UGA dorm makes recycling just fingertips away

The Associated Press

ATHENS — They only have to push a few buttons to do it, but students at the University of Georgia's Brumby Hall are leading the way in recycling.

By pushing the right button before dumping trash and recyclables down the trash chute, they are helping the university save thousands of dollars in landfill costs and maybe helping make a little cash on the side.

"We put it in a year ago, during the holiday break," said Pam Schreiber of the department of student housing. "It went in with relative ease and the students adapted to it fairly well."

The buttons, at the trash chute in the nine-story building, rotate the appropriate collection bin under the chute to receive either trash, aluminum, plastic, newspapers or glass.

"It saves the trip to go to the dumpsters," said Tangela Peak of Quitman. She recycled newspapers before, but now recycles plastic containers, newspapers and clear bottles.

"That's the only building where we're getting real productivity" in the university's recycling program, said C.D. Kidd III, recycling coordinator for the university. "The stuff's coming out of there real clean," meaning the recyclables are sorted properly.

"The students, they are doing a great job," Kidd said.

CORRECTION

In the Thursday, Jan. 9 issue, the headline, "College of Education building to be complete by summer" was misleading. As the story read, only the first phase, which includes the site preparation on the southern end of Forest Drive, will be complete by July.

The George-Anne regrets any misunderstandings caused by this error.

Plan for bike path on hold

By Meredith Whitt
Staff Writer

The campus bike paths are at a stand-still until a plan is agreed upon by the administration which will determine where the bike paths are located on campus.

The administration is currently discussing a couple of possible plans, as well as looking for alternative plans, said Philip Hodge, director of facilities planning.

One plan that is in consideration is estimated to cost $85,000.

This includes paving, bicycle signs and the bicycle racks which are already in place around the Forest Building and other locations around campus, he said.

Once a system is approved by the administration, the funds for the project will primarily come from the university, Hodge said.

During this past quarter, two bicycle accidents were reported as well as two incidents, said Ken Brown, director of public safety.

"We need bike paths because when you mix pedestrians and bikes and bikes and vehicles, you have the potential for serious accidents," Brown said.

Last year, many near-accidents and professor complaints of persons incurring injuries in bike accidents prompted a proposal for banning bikes on the pedestrian, which was to be effective last fall.

Last quarter, a committee was formed by former SGA president Lee Hyer to look into alternatives to the bike ban on the pedestrian.

A bike path was proposed as an alternative to banning the bikes.

Heather Karlson, SGA's vice president of auxiliary affairs, has submitted a proposal for an interim plan until the bike paths are constructed. In the proposal she suggested dividing the pedestrian, one side to be used by bicycle riders, the other side by pedestrians.

The proposal was submitted to John Nolen, GSU's vice president of academic affairs, for consideration. No decision has been made on the proposal yet.

Heather Karlson was unable to be reached by press time for further information.

Counseling center expansion will offer more services

By Melanie Weinberg
Assistant News Editor

GSU officials broke ground last week on a new counseling center with more space, rooms, and a bigger career resource library in order to benefit the students.

The new building will be located between the Forest Drive building and the west side of the health center.

"We hope to begin construction by the first of February," Sherrick Coleman, architect for facilities planning said. "The building should be complete by the end of November."

The cost of the project is $828,000, and the building itself will be approximately 8,200 square feet.

"It will be a brick building matching the height of the existing health center," he said. "It will have a metal canopy creating an arcade, which is a very nice added feature to our campus."

During construction the parking lot in the front of the health center will be blocked.

"The new building will take the half closest to the Forest Drive building, and the other half will remain," Coleman said. "When we renovate, we will extend the parking lot down in front of the health center."

The area of the existing counseling center is scheduled to be renovated and used by the health center for clinical purposes.

"The health center has been waiting for years to expand," David Matthews, director of the counseling center, said.

A women's health clinic, an allergy clinic and a sports medicine clinic have all been mentioned in the expansion, Matthews said, but he is unsure of where these ideas are right now.

"We will have a lot more room and group rooms that we don't currently have," Matthews said. "The new building will be a lot nicer, and students will appreciate it."

Computer program connects schools throughout Georgia

File Photo

Henderson Library has recently installed the GALILEO system to help students research information.

By Andrea D'Astoli
Staff Writer

GALILEO, Georgia Library Learning Online, is a new system that allows access to libraries and their resources from other schools throughout Georgia. GALILEO is the biggest periodical database available. The database includes abstracts of articles, the full text articles of some of the abstracts and an Online Encyclopedia Britannica.

"We're planning to have state government documents and census information available through GALILEO," said Laura Davidson, head of the Learning Resources Center.

GALILEO is a central set of electronic information resources that can be accessed from the University System's computer network, PeachNet. GALILEO is connected with all 34 colleges and universities within the system. Included in the system is a central on-line catalog containing the records of all the books and periodicals within the libraries of the university system and provides rapid transfer of books and periodical articles by UPS for inter-library loans.

"We're trying to speed up the inter-library loans and faxes as much as we can," she said.

GALILEO is used to insure universal access to materials and information services for every student and faculty member in the University System of Georgia, regardless of geographical location, size of institution, or on-campus status. GALILEO is to be used to improve the information services and support through sharing resources. It is also being used to upgrade the quality of teaching, research and service by providing worldwide information resources.

