Parking department may end ticket grace period

By Kevin Bonsor
Staff Writer

Students will need to have their parking decals prior to the first day of classes if GSU administrators approve a recommendation being brought forth by the department of parking and transportation.

Parking and Transportation Director Robert Chambers is going to take a recommendation to the GSU administration that will allow parking and transportation to ticket GSU students beginning the Monday before classes begin.

In the past, students have had until the first day of classes, which is typically on a Wednesday or Thursday, before they had to worry about getting tickets. That may be moved to the Monday before the first day of classes.

Chambers said the recommendation is being made because "there are so many people on campus, then it creates chaos because it is not regulated."

School president, student switch places for a day

The Associated Press

TIFTON, Ga. — Abraham Baldwin College President Harold Loyd was a student again after trading places with Jennifer Gordon, a nursing major from Quitman. He sat in classrooms while she ran the school.

It was only for a day, and it helped raise money for scholarships.

About 300 students at the junior college in south Georgia paid $1 each for the chance to skip classwork and become president for a day. Ms. Gordon won the drawing sponsored by the Student Government Association.

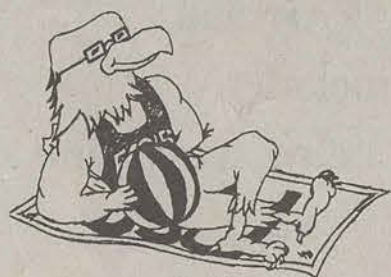

"I got a chance to ask questions students have been wanting to know the answer to, but haven't known where to go or who to ask," said Ms. Gordon, 22.

Britt to replace Robins

By Joshua Edmonson
Senior Staff Writer

A vice president from St. Joseph's College has been selected to replace Perk Robins, who retired recently after serving for eight years at GSU as the vice president for development and university relations, pending approval by the Board of Regents. If approved, James Britt will take office on July 1.

"I am delighted that he is coming," said GSU President Nicholas Henry. "I think he will be an asset to the university and to the entire community."

Britt was chosen from a field of 60 candidates from 25 states.

"The committee indicated to me that they were looking for a candidate with experience, integrity, and someone who has had unique responsibilities," Britt said. "I don't think that I was the only one with those qualities, but I think my mix of those made me stand out. I think the chemistry was good between me, the community leaders, the president, the vice presidents, and the rest of the search committee."

Henry said that Britt has "very good experience in fund raising, public experience, management, and academics."

"The new vice president won the consensus of campus and community leaders who participated in the screening and interviews," said Fred Whitt, dean of the College of Health and Professional Studies and search committee chairman, in a May 8 press release.

"I felt like he has really good experience," Whitt said. "I think he will relate extremely well with folks locally and in the region, as well as corporate presidents, and I think he will relate well with the academic setting."

Britt has served for 20 years at five public and private colleges, the most recent being vice president of institutional advancement and marketing at St. Joseph's College in Indiana.

"It is an almost identical job, but it is a different kind of school," Britt said. "I will be responsible for the same set of responsibilities as before."

Britt, a native of Birmingham, began working at the collegiate level as a counseling director for Florida Southern College. He has also served as dean of continuing studies at Anne Arundel Community College in Maryland, Grand Valley State University in Michigan, and St. Xavier University in Chicago.

While working as the dean of continuing studies at St. Xavier University, Britt was moved into marketing and fund raising after their vice president left. During Britt's tenure at St. Xavier, he set his campaign goals at $8 million, which was met.

In the past six years, Britt's fund raising efforts have raised more than $30 million and set records for annual giving.

Britt holds a bachelor's degree in history and speech and a master's degree in counseling from the University of Alabama.

He also has a master of divinity from Emory University in Atlanta and a doctoral degree in educational psychology and counseling from American University in Washington, D.C.

"I think it is quite fortunate that it is a program that doesn't have to be built from the ground up," Britt said. "The program is solid and the staff is highly competent."

AT&T grant connects schools

By Justin Miller
Assistant News Editor

AT&T has given a $100,000 grant to the University of Southern Queensland in Australia, with whom GSU is working as a part of AT&T's new Global Distance Learning Initiative program.

The program involves 60 universities in 26 countries. AT&T is giving grants to all of these totaling $1 million.

