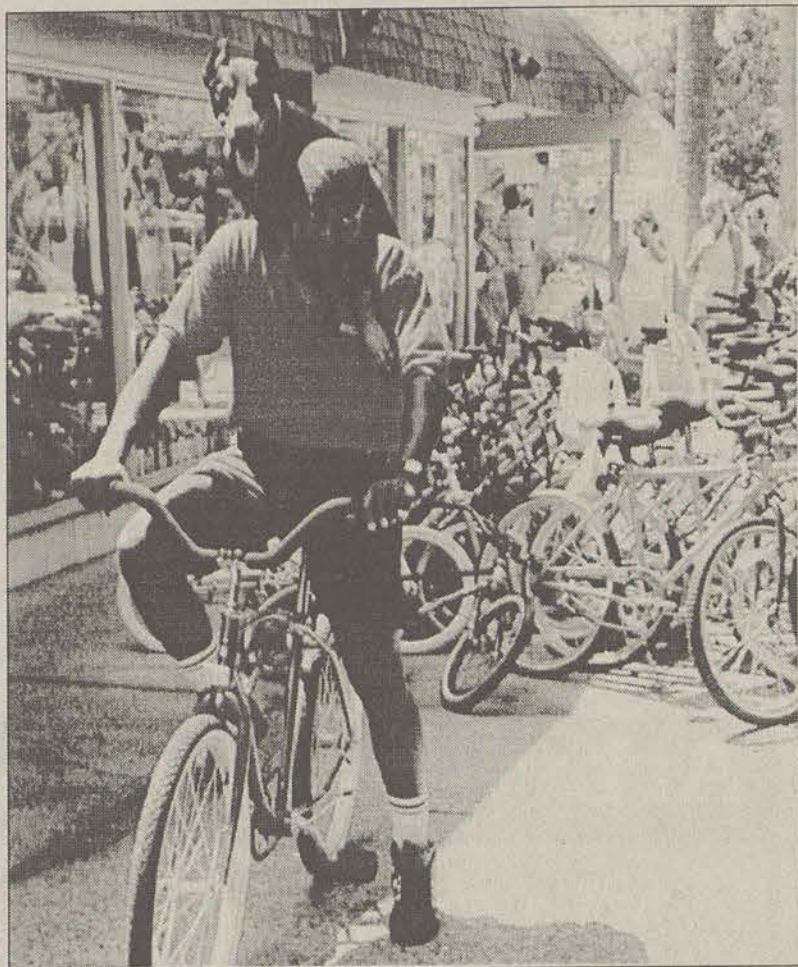

Kraft said, "I taught her some basic tricks, but I basically try to teach people that they should not be afraid of dogs, especially Dobermans."

"They can't help the way they look. Just because they look mean does not mean they are going to attack you," Kraft said.

The duo, was working on new performances, but because of limited finances, they could not work on the tricks they thought the public would be interested in seeing.

"We were trying to raise money to get our training grounds started so that we would have all the things we needed to master the tricks we wanted to present to the public here in Statesboro as well as around the country," Jefferson said.

Both Jefferson and Kraft constantly sent amateur videotapes to the television show, America's Funniest Home Videos, but received no response from the show.

Sweethard enjoys any chance to ride with her co-owner DJ.

"We would just like to have had the chance to hopefully seen our act on television and this way the whole world would have seen what we were trying to accomplish," added Jefferson.

The couple admitted that they were doing this to gain attention, but they were not doing this as a form of just gaining the public's money.

"We did this because it seemed to have caught an interest in the community. From the streets of Atlanta, the parades of Hilton Head, to the campus of GSU, we gained a lot of interesting eyes and we felt with the finances, we could have made this into something even bigger," Jefferson said.

The training of a dog to ride on her master's back was not the trick they were trying to accomplish.

"I had a dream that since I do some rap that we would somehow incorporate this into one of the acts where Sweethard would be on my back and we're riding and smoke is surrounding us and I'm rapping; man, that would have been the ultimate," Jefferson said.