"Hopefully, by next fall, we'll have the ability to walk into any university in the university system and be able to check out any book in any library by just using an identification card," Davidson said.

The University of Georgia system libraries have a history of sharing resources. Examples of this are the creation of the joint borrower's card. The card allows students and faculty to borrow from other schools on a case-by-case basis. Georgia State University serves as a host for an electronic union catalog of all the university system holdings and offers an automation service to the system's libraries via PeachNet.

The proposal for GALILEO is composed of objectives that support the goals by using technology to share resources statewide.

To provide PeachNet access to all university system and off-campus center libraries, to be able to retrieve the full text of core academic journals, convert all university system card catalogs to computer format, to support universal borrowing, facilitate sharing of research journals and be able to distribute state publications electronically.

Anyone using Netscape can access GALILEO. The site is <http://www.galileo.peachnet.edu>.

There are 26 computers on the second floor of the library that are hooked up to GALILEO.

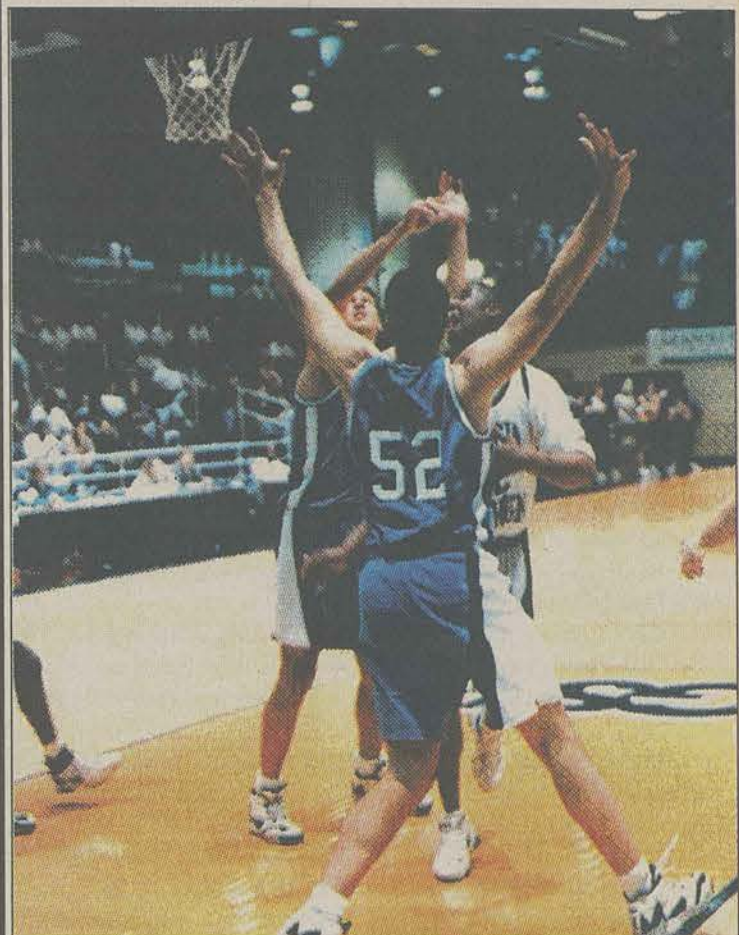

"For people that have questions or don't know how to use the electronic resources there are classes that can be attended for more information," Davidson said.

These classes are held in the library, Tuesday at 7 p.m., Wednesday at 11 a.m. and Thursday at 4 p.m. These classes are open to anyone and everyone who wants to know how to use the electronic resources in the library.

Center helps disabled

By Meredith Whitt
Staff Writer

The GSU Tools for Life Center invites persons with disabilities, care givers, service providers, their families and the public to experience the latest in assistive technology at their open house on Jan. 20 from 11 to 3 p.m.

The center, which is associated with the College of Health and Professional Studies, is federally funded by a grant through the Department of Human Resources to provide information about assistive technology devices that improve the quality of life of people with disabilities as well as try to demonstrate some of those devices.

On display at the center are devices ranging from low to high tech for everyone from children to the elderly, including large handled utensils to voice-activated computer software and computers that read aloud text for the blind.

Visitors are also able to access an on-line national databank, which brings the latest information about assistive technology to the center, and to inquire about financial resources available to help cover the cost of the technology.

The center, located behind Lee's Restaurant on Georgia Avenue, serves persons with disabilities in 31 southeast Georgia counties and is one of seven in the state.

Legislators happy about Miller's new budget plan

By Dick Pettys
The Associated Press

ATLANTA — Gov. Zell Miller won praise from most legislators for an $11.3 billion budget that funds a tax cut and a 6 percent teacher pay raise by reining in state government, but some warned the burden will fall hardest on the poor.

"It's going to hurt some of the citizens who are in the most trouble, the poorest, the sickest and the most in need," Sen. Mary Margaret Oliver, D-Decatur, said Wednesday after the governor's budget address to a joint session.

But most lawmakers came away from the speech with praise for the proposal, which cuts spending for about half of the state's departments and eliminates 900 jobs but still finds money for school and college construction programs, $100 million more in rural highways and the completion of another state-owned, 18-hole golf course.