The project that GSU is participating in is headed by the University of Southern Queensland, and will support a collaboration among educational institutions in Australia, Brazil, Hong Kong, Malaysia, Mexico, the Netherlands, South Africa, the United Kingdom, and the United States. The project is designed in the hopes of developing an international Graduate Teaching Certificate in Open and Distance Learning. The program will use telecommunications links, videoconferencing and the Internet.

Marilyn Reznick, vice president for education at the AT&T Foundation, said distance learning can be used to reshape educational systems and institutions around the world by using technology to connect students, teachers and institutions across time and geography.

"As a global communications company, AT&T has a strong interest in technology and education," Reznick said.

In October AT&T announced its AT&T Learning Network, which is a five-year, $150 million plan to connect every public and private elementary and secondary school in America to the information superhighway.

"Now we are reaching out to students, professors and institutions around the world to encourage the use of technology to facilitate communication and enhance teaching and learning," Reznick said.

GSU's third annual Disability Awareness Days to begin next week

By Kim Wagner
Staff Writer

At GSU's third annual Disability Awareness Days, which will be held on May 21 and 22, people will have the opportunity to see guide dog demonstrations, visit the simulation center and exhibits, and watch a wheelchair basketball game, among various other events.

"The whole idea of these two days is to help us identify abilities," said Sue Williams, chair of the Disability Awareness Day committee. "We want to stress the abilities and not the disabilities."

The first day of Disabilities Awareness Days, entitled Sports Day, will consist of two new sporting events and a rematch between Augusta Rack and Rollers and Pi Kappa Alpha. Pool games and relays will take place in the Hanner pool.

Later that day the staff from disability services and the ADA office will play the Eagles at J.I. Clements Field.

The second day of the event will begin with a canine companion dog demonstration.

"We have a young man coming down from Macon who has just graduated Canine Companion for Independence School with his dog, and he's going to show some of the 150 commands his dog knows, like turning on lights, pushing elevator buttons and picking things up," Williams said.

A panel discussion will be held in the Union consisting of people who will discuss their disabilities.

"This will be a very interesting panel," Williams said. "One of the basketball players from the previous day will be on the panel, along with people with visual impairments and a young man who has lost the use of one side of his body from a stroke."

Exhibits about Special Olympics, Paralympics, Savannah Association for the Blind and various other organizations will be in the ballroom and around the commons area of the Union.

"Simulation centers will also be set up in the ballroom which will let people do various exercises which give people an idea of what it might be like to have a particular type of disability," Williams said.

"We have a lot of special technology that people can try, such as computer software that allows people to talk to the computer and then this information will be printed out without ever touching the keyboard," Williams said. "There will also be a football which will have a beeper inside so someone with a visual impairment will hear the football coming."

"Each year the event gets bigger and we hope everyone will participate in this year's Disabilities Awareness Days," Williams said.

Tenure to be reviewed

Staff and Wire Reports

Tenured GSU professors will no longer have the job security they once had.

Last Wednesday the Board of Regents decided to implement post-tenure review for all tenured professors at Georgia's 34 public universities and colleges. The program is scheduled to begin next spring.

The new measure approved by the Board of Regents places Georgia as one of just a few states that have post-tenure review. However, the Board of Regents expects that will be tougher than the post-tenure reviews of other states.

"This is probably the most rigorous post-tenure review policy in the country," said Stephen Portch, chancellor of the University System of Georgia.

While many of GSU's tenured faculty weren't enthusiastic about the new review, most agreed that it will positively impact the tenure standards at GSU. Many administrators echoed their sentiments, and said that the caliber of tenured professors at GSU was high enough that the program wouldn't affect any current tenured teachers' employment status.

"Post-tenure review is not at all a bad thing. Our faculty are fine teachers. If anything, it will help boost the already high standard amongst the tenured faculty," said Roosevelt Newson, dean of the College of Liberal Arts and Social Sciences.

Currently, tenured professors undergo annual evaluations, but the review makes it required for all professors with tenure to have a full job review at least every five years.

Tenure is designed to protect professors from being criticized, or have their job threatened, because of their political and public ideas.

Tenure is generally given to professors after they have been teaching six or seven years and have met their respective department's scholarly requirements for tenure.

Of the 7,600 faculty in the University System of Georgia, approximately 52 percent of them have earned tenure.