Although future events will not include Sweethard, the couple will still carry on with what they had started.

"Our main goal now is to focus on teaching kids of not being afraid of dogs and if we could raise any money, we would like to take a bus load of kids to the zoo and give them the chance to see the animals so that they can learn to respect them more," Kraft said.

Anyone who has any pictures of Sweethard and DJ, please contact them at Landrum Box 8255 or 871-5286. The owners would appreciate your concern.

Sinatra auctions memorabilia

The Associated Press

NEW YORK--Frank Sinatra sings about "The House I Live In."

Now, his fans can own a bit of one.

From a metal mailbox labeled "F. Sinatra" to the singer's Bosendorfer grand piano, many possessions that Sinatra and his wife, Barbara, kept at their former estate in Rancho Mirage, Calif., go on the block Friday at Christie's.

There are 1930s-era radios, a 1976 Jaguar coup, engraved goblets, a John Wayne statue, jade figurines and a collection of American Impressionist paintings highlighted by William Merritt Chase's "A Memory: In an Italian Villa," valued at $450,000.

There's even a golf cart complete with stereo system and the inscription "Ol' Blue Eyes." The estimated value: $4,000 to $6,000.

"We have always loved beautiful things — it's as simple as that," the couple says in a letter included in the sale catalog. "We admire people who paint and sculpt, just as we appreciate the talented composers, lyricists, musicians and performers we've know."

NEW YORK --Yeah, yeah, yeah: the Fab Four still know how to sell records.

The Beatles' "Anthology 1" sold 450,000 copies in its first day of release Tuesday, the most single-day sales ever for an album, Capitol Records spokesman Paul Freundlich said.

It includes the first new Beatles song in 25 years, "Free As A Bird," creating by adding new tracks to a tape John Lennon made before his death.

The double CD could break the one-week sales mark set by Pearl Jam in 1993, when the Seattle rockers sold 950,000 copies of "Vs." in its first week of release.

HONG KONG -- No sweat pants.

No tight, sleeveless T-shirt. No stunts.

Jackie Chan traded it all in Friday for a mortarboard, hood and gown.

The kung fu master who left home at 7 to be apprenticed to a drama group received an honorary doctorate from Baptist University "for being an epitome of the striving human spirit, for his distinguished achievements in the film industry and his unremitting efforts to seek improvement and excellence."

Outside, fans shouted "Da Guo" big brother. Gowned graduates elbowed reporters to get better photos of their film idol.

"I've won so many movie awards, but never in my life before have I thought of getting an academic degree," Chan said.

"I am quite ashamed of myself. I haven't studied much. I am not good at either English or Chinese. I am thinking whether I am worthy of this degree."

To his young fans, Chan sent out one message: "Don't imitate me. Study hard."

PARIS -- Books combining the talents of Andre Breton and other French Surrealists with some of the 20th century's most famous artists are going on the auction block.

At the centerpiece of the sale are 28 manuscripts written by poet Rene Char and illustrated by Pablo Picasso, Joan Miro, Fernand Leger, Jean Arp, Max Ernst, Alberto Giacometti, Georges Braque and Henri Matisse, among others.

Among the 700 books expected to fetch a total of at least $7 million is a copy of Breton's "Le Revolver a Cheveux Blancs" illustrated by Salvador

Dali, one of only 10 copies containing original prints, said auctioneer Guy

Loudemer, who will bang the gavel on Dec. 1-2 at Drouot, the main auction house in central Paris.

"These books are quite unusual," Loudemer said Friday. "They represent the marriage of three talents — the literary, the visual, and the craftsmanship of the bookbinder."

Roseanne and Tom sue clothesmaker

By Michael Fleeman
The Associated Press

LOS ANGELES — It could have been a three-way marriage made in fashion heaven: TV star Roseanne and then-husband Tom Arnold united with a maker of a line of clothes for big people.

Then came that other three-way marriage.