"He's singing my song. I liked it," said Lt. Gov. Pierre Howard, a Democrat and the presiding officer of the Senate. "He's moving in a more conservative ... direction. I think that's what's called for."

Republicans said the governor's proposal likely was drafted with one eye toward holding off GOP gains in the legislative elections next fall.

"What we have here is a liberal governor making conservative proposals because he hears footsteps," said Rep. Bob Irvin of Atlanta, the House Republican Leader. Still, Irvin said he supports most of the proposals.

As part of an initiative Miller began last spring to make government do more with less, and to prepare for the slower revenue growth predicted by economists, 19 state agencies will get less money in his proposed budget for the year beginning July 1.

The Department of Human Resources, the state's major health care agency, will get nearly $74 million less, resulting in cuts to a wide variety of programs.

Among those are programs for abused children and spouses. The state also would inspect health care facilities every two years and would no longer license family violence shelters. Most of the cuts were recommended by the Board of Human Resources after the governor pressured agencies to identify low-priority programs.

Federal workers back despite weather

By Janis L. Magin
The Associated Press

ATLANTA — Federal workers in Georgia are glad to be back at work this week after a three-week break that was anything but a vacation.

"With a vacation you know how long you're going to be gone," said John Breen, superintendent at the Fort Pulaski National Monument outside Savannah. "On this thing, it's more like being on a standby status where you may be called in at any moment, but you don't know when that moment will be."

The 13 full-time employees at Fort Pulaski returned to work Monday, said Breen.

The monument, part of the National Park Service, reopened on Saturday with a partial staff, he said.

While most federal employees around Georgia were back at their desks Monday, an icy winter storm prolonged the government shutdown for some.

Most of the 400 furloughed employees at the Office of Housing and Urban Development in Atlanta returned to work Monday.

However, several didn't make it because of the icy roads left from Sunday's storm, said spokeswoman Linda Allen.

The Centers for Disease Control and Prevention's full staff of 6,400 returned at noon, but were told to leave by 4 p.m. to avoid roads that were expected to freeze after dark, said spokesman Bob Howard.

About 4,500 CDC employees had been furloughed, he said.

"I haven't talked to a single employee who hasn't been glad to be back to work," Howard said.

Boyd Chisholm, a construction analyst at HUD and union leader, was back in his Atlanta office Monday.

Last week, he led a protest outside House Speaker Newt Gingrich's district office in Marietta.

"I and many other employees are glad to be back," he said. "We felt it was a great inconvenience to all federal employees as well as the various private constituencies."

The return to work ended the financial uncertainty for workers who were paid for only part of December.

"Fortunately, I had a little bit of savings to draw on," said Breen. "But some folks live from paycheck to paycheck."

President Clinton signed legislation over the weekend that reimburses employees for the three weeks they had off.

"The sad reality is that they knew perhaps that they were going to pay us, so they would have been better off if they had left us here," Chisholm said.

At the CDC, basic operations, such as keeping computer systems and continuing scientific experiments running, continued during the furlough, Howard said.

But much of the national monitoring and surveillance of infectious diseases, sexually transmitted diseases and AIDS was halted.

Grocery shoppers pleased with small tax relief

By Joan Kirchner
The Associated Press

ATLANTA — While the state's Democratic leadership paraded before cameras to tout elimination of the sales tax from food, some shoppers said they appreciate the tax relief, no matter how modest the savings.

"I've been listening every day hoping it would pass," said Louise Carey of Atlanta, who was shopping at Kroger.

"Every little bit is a help now. The cereal's out of sight, a little box of Raisin Bran costs four dollars."

Susan Griffin of Fitzgerald in southwest Georgia, buying food for herself and her husband at Winn-Dixie, said of the impact on her grocery bill:

"I'll probably not even notice it."

Families that spend $100 a week on groceries will save $4 a week in sales tax after the 4-cent sales tax is fully removed from the grocery bill by October 1998.

"If you eat, you win," a beaming Gov. Zell Miller said as House and Senate Democratic leaders stood behind him to watch him sign the bill into law during a news conference.

"Every time anyone sits down to a meal, they're winning with this."

But the 801,455 Georgians who buy groceries with food stamps will see no benefit from the tax cut because food stamp purchases already are exempt from sales tax. The 4-cent sales tax will be removed over the next three years, granting a $500 million tax cut to most grocery buyers.

While Miller and the Democrats are touting it as the biggest tax cut in state history, an economist warned that the plan may be paving the way for a tax increase when the state faces another recession, as early as 1998.

"To some extent you're giving away a part of your tax base, and that is already inefficient," said Donald Ratajczak.

Our Opinion

Cut in state grocery tax will benefit students

Gov. Zell Miller recently signed an important bill for every person who buys or eats groceries in the state of Georgia.

The bill, which will completely eliminate the 4-cent sales tax on groceries by October, 1998, will have a major impact on the pocketbooks of both the state and its residents.

For example, a family who spends $100 a week on groceries will save just $4 a week after the tax cut. Many have complained this cut will not be large enough to even be noticed. However, a savings of only $4 a week will amount to a total savings of $208 in a year.

This seemingly small individual savings adds up to a $500 million tax cut to grocery buyers throughout the state, which economists worry may precipitate further tax increases in the future.