SGA must decide future of Shook's recycling program

By Kevin Bonsor
Staff Writer

The SGA recycling program, which was a project begun by SGA Vice President Gavin Shook, could possibly be gone when Shook leaves office May 15. It is not required for SGA to maintain a recycling program, but is something SGA took upon itself two years ago under Ryan Traylor's administration.

It will be up to the new SGA administration to continue the student-sponsored recycling program.

When the project began, SGA worked with former recycling coordinator John Wilson to put recycling bins in the fraternity houses.

This year, Shook, with the assistance of current recycling coordinator Suzanne Venable, was working on a plan to begin a recycling effort in the dorms. Shook and his recycling committee were going to provide the labor; they had mapped out all the dorms that needed bins, and planned to work with the people and find supervisors to oversee the project.

Also this year, SGA worked with the Physical Plant to set up a scholarship fund. Money will be taken out of the recycling fund and put toward a scholarship for students. The details of who will be eligible for the scholarship have not been worked out at this time. If the scholarship is to be awarded annually then the SGA recycling program must continue.

"We were waiting for our administration to go on and do it," Shook said.

Now it will be up to the new Burns administration to pick up this program and carry it into next year.

"I'm going to meet with the new officers and discuss the plan. It's a good plan and we are definitely going to consider it because it offers students a scholarship," Burns said.

Shook gave the new administration a word of caution in proceeding with the program. "If you want to undertake a program like this you must be willing to work night and day," Shook said.

Barr proposes bill that prevents recognition of gay marriages

By Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Georgia Rep. Bob Barr predicted Wednesday that the House will act quickly on his bill denying federal recognition to same-sex marriages while giving states the right to recognize such unions.

Barr, a freshman Republican from Smyrna, said the bill he introduced Tuesday night could reach the House floor as early as next month because House Republican leaders want the measure enacted before a controversial gay-rights case in Hawaii is solved.

The Hawaii Supreme Court ruled in 1993 that the denial of marriage licenses to same-sex couples violates the state's Equal Rights Amendment. Limiting marriage to heterosexuals can be justified, the court said, only if the state can prove a "compelling government interest."

The case was returned to a lower court for trial. Opponents of same-sex marriages contend that if Hawaii is forced at that trial to recognize such unions, other states also could be compelled by the U.S. Constitution to recognize same-sex marriages from Hawaii.

"It's important on as fundamental an issue as this is, going to the fundamental relationship of every state in our union, that it be clarified right now, before the issue is made muddier, before it creates further confusion," said Barr.

Officials of the Human Rights Campaign, a gay rights group, said the Hawaii case isn't likely to be resolved for at least two years. They charged that supporters of anti-gay marriage bills in Congress and 33 state legislatures are jumping on the issue now because it's an election year.

"Religious, political extremists are using this issue as an election year baseball bat to bash gay Americans and score political points," said Elizabeth Birth, the group's executive director.

Barr denied that there was any political motive behind his bill. He said the measure "has nothing to do with presidential politics," although he said he "certainly anticipates" that both President Clinton and Sen. Bob Dole, the likely GOP presidential nominee, will support it.

Barr went to great lengths at a news conference announcing introduction of the bill to argue that it does not outlaw same-sex

"RELIGIOUS,
POLITICAL EXTREMISTS
ARE USING THIS ISSUE
AS AN ELECTION YEAR
BASEBALL BAT TO BASH
GAY AMERICANS..."

— ELIZABETH BIRTH

He said it simply gives each state the right to decide the issue itself, rather than have a decision forced on it by the Constitution's requirement that all states recognize each other's laws.

Eight states, including Georgia, already have enacted legislation denying legal recognition to same-sex marriages. Barr said those states likely would not have to recognize a same-sex marriage from Hawaii, if such unions ultimately became legal there, even if his bill doesn't become law.

But he said other states, where legislatures won't meet again until next year, may be forced to recognize such marriages if the Hawaii case is resolved this summer in favor of gay marriages and Congress doesn't enact his bill before then.

While the bill permits states to decide whether to recognize same-sex marriages, it denies federal recognition by defining marriage as a "legal union between one man and one woman." That definition would deny spousal benefits to same-sex partners under any federal program.

Monkey escapes to
Burger King

The Associated Press

PUNTAGORDA — This one monkey just about stopped the show — for a while at least — at the Burger King east of here.