And the lesbian revelations. And the 21 personalities.

And the Star Spangled Banner.

And all of a sudden, the clothes maker feared, the Arnolds' peccadilloes, wouldn't play in Peoria.

So Roseanne and Tom — together again, if only as parties in a civil lawsuit — sued New York-based CelebSales for allegedly failing to make good on a $250,000 payment as part of an agreement to put their famous names on a line of clothes.

CelebSales has counter-sued for $24 million-plus, contending the couple not only reneged on agreements to market the clothes on television, but generated publicity so vile that nobody would want to buy their product.

Trial is set for Tuesday in U.S. District Court here.

At center stage are three flamboyant personalities. Roseanne and Tom are matched, wit for wit, with CelebSales owner Stanley Warner, a Seventh Avenue manufacturer with a tongue as sharp as pinkie shears.

At the peak of his pique, Warner once said he'd "rather have Hitler's name on clothes than Roseanne's."

Under a November 1993 agreement, the Arnolds were to allow CelebSales — a company formed just for this deal — to use the couple's names and images for a line of clothes.

The Arnolds would get $1 million in installment payments.

Rosie O'Donnell signs talk show deal

The Associated Press

LOS ANGELES — Comedian-actress Rosie O'Donnell is taking on a new role as host of a daytime talk show — and she promises "no fist fights."

"I'm so thrilled to be given an opportunity to present my idea of talk-variety," O'Donnell said in a statement announcing her deal with Warner Bros. television for an hour-long syndicated show.

Warner said the weekday program will feature interviews with celebrities and newsmakers as part of a "light-hearted and entertaining hour." A debut date has yet to be set for the series.

O'Donnell made her film debut in "A League of Their Own." Her other credits include "Sleepless in Seattle," "The Flintstones" and "Exit to Eden."

Natalie Cole files for divorce for second time

The Associated Press

LOS ANGELES — Singer Natalie Cole, daughter of the late Nat "King" Cole, filed for divorce from Andre Fischer, citing irreconcilable differences.

Miss Cole and Fischer, her second husband, were married on Sept. 17, 1989, and they separated in October, according to the Superior Court divorce petition filed Tuesday.

It was the second time Miss Cole filed to end the marriage. In a June 1, 1992, divorce petition, she also cited irreconcilable differences as the reason for the split. The petition was later withdrawn.

Miss Cole, who won seven Grammy Awards for her album "Unforgettable," was married for seven years to record producer Marvin Yancy.

point the first president of the SGAA and the person shall be responsible for altering the by-laws of the SGAA and the election of a vice-president and treasurer.

The resolution also says that the SGA president should appoint a paid staff member of the SGA to serve as a secretary of the SGAA to correspond with the office of alumni development and alumni officers of the SGA.

Hyer also said if the SGAA doesn't become a fundraising organization, he would still like it to be an organization for people to remain in touch with previous student government association members.

The student senate also voted to change the name of the "Student Guide to Faculty" to "A Student's Guide to Peer Performance."

"I understand that all we are going to be able to obtain are the grade distributions for the student's guide," he said. "I thought that naming the guide to Student's Guide to Peer Performance was a more appropriate title if we are not going to publish the students' comments about the faculty."

Hyer is expected to begin work in Congressman Saxby Chambliss's office at the beginning of the year where he will be running the daily operations of the campaign, said Rob Leebern, office chief of staff.

Hyer has interned in Washington for Congressman J. Roy Rowland (Ga.-8) in 1993 and Congressman Jack Kingston (Ga.-1) in 1994.

He also interned in Georgia's House of Representatives for Sharon J. Falls (Dist. 125) in early 1995 as a legislative assistant.

Hyer is a member of the Kappa Alpha Order and was elected chapter officer in 1994.

He was appointed as an SGA senator in 1994 and re-elected in May 1994.

He was also a recipient of the department of political science's Ronald "Bo" Ginn Scholarship and a James Irwin scholarship recipient in 1994.