While these economists argue that the tax cut eliminates a large part of the state's tax base, they fail to recognize that the money saved from taxes on groceries will likely be spent on luxuries, and therefore, taxable goods.

Furthermore, citizens should not be taxed on items necessary for life, such as groceries, in the first place. Food stamp recipients will not be affected by this tax cut since they do not presently pay taxes on groceries. The state has never charged these recipients a tax, not only because they received the money from the state, but because groceries are regarded as necessities included in the cost of living.

If groceries are necessities for food stamp recipients, they are necessities for the rest of us as well.

Since college students are renowned for their lack of funds, we should be especially appreciative of the grocery tax cut. An extra couple of dollars a week can make a world of difference to a student.

I know this from experience. Growing up a chubby little girl wasn't and still isn't easy. Keep reading; I am not searching for pity.

We need to make the distinction between those who think they are fat and those who really do have a weight problem.

The ones who think they are fat are often the skinny-ninny females who whine and complain just so people will tell them they aren't fat.

We need to aim our attention toward the people who are fat and are often told they're fat.

Our society is very much based on who is thin and who is overweight. You don't see overweight people dominating the workplace, and you sure as hell don't see them strutting their stuff down the fashion runway with a Versace gown on.

Think of the feelings that flood overweight women's heads each time they see a woman in a bikini, or a girl with size 6 jeans on.

They can only ask one question to themselves — why? "Why me, why can't I wear a bikini, why can't I get into size 6 jeans?"

Most of the ways designed to help overweight people lose weight are either bogus, too time-your stomach, your arms, and your legs. Not to mention the time it takes to keep your body that way.

I would love to have my body look like the Soloflex girl, but I seriously don't have the time to on what this consists of, but I will add that chub is involved.

Because my father grew up overweight, he always watched me and told me when to stop eating. He basically molded my eating habits so I wouldn't suffer what he went through.

This is the type of people we need in our society. Encouragement and help for the overweight can make a world a difference to them.

Unfortunately, we need to pay close attention to the morbidly obese. I am talking about the ones who can't get out of bed, can't walk, can't get jobs, and have serious health conditions. There are more of them than we see on the talk shows.

If you believe overweight people are that way by choice and that they deserve to be picked on and discriminated against — think again. Where is your heart? It doesn't matter how they got that way; the point is, that is who they are. Look beyond it and see the person who is really there.

It's a shame Richard Simmons can't help everybody, but we, as human beings, can do just as much good.

consuming or way too costly.

Turn on the television and count how many times a weight-loss product is advertised to help cut the fat. Whether it be a pill, a machine, or a program, these commercials aren't aimed to the obese. They are geared towards the thin people who want to become toned and thinner.

Take the Soloflex machine for example. "This could be your stomach, these could be your arms, these could be your legs." Aside from the monthly payment, what they don't tell you is that it probably takes three hours a day for a year in order for that to be prance on a machine for hours on end for the rest of my life. And I seriously doubt that a 350-pound person could or would get on the Soloflex Machine, the Health Rider, or the NordicTrack and expect to look like a super model.

I can't say I know what it feels like to weigh 350 pounds, but I can say I know what it's like to be picked on and made fun of because of your weight. Even though being called "fat" tore me up inside, it gave me incentive to do something.

Multiple-day backpacking, canoeing, rappelling, and even hang-gliding are a few of the outdoor adventures of which they partake. In the GORP club they just don't set out on an adventure; before they leave to do anything, everyone is quite educated about the outdoor skill.

A real outdoor adventure program should educate students about the realities of the outdoor realm, as well as provide the skills necessary to travel and live in the outdoor realm. And finally, it should teach the student how to respect and not to alter the natural world.

I don't know if there really exists a solution or even a problem, but before you set foot into the woods, I hope you know what to expect.

Maybe GSU should get serious about our outdoors program. My advice is to advertise and then to educate. I'm willing to accept any complaints from anyone and especially the club.

The Citadel marches past Eagles

By Mike Davis
Senior Staff Writer

As head basketball Coach Gregg Polinsky sat at the press table Monday night being bombarded with questions of his ninth straight loss this season, the first-year head coach calmly replied, "I still have a ray of hope."

A ray of hope is hard to find when you lose 12 of your first 13 games, and a 63-56 loss to the hands of the Citadel tends to make that pain throb a bit harder.

The Bulldogs, coming off a mammoth win over UT-Chattanooga, entered Hanner Fieldhouse with the extreme confidence that Coach Pat Dennis felt was at the highest level all season.

Who wouldn't feel confident when you have a 7'0" giant standing at your post and a 6'0" guard who can shoot the lights out of the building?

Both of them, Kilall Misychenko and Noy Castillo, combined for 33 of the Bulldog points, proving to be the key to sending the Eagles their ninth consecutive loss, the worse since 1979's 13-game losing streak.

Castillo's 15 first-half points, along with Eagle Brian Wallace's 10 contributed to seven lead changes during the first session.

With GSU holding a slim two-point lead early, Castillo drained one of his three 3-pointers of the night, giving the Bulldogs the advantage.

Wallace and Castillo both exchanged jumpers, keeping the score close, but a GSU turnover resulting in a Ryan Sears lay-up opened up the Bulldogs' lead.