Shortly before lunchtime, the monkey was spotted outside the fast food restaurant. The 30-pound stump-tailed macaque had escaped from its cage at the Keesling ranch — right next door to the Burger King, Charlotte County Sheriff's Sgt. Randy Crowl says.

The ranch's owners were on vacation, and ranch hands were caring for the animals when the monkey got away.

Over at the Burger King, off-duty Deputy Chris Pifer called in to report what looked like a baboon on the loose.

Other deputies joined up, chasing the monkey back toward the ranch.

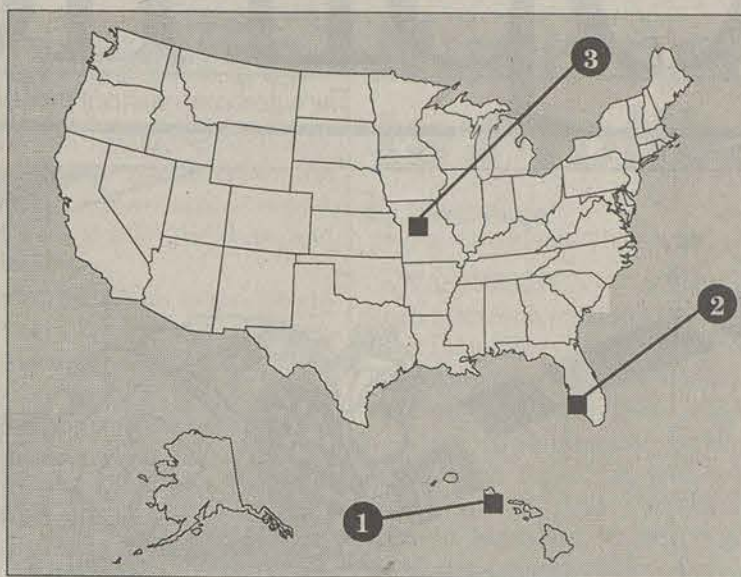

"He got up on buildings and was swinging from trees and doing things that monkeys do. We just eye-balled him until the pros got there," Crowl said.

The monkey then led its pursuers on a nearly three-hour chase through the neighboring fields.

Charlotte County Animal Control Director Keith Larson finally managed to get the loop of his capture stick around the animal.

"It wasn't one of the easier jobs we've done," Larson said. "He was fast and a lot better at climbing over fences than me."

Looking back on all the monkey business, Crowl, said the simian simply "had a hankering for a Whopper."

Couple marries in the

The Associated Press

SEDALIA — They didn't have the state Highway Department's blessing.

It didn't matter.

Candy Key married Clyde Rotramel in the same spot where he had proposed — the left-turn lane of Missouri Highway 50, in front of the Double D Express Mart convenience store.

The betrothed wore black leather.

The minister stood next to their Harley-Davidson.

A monster truck, complete with an "I Eat Lowriders" bumper sticker, held the guests.

The ceremony Saturday did not have the approval of the Missouri Highway Department; the wedding party simply stopped their vehicles in the middle of the four-lane road.

The bride and groom took their vows, kissed, and then left, all in about three minutes.

"Beautiful day to get married," Rotramel said.

Parents marry at their

The Associated Press

LAS VEGAS — The parents of a 2-year-old girl who was accidentally struck and killed by her father's truck got married at the funeral in front of the child's open casket.

Mark Macdonald, 40, said he wanted his wedding to take place with his daughter there.

Macdonald and Ann Scarpelli had been living together for six years but never married, in part because they couldn't afford a big ceremony, Scarpelli said.

On Sunday, their daughter, Cherish Justine Macdonald-

Scarpelli, was killed. Macdonald told police he did not realize she had wandered into an alley behind their home. No charges were filed.

"I suggested it would be very good for everyone concerned if the parents finally married," said the Rev. James Burns, who performed the wedding.

Scarpelli said she was glad to have shared the wedding with both of her children.

71-year-old grandmother charged with robbing gas station at gunpoint

The Associated Press

WEST COVINA, Calif. — A 71-year-old grandmother was charged with trying to rob a gasoline station at gunpoint, a crime that could lead to 13 years in prison if she's convicted.

Mary Ruth Blanco was charged with felony attempted second-degree robbery with the allegation she used a handgun in commission of a crime.

Blanco, whose bail was reduced from $60,000 to $5,000 during a court appearance, was released to family members late Tuesday. Wearing a blue and white flowered dress, she left the courthouse with her husband and stepped into a swarm of television cameras.