Coming off the bench, freshman Johna Seay, who again was the story for the Eagles, brought his team back with two lay-ups, both assisted by Ryan Parker, giving the advantage back to the home team.

But when Jonathan Kunz's three-pointer was followed up by Castillo's long-range bomb, the Bulldogs had worked together for a 13-4 run to end the first half.

"They were running him (Castillo) off a lot of screens," Wallace said. "We stayed with him, but he still was able to break away."

With Castillo doing his share of damage, he took the alternate plan in the second half to control the tempo of the game, which meant passing up shots that he had been taking earlier.

Down by eight, entering the final period of play, GSU's Parker connected on a rare four-point play, and Jeff Cliett hit a three-point marker, bringing the Eagles back into striking distance.

Still trying to claw their way back into the match, Seay hit a shot to cut the Bulldog lead to one, but that was as close as they would get.

Citadel's Reno Earl hit a baseline jumper to put the Bulldogs up by three, and then hit a three-pointer to break away from the Eagles even more.

After several made foul shots for Citadel, GSU's Parker hit a shot beyond the arch with 35 and never quit," Dennis said after the game.

"We knew how important this game was, to us and them."

Both teams fought well."

Castillo finished with 20 points and went 3-6 from three-point land. Misychenko finished with 13 points, seven rebounds and four blocked shots for the winners.

"The rims have been real nice to me here," Castillo said.

"I felt really good and was able to get some nice shots, but it wasn't easy. They played tough the whole game."

Johna Seay led the Eagles with 19 points and 13 rebounds, but the most impressive stat was his perfect; 7-7 from the free-throw line.

"I'm disappointed because we didn't get the same defensive effort and we lacked athleticism," Polinsky said.

"I do feel that was our best execution on offense, and we are getting better in certain areas."

"But I am not going to accept losing. We're going to struggle because we are a few plays short, and we lack physical pressure," he said.

With the loss, GSU's record stands at 1-12, which is the worse start in school history.

Johna Seay (52) gets two of his career high 19 points. Sarah Brinkley

The lead reached nine points for the Bulldogs, one shy of their biggest lead, with seven minutes left in the game.

Fernando Daniel hit his only three-pointer of the night as GSU started chipping away the Citadel lead once again.

Seay's free throws cut the lead to four.

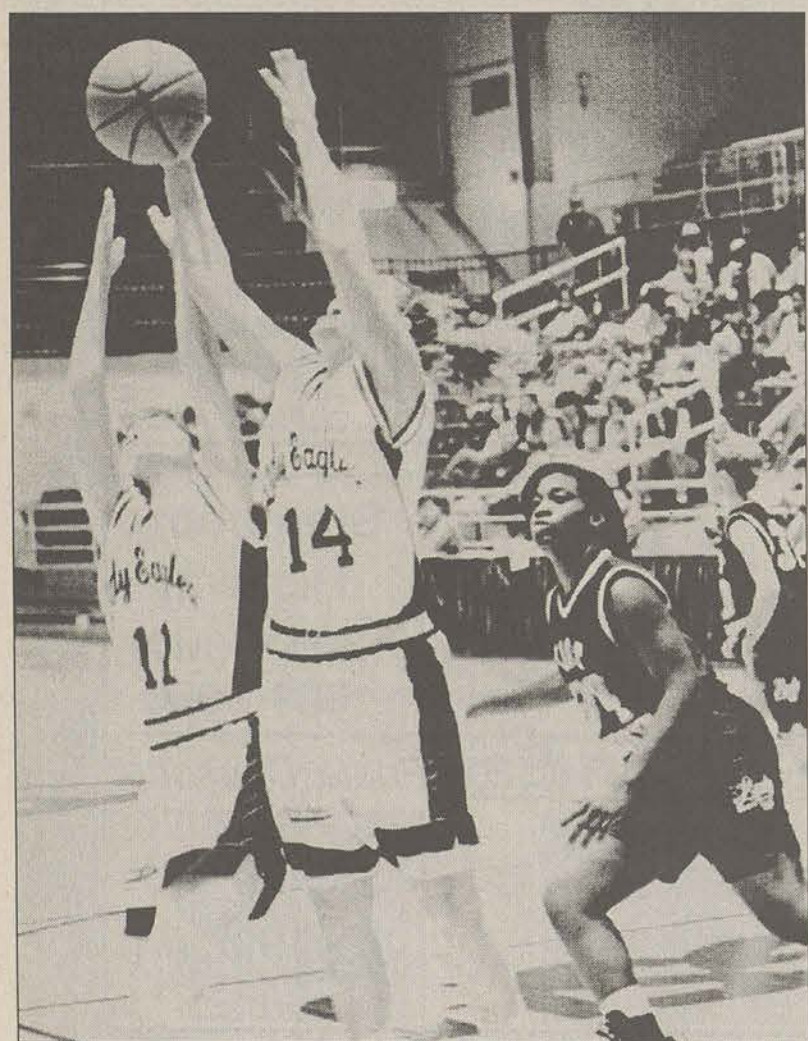

seconds remaining to cut the margin to two. But after fouling immediately on the inbound, the Eagles never scored again.

Citadel shot 6-8 from the free-throw line in the last 30 seconds to polish off another Southern Conference victory and hand GSU the seven-point loss.

Lady Eagles pillage Buccaneers

Teammates fight for ball in GSU win over ETSU.

The Lady Eagles, led by a lineup that featured four freshmen and a transfer, galloped past the Lady Bucs from ETSU 88-81. The win gives GSU a 3-0 record in conference play.

The Lady Eagle inside forces of Telly Hall and MarySue James both got into early foul trouble and necessitated the changes.

"Telly is our go to player, and everyone is going to try and stop her," head coach Drema Greer said. "Telly and Marysue both got into early foul trouble and the freshman stepped up and played well."

The first half looked like a track meet with both teams trying to out-run the other. GSU trailed by one at the 10:39 mark of the first half, but buoyed by a stifling press and three straight steals they were able to regain the lead with a 13-2 run.

The run was started by Tarsha Askew, but finished by Angelica Rivers who scored five of the points in the run, and nine of the next 11 GSU points. This stretch saw the four guard and a center lineup that featured four freshmen and Rivers, who is a junior college transfer and new to the team.

The Lady Eagles extended their lead to 10 at the half, 43-33. Early in the second half Hall again drew two fouls and had to sit for the Eagles. But without James, who was also on the bench with three fouls; the Lady Eagles needed another player to step up. Lacsra Mitchell answered the call by scoring seven straight points.

The next four minutes of the game featured GSU's international player Svetlana Trjeskal. She scored five points in that span, but it was not the number of points scored, but the way they were done.

They consisted of a scoop shot in the lane and a drive in the lane through four ETSU Bucs. But the best play for her in the game was a behind-the-back pass to Tarsha Askew that brought cheers from the crowd, but Askew could not convert the pass into points.

"I really don't know what happened; I just hope to keep playing this way," said Trjeskal of her 14-point performance.

The Lady Eagles also held the conference pre-season MVP Amy Engle to 16 points in the game, and fouled her out with over three minutes left in the game. Engle scored only 10 from the field.

After an ETSU time-out with 2:11 on the clock ETSU cut the Eagle lead to seven with a three pointer from Wendi Reed.

But GSU answered with a spectacular play that drained the life from the Bucs. Rosie Arnold drove down the middle and got caught without a shot, and as she was falling out of bounds she threaded a no-look over the shoulder pass through three defenders to Tarsha Askew, who hit the lay-up for the Eagles.

"Our plan was to switch on all screens and keep a hand in her face all night," said Askew, who guarded Engle for part of the night.

"Our girls really don't know how important it is to go 3-0 in the conference," Greer said.

Bulldogs whip Huskies

By Christine Hanley
The Associated Press

STORRS, Conn. —The nation's longest home winning streak is a victim of Georgia's victorious march through the Top 25.

When third-ranked Connecticut stopped Georgia's first option, the Bulldogs turned to Saudia Roundtree and halted the Huskies' winning ways at home at 44 games.

"The person we were most worried about was LaKeshia Frett, and Jamelle (Elliott) did a great job of guarding her," UConn guard Jennifer Rizzotti said. "But Saudia Roundtree just came out and was on fire."

Roundtree matched her career high with 27 points as No. 4 Georgia knocked off its third straight ranked foe, shaking off two second-half Connecticut rallies for a 75-67 victory Monday.

Roundtree finished 11-for-21 from the field and the Bulldogs (13-2, 4-0 Southeast) hit 8 of 21 3-pointers to snap UConn's win streak at Gampel Pavilion.

"I have to give her a lot of credit," Rizzotti said. "No matter who was on her, she sunk really tough shots and really lit us up."

The Huskies (14-3, 4-1 Big East) shut down Frett, holding Georgia's leading scorer to three points and five rebounds. But they couldn't stop Roundtree.

She solved the Huskies' defense, which shifted from a 2-3 zone to man-to-man and even a box-and-one in an attempt to stop her.

Roundtree said she wasn't aware of UConn's win streak, and that one of the team's main concerns coming into the game was being able to play its game in front of a 8,241 sellout crowd at Gampel Pavilion.

She hushed the arena several times, the last with a pull-up jumper with 1:41 left after UConn had fought back to 65-65 after trailing by 11 several times in the game.

"I told coach I was feeling it, let me take it to the hole," Roundtree said. "Coming down the stretch, I want the ball in my hands."

After that shot, the Bulldogs scored eight of the final 10 points for their 11th straight win.

Kedra Holland scored 18 points, going 4-for-8 from 3-point range, and Tracy Henderson added 14 for Georgia, which was playing its third of five consecutive games against Top 25 teams. The Bulldogs knocked off then-No. 4 Tennessee and then-No. 24 Auburn last week.

"We couldn't afford to get too high," Georgia coach Andy Landers said, "because we can't afford the low that follows."

Kara Wolters scored 24 points for Connecticut, which missed all 13 of its 3-point attempts and lost for the first time at home since falling in March 1993 to Louisville in the first round of the NCAA tournament.

Nykesha Sales added 11, but Rizzotti was held to nine points after finishing 0-for-7 from beyond the arc and 1-4 on foul shots.

"No way we're going to win with Jen playing the way she did today," said UConn coach Geno Auriemma.

Georgia never trailed and led by as many as 11 points several times. But they couldn't shake the Huskies, who fought back to trail 51-50 midway through the second half, then made a late surge to tie the game 65-65 with two minutes left on a three-point play by Rita Williams.