She muttered to reporters, "I appreciate it," when she was told that people had called authorities offering to help her. Later, at her home, she said of her experience: "It's been hell."

Her arraignment, originally scheduled for Tuesday, was postponed until May 22.

Blanco's husband said she apparently snapped because of financial problems.

"I want people to understand that Mary is a very good, sweet person and she is not a criminal," said Raymond Blanco, her 75-year-old husband. "I don't think she even knew what she was doing."

Blanco allegedly drove her pickup truck to a nearby Unocal station before dawn Saturday, pointed a .32-caliber handgun at

"I WANT PEOPLE TO

— RAYMOND BLANCO,

the clerk and demanded money. The clerk, safe behind bullet-proof glass, called police and the woman fled.

The clerk copied the woman's license plate number and police arrested the woman.

A complaint accuses Blanco of trying to take money "willfully, unlawfully and by means of force fear."

The maximum sentence if convicted is 13 years in prison with the mandatory minimum set at four years, four months, said Deputy District Attorney Dave Demerjian.

"Probation is not an option when you use a firearm," the Los Angeles County prosecutor said.

Raymond Blanco said the couple was in trouble with the Internal Revenue Service and a mortgage company.

The couple learned last week that the IRS was going to garnish half of retired postal worker Raymond Blanco's $750 pension check for eight months for back taxes. A few days later, the mortgage company threatened to foreclose on their house.

Raymond Blanco said he and his wife had consulted a tax preparer about their problems with the IRS and were awaiting word on what to do when the garnishment letter arrived.

Mary Blanco was also helping to care for her daughter, son-in-law and 2 1/2-week-old granddaughter.

In addition, she has diabetes and still was recovering from a fall that broke several ribs a few months ago, Raymond Blanco said.

Our Opinion

Grade quotas are harmful

If the English and philosophy department has been distributing grades along a bell-shaped curve, as the figures seem to indicate, the implications for students are clear.

A bell-shaped curve grading system means students have not been getting the grades they have earned; instead, they have been receiving the grades necessary to fill a departmental quota.

Some have argued that grading on a curve usually benefits the students. If their definition of beneficial is giving a student who earned an F a D or a student who earned a B an A as his or her final grade, then, yes the curve grading system could be misconstrued as beneficial to students.

Curving a student's grades, though, which perhaps in the short-term seems beneficial, harms the student in the future.

For instance, if a student earned an F in an English course, he or she probably earned that F for a very legitimate reason. Perhaps the student does not understand or apply standard rules of grammar. Giving the student a D simply because the professor needs more D's and fewer F's will not benefit the student educationally. His or her future employer is not likely to overlook the obvious ignorance of basic grammar rules.

Had the student been given the F that was earned, he or she would have been forced to take the class a second time to improve in the areas of deficiency. In this case, the student's education would not have been sacrificed in order to fulfill a departmental quota.

Perhaps the unfairness of the bell curve grading system is more obvious in the case of a student who earns an A receiving a B to fulfill the same departmental quota. While many claim that grades are not "curved down" as often as they are "curved up," the magical grade distribution deemed appropriate by the department does not happen accidentally.

Finally, the bell curve grading system is detrimental to the educational mission of a university, and in some cases may belittle the credentials of a degree. Grades should be assigned according to merit, not a prejudicial system designed for the benefit of a department's image.

Your Opinion

Bell curve study shows nothing

Editor,
In Justin Miller's article, "Department's grades inconsistent with GSU's," (May 9) it is implied that something is wrong with grading on the bell-shaped curve. When I was an undergraduate at GSU, then Georgia Teachers College, every class graded on the bell curve. In most cases our averages were pushed up rather than pulled down.

The bell curve is a standard way of grading used by many colleges and universities. Your graphs say absolutely nothing.

'Shhh, be quiet' whispers the administration

CHRISTOPHER COLE

EDITOR

A message arrived in The George-Anne's e-mail account recently that inspired me to explain why our newspaper has so aggressively pursued stories this year related to mishaps and corruptions among faculty and staff at GSU.

The message was a simple criticism of the G-A's investigative reports on the Campus Life Enrichment Committee and its improper use of student money without following membership guidelines prescribed in its own by-laws. The critic who penned this message said he had known CLEC Director Maria Cahill for some five years and had found her to be a pleasant and honorable person.