At that point, Auriemma said he had no doubt the Huskies were going to pull off the comeback and preserve their win streak.

No excitement at basketball games, wonder why?

Why does GSU have a dance team to perform at athletic events?

Why does GSU have cheerleaders that perform at athletic events?

These are the kind of things heard along press row at basketball game after basketball game.

Most of the people going to the events are less interested in these squads than even the game, which is hard to imagine here at GSU.

Their performance adds nothing to the games, because the people in the stands won't react to anything short of nudity and alcohol.

I have known several members of the Southern Explosion dance team. I have even written stories about some of their members, but I think that it may be time for them to either rethink the act or disband.

Their typical performance consists of them assuming their positions on the court, waiting for the music to start, and then after their performance, they bounce off the court yelling "Go Southern."

This does nothing for our crowd. In fact, some of the sportswriters even have been known to wager on whether the music will even start.

I am not trying to slam the dancers. They work as hard as any athletes on this campus. I have seen their practices and I do respect them as athletes, but their attendance at games adds very little. They perform once in the first half, once at half-time and once during the second half, and leave.

The cheerleaders are also another bone of contention. I know that every year they win some kind of award for their programs, but they add nothing to the game experience, except the chance that one of them may hit the floor at any time.

They try to excite the crowd during time-outs, but most of our fans sit in the stands, too afraid, too bored, or too drunk to make any loud noise.

So what are the cheerleaders supposed to do? They could yell their heads off and few in the stands would react. They, like the dance team, work hard to perfect their performances, but when the fans are non-responsive what is the point?

This column is being written to show that both groups should rethink their performances and try to craft them to the crowd. It is obvious that what is being done is eliciting little response now; try something different.

Last year, at least when the "Eagle" danced, most people reacted. But this year that part of the half-time show has either been replaced or reformat-ed so that it is even bland and uneventful.

The people in the stands are partly to blame, but it is up to the "entertainment" to adapt to what the audience wants, or to quit.

And from where I stand it is time for the decision to be made.

Sorority celebrates Kwanzaa

By Dana C. Gunter
Staff Writer

On Jan. 9, the sorority of Delta Sigma Theta held a program on the subject of Kwanzaa.

Devida Beard, president of GSU's Xi Eta Chapter of Delta Sigma Theta, said the program was a celebration of the unknown holiday.

"The importance of this program was to celebrate the new harvest, which is a Swahilian celebration," said Beard.

She said the sorority picked Rev. Anthony Chavers to speak as a part of the program because of his reputation.

"He touched base on many of the aspects of Kwanzaa. Overall, the program went well," Beard said.

Rev. Chavers, a well known Georgia pastor, is known for his uplifting messages.

He spoke of the principles of Kwanzaa and how they were important to the past, present, and futures of blacks everywhere.

Reverend Chavers also discussed the importance of unity among people, creativity, responsibility, and individual efforts to make your life full of success and happiness.

"You have to take responsibility for your actions. You can't blame the teacher for giving you a bad grade on the test. You can't blame the test for being so hard. The only person to blame is yourself for not studying, staying up late, and partying. You have to be responsible for yourself and everything else you do," Chavers said.

Although the observance of

"IT TAUGHT ME AS TO WHAT KWANZAA IS ALL ABOUT AND WHY AFRICAN-AMERICANS SHOULD CELEBRATE IT."

— KIM KELLY
JUNIOR

Kwanzaa has past, Delta Sigma Theta wanted to let everyone know what Kwanzaa means to blacks around the world, and the importance of their involvement.

Kwanzaa is a seven-day observance, from Dec. 26 to Jan. 1. It discusses the seven principles of the holiday.

The first day is Umoja. It is the day of unity. The second day is Kujichagulia, which is the day to recognize self-determination and the strength that comes with it.

The third day of Kwanzaa is called Ujima. It is the day of collective work and responsibility.

Ujamaa is the fourth day and it emphasizes collective economics, which is the act of giving back to the community and making it a better place to live in.

Nia/Kuumba is the fifth day of Kwanzaa where purposeful creativity takes place. The sixth day is Imani/Kupenda and it stresses faith and love to yourself and others.

The last day of the celebration brings the family together for a time of happiness and unity at a big feast.

Kim Kelly, a junior at GSU, said the program was educational.

"It taught me as to what Kwanzaa is all about and why African-Americans should celebrate it. Rev. Chavers did not preach; he brought the point home," Kelly said.

"I would liked to have seen more black men at the program so that they would have learned about Kwanzaa. Maybe it would have helped them realize whether they are just in school to say they went or because they want to make a difference," Kelly said.

Delta Sigma Theta said that although America is a nation of many different people, religious beliefs, backgrounds and economic status, it is very important for everyone to remember not only the past but also the future that lies ahead of them.

New honor fraternity comes to GSU

By Kristi Kendrick
Staff Writer

There is yet another new fraternity that has made its way onto the GSU campus.

Phi Sigma Pi is a nationally-recognized honors fraternity that was established right here at GSU.

The Gamma Gamma chapter received its charter on Nov. 11 with 62 members.

The coed fraternity welcomes anyone who has a 3.0 GPA, is interested in academic success, willing to help the community, and wants more from an academic honors fraternity than just something good to put on the résumé.

Benji Thompson, instructor of legal studies, has accepted the offer of becoming the fraternity's advisor. He believes the group's success will come from its diversity.

"I believe that the key to success for this fraternity is to gain leaders from all different walks of life, different backgrounds, and different majors who can come together to do service and for interaction," Thompson said.

He said he believes the fraternity will gain its strength through the diversity of its members.

"I want to see the fraternity become a tight-knit structure of diverse individuals who have one thing in common: academic achievement," Thompson said.

01-Announcements

AD PLACEMENT (For Commercial Enterprises) -- Classified ads in the George-Anne cost 15¢ per word with a $3 minimum per insertion. Please add $1 per ad for mailing and handling for tear-sheet service. The customer is responsible for proofing the ad immediately upon publication. Pre-payment with your ad is appreciated. Call 681-5418 for more information. The George-Anne reserves the right to refuse any advertisement.

AD PLACEMENT (For Students, Faculty & Staff) -- The George-Anne publishes ads for students, faculty and staff which are non-commercial in nature. Submit your ads, 25 words or less, either in person at Room 223 Williams Center during normal business hours (9am to 4pm), or via mail at Landrum Box 8001. Please do not attempt to place free ads via telephone -- at these prices we don't take dictation.

ATTENTION: The George-Anne screens all classified ads prior to publication. The newspaper strives to accept ads for legitimate products & services only. Students are urged to exercise caution when replying to ads, particularly those which ask for money or a credit card number in advance of delivery of products or services. Students are also urged to report to the newspaper (at 681-5418) any suspicious offers they might see in the classifieds. Remember, if an offer seems too good to be true, it probably is.

Savannah State spends wrong money

The Associated Press

SAVANNAH — Savannah State College has mistakenly spent about $88,000 in Chatham County funds at the county's new $1 million track and field complex because of an error in the amount of money on hand, a county audit showed.

The error occurred because the college reported having about $93,000 in county funds left over after construction of the complex, when in fact only about $3,000 remained. The money was used for a scoreboard, bleacher improvements and track and field equipment.

The complex — designed as a place for international track athletes and aspiring Olympians to train — was built on college property at T.A. Wright Stadium. Construction of the track complex was overseen by the college, even though the project was paid for with county tax dollars.

The college's error "was made by not fully identifying all project costs and in prematurely reporting what was there," County Manager Russ Abolt said.

"They said, 'Here are all your costs. Let's come in and do some additional things'" with the excess money, Abolt said. "We thought, 'Well, the money is there. Why not do it?'"

"YES, WE MISCALCULATED THE MONEY AVAILABLE FOR EXPENDITURES."

— GAIL EUBANKS COLLEGE SPOKESWOMAN

But a subsequent routine audit of the project found the college's reporting mistake, he said.

The audit said college officials originally reported $93,000 in excess funds without considering about $90,000 still owed for architectural services, consulting and bid advertising.

"Yes, we miscalculated the money available for expenditures," college spokeswoman Gail Eubanks said in a prepared statement. "Since it was our mistake, we will simply look for ways to correct the situation."

Eubanks declined to say what methods are being considered to correct the error, including whether the college is considering reimbursing the money.

The County Commission was scheduled to vote today to cancel some of the extra expenditures ordered by the college, including about $25,000 for work on the bleachers.

Abolt said about $40,000 worth of items ordered by the college, such as the new scoreboard and some signs, already is installed and can't be canceled.

The county is recommending that about $25,000 spent for new track equipment go forward because it probably will be needed anyway.

Clinton speaks on MLK day

The Associated Press

ATLANTA — President Clinton remembered Martin Luther King Jr. Monday as a man who forced the United States to "face our flaws and become a better nation."

King would have approved sending U.S. troops to keep peace in Bosnia, Clinton added.

The slain civil rights leader's legacy is reminding the nation it must be "the world's drum major for peace," Clinton said, referring to King's own description of himself as a "drum major for justice."

"We know about what they're going through in Bosnia. We started out with a Constitution that stated slaves were not full citizens, not fully human," Clinton said. "We lived through bitter days of lynchings and riots. Still today we struggle to overcome."

Clinton was greeted at Ebenezer Baptist Church with lengthy applause from about 1,500 people and a warm embrace from civil rights activists and black politicians. The crowd stood and chanted, "Four More Years!" as the president rose to speak three hours after he arrived.

King's widow, Coretta Scott King, told Clinton she admires the way he has "stood for the principles of decency," and asked Clinton to "convey our appreciation to Mrs. Clinton, a truly great first lady, very much in the spirit of Eleanor Roosevelt."

Clinton was flanked by Mrs. King and her son, Dexter Scott King. Joseph L. Roberts Jr., urged Clinton to stand strong in his budget battles with Congress.

"We thank God for this president, who is sensitive to the sacredness of every personality," Roberts said. "We know the storms and the struggles through which you and our country and our Congress have gone."

Clinton was flanked by King's widow, Coretta Scott King, and son, Dexter Scott King. As he took the dais, the president embraced Rep. Kweisi Mfume, who was recently named to lead the NAACP.

King, who would have been 67 Monday, was assassinated in 1968.