Based on the argument that he had never observed anything amiss in Ms. Cahill's character — which I don't doubt — he asked bluntly why we had led the attack on CLEC and had scrutinized this committee so deeply.

His criticism touts the tired line that runs the gamut of backlash against the campus press in recent years: That is, the idea that faculty and staff should be somehow above the law that whacks students all the time.

The press, contrary to the elitist attitude of countless professors and administrators, has been the only entity around here that has been willing to cut beneath the happy-go-lucky image of GSU and reveal serious problems and grave errors that many people wish would go unnoticed.

It is also the only entity that has consistently stood up for the rights and interests of students — who, in case some haven't realized, are in the vast majority around here.

My theory is that a campus press, if it is doing its job correctly, comes under fire continually for the very reason that it unveils hidden issues. Rebuttals against the press are especially vicious on a college campus because some of the ivory-tower employees perceive that their word should be the last. After all, they're accustomed to having power over students.

In reference to the case in point, CLEC became a matter of importance this year because the student press was able to get the inside story on a rip-off being played upon our fellows. I am certain the critic in this instance would be gratified to see public relations-style hype about CLEC and all the wonderful things it does for GSU. There's been plenty of that in G-A history, but a deeper, more crucial story takes precedence.

The reports on CLEC, which have drawn few complaints except from Ms. Cahill herself, remain true to the standard of fairness. The director has been given repetitive, even excessive, opportunities to refute allegations against her and the committee she runs, but has almost never taken advantage of them.

I don't question the belief that Ms. Cahill's personal character is aboveboard. Even though I can't verify that since she won't have a lengthy conversation with me, I'm sure she's a nice woman. But her personal character has never been called into question in these pages, nor is it relevant to the ethical shortcomings of her operation.

The way she runs CLEC seems to demonstrate a less-than-progressive attitude toward ethical conduct. But I am more concerned with the administration's conspicuous silence on this issue. Student government is the only group to take some kind of action on it, which is no surprise.

Where were the higher-ups when all of this was going on, and what do they have to say about it now that CLEC has been denied a funding increase?

The echo of this silence can be heard when it comes to other issues, including the recent controversy over the Professor of the Year being fired. Officials won't talk about grade quotas, the bell curve, or any of that nasty stuff, while depending on more vulnerable staffers to be the scapegoats.

At the top of the quiet ivory tower is GSU President Nicholas Henry, whose suspiciously curt responses to questions over the years have earned him a reputation for quelling conflicts by starving them. You can never get a grasp of how Dr. Henry really feels about a controversial subject because he doesn't seem to want it sticking to him. Ronald Reagan's title of "Teflon President" applies to Dr. Henry more than we realize.

Perhaps he avoids scrutiny because his own ethical lapses would be damaging. Consider a 1994 speech in which he glorified Gov. Zell Miller as a "true-blue friend" of GSU during candidate Miller's campaign stop to woo campus voters. The remarks were a virtual endorsement of the candidate from someone in a position of influence over students. It certainly won political points for Dr. Henry.

Sounds like a stretch to call that unethical? Opponents of John Walraven who questioned his ethics after he endorsed a candidate for SGA president were nowhere to be found when Dr. Henry made this obviously tainted slip-up.

That is an example of staff being "above the law."

If it were not for free speech and a dedicated press, none of these issues would come to light. That we do bring them to light is the reason we are perceived as cynical and aggressive.

When will we recognize a mother's sacrifice?

AMANDA CREWS

MANAGING EDITOR

With another Mother's Day come and gone, I have begun to reflect on how little we appreciate the importance of motherhood in America. Sure, we pay lip service to the fact that being a mother is one of, if not the, most important jobs on the face of the earth.

Do we, as a society, though, recognize the important role mothers play in training and guiding the leaders of the next generation?

In the era in which we live, women who choose to stay at home to bring up their children instead of pursuing a career are often looked down upon by many of their peers. If we respect motherhood as one of the most important responsibilities in the world, as we claim, then why do we belie this claim by turning up our noses at those women who choose to be "full-time" mothers?

The fact that in this day and age we must distinguish between "full-time" and "working" moms speaks volumes in itself. Being a mother is a full-time job whether a woman chooses to remain at home or pursue a secular career, or at least it should be.

Many women work every day cleaning the house, making nutritious meals, playing and teaching their children, helping them to grow up to be responsible citizens, all to feel ashamed to admit they are homemakers when asked about their occupations. Is this the respect mothers deserve? Whether they work outside of the home or not, all mothers perform a valuable service to society, a service many people ignore 364 days out of the year.

Most of us, I hope, love our mothers dearly and would attack anyone who dared to besmirch her great name. But do we individually appreciate all that our mothers have sacrificed for us?

Let's consider all the things our mothers have done for us and will continue to do for us, things which no other soul on the face of the earth, including wives, husbands, friends, children or relatives, would ever think of doing for us.

Who else, besides a mother, would willingly and continually get up at 4:00 a.m., night after night, because we were hungry or sick?

Who else, besides a mother, would wipe food, dirt or other assorted messes off of our faces with her own saliva? For that matter, who else would we allow to rub spit on our faces?

Who else, besides a mother, would feed us chicken noodle soup and wait on us hand and foot when we are sick?

Who else, besides a mother, would starve, if necessary, just to buy us the clothes and food that we need or even just want?

Who else, besides a mother, would be able to refrain from telling us to shut up after we asked the same, exact question 20 times? At Wal-Mart, I heard one boy ask his mother "What's making it wiggle, Mommy?" at least 12 times in a row. She just patiently said, "I don't know, baby" 12 times in return.

Who else, besides a mother, will always be there to give you honest and helpful advice at any time, day or night, even if you think you're grown and can figure things out for yourself? By the way, you'll never be grown in your mother's eyes. As my mama often tells me, "I don't know why you think you're grown all of a sudden. When you're 50 years old, you'll still be my baby."

Who else, besides a mother, would stand by humbly as you succeed in life, deferring all the credit to you and never taking any for herself? When I try to compliment my mother on the excellent job she has done in rearing her children, she just says, "Well, I had good material to work with."

Who else, besides a mother, loves us unconditionally? Even spouses love one another with certain conditions attached. Thus, we have statements like, "if you cheat on me, I'll kill you." Or "if you don't treat me with respect, you're out the door buddy." Why else would we have a 50 percent divorce rate?

Your mother, though, will love you even if no one else does, and she will continue to love you no matter what you might say or do. Just think, the Charles Mansons of the world even have mothers who continue to love them.

Since we could never even make a dent in repaying the debt we owe to our mothers, it is a good thing they don't expect anything in return in the first place. The least we could do is express the love and gratitude we show for them on Mother's Day every day of the year.

Republicans meet to unite

The Associated Press

AUGUSTA, Ga. — State School Superintendent Linda Schrenko appealed to party faithful at the Georgia Republican Convention for help in dealing with the Democratic state school board.

In a barely calm voice, Mrs. Schrenko told the GOP delegates how the Board of Education had quietly voted to appoint its own chairman supervisor of the Department of Education. That gives the chairman the power to hire, fire, and promote, and leaves Mrs. Schrenko with control over only five employees in her office, she said.

"I need your help," she said. Mrs. Schrenko said she would meet with attorneys attending the convention to determine if legal action could be taken to overturn the board's decision.

Only about half of the 2,200 delegates expected at the two-day meeting appeared to be seated in the convention hall.

U.S. Sen. Paul Coverdell named former Savannah mayor Susan Weiner as head of his Good Government for Georgia Committee, a political action committee designed to support state and local GOP candidates.

None of the resolutions approved were controversial, although state party chairman Rusty Paul made an appeal to support the national party's abortion plank, said Richmond County chairman Bob Gardner.

"We've got our hands full in November," said Columbia County Republican chairman

Duncan Wheale. "We don't need to be fighting among ourselves and losing sight of the real target."

The state GOP hopes to use the convention to heal party fractures and unite behind probable GOP presidential nominee Bob Dole.

"We're getting battle-ready this weekend," said Oscar Persons, chairman of Dole's Georgia

"THERE'S A HUNGER IN GEORGIA FOR THE REPUBLICAN PARTY TO COMPLETE THE CIRCLE OF 1994."

— OSCAR PERSONS, DOLE'S GEORGIA CAMPAIGN CHAIRMAN

campaign. "There's a hunger in Georgia for the Republican Party to complete the circle of 1994."

The delegates will choose the last nine of the state's 42 delegates to go to the national GOP convention in San Diego in August, where the party's nominee and platform for the fall election will be finalized.

House Speaker Newt Gingrich seized the role of cheerleader.

"I will work to elect a Republican president and to continue a Republican majority in Congress," Gingrich told The Augusta Chronicle.

"This is the most important election in 100 years. If we can arouse the great mass of citizens, together we can defeat the Washington power structure that wants control of our lives and our children."

After Gingrich spoke, he introduced the keynote speaker, Elizabeth Dole. Mrs. Dole called Gingrich to ask that he introduce her, which should stop any rumors about a division between the two camps, said Gingrich press secretary Allan Lipsett.

Rep. Charlie Norwood, R-Ga., also touted unity as the key to a Dole victory in the fall.

"If we want to pass our legislation before this century ends, clearly we've got to have a president that will sign it," he said.

Democrats, meanwhile, want to use Gingrich's high negative ratings against every Republican candidate, said Brian Rubenstein, deputy communications director for the Georgia Democratic Party.

"If they try and run a Bill Clinton vs. Newt Gingrich campaign, they're going to be in trouble," Rubenstein said.

A recent statewide poll for Omni Research Group of Atlanta showed 35.7 percent of Georgians had a favorable opinion of Gingrich while nearly 50 percent did not. But Gingrich said that won't prevent him from getting out and working the state.

"I don't worry about the poll numbers right now," Gingrich said.

"We've had $60 million of false advertising run against us, but we're going to spend the fall telling the truth."

Nunn calls plan for gasoline tax rollback 'a silly idea'

By David Pace
The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — A Republican plan for a gasoline tax rollback is "a silly idea" that won't help consumers or the taxpayers, Sen. Sam Nunn, D-Ga., said.

Nunn, in an informal conversation with reporters, said he's disappointed that President Clinton indicated he will sign legislation temporarily repealing the 4.3 cents-per-gallon gasoline surcharge that was imposed three years ago as part of a Clinton deficit-reduction package.

The recent surge in gas prices is market-driven and has nothing to do with the gas tax, he said, adding that the chances are "about zero" that consumers will see any of the $2.9 billion in lost federal revenues that would result from a rollback.

"Do I think it's a silly idea? I do," Nunn said. "I think it doesn't make sense economically. It doesn't make sense for the consumer. I don't think it makes sense for the taxpayer, and it certainly doesn't make sense from any kind of environmental point of view."

Nunn's Georgia colleague,

Republican Sen. Paul Coverdell, has been one of the more outspoken proponents of the gas tax rollback first proposed by Senate Majority Leader Bob Dole, the likely GOP presidential nominee.

Coverdell said that repealing

"... IT CERTAINLY DOESN'T MAKE SENSE FROM ANY KIND OF ENVIRONMENTAL POINT OF VIEW."

— U.S. SEN. SAM NUNN

And he said Clinton was wrong to open up the strategic petroleum reserve in response to surging gasoline prices.

"I think it's politics on both sides," said Nunn. "I think it's basically saying to the American people, 'We think you're dumb enough to believe all this.' And I don't believe the American people are dumb. I think they're a lot smarter."

Clinton's promise to sign the gas tax rollback, now making its way through the House and Senate, was conditioned on Congress approving separate legislation raising the $4.25 minimum wage, which most Republicans oppose.

Nunn said he likely will vote for the minimum wage increase, but thinks low-income workers would be helped more if Congress increased the earned income tax credit or gave workers an income tax credit for what they pay in Social Security payroll taxes.

The gas tax and minimum wage issues have deadlocked the Senate in recent weeks as Dole and Clinton play out the first ever presidential race between the Senate's majority leader and a sitting president.

the gasoline surcharge for the rest of the year would lower the tax burden on poor, working families.

"This gas tax doesn't go to build roads," he said. "It's a user fee being dumped into the general fund to grow the size of government."

Nunn criticized Republicans for failing to offer a plan to offset the $2.9 billion in lost revenue the tax rollback would cost the government.

Senate ethics committee dismisses complaint against Paul Coverdell

The Associated Press

ATLANTA — The Senate ethics committee has dismissed a complaint against Sen. Paul Coverdell, R-Ga., who was accused of illegally using his official Senate database for fundraising purposes.

The committee said the Clean Air Trust failed to back up its complaint.

Coverdell said he was pleased. "The Clean Air Trust should be ashamed for making this unfounded charge without first getting the facts," he said.

A spokesman for the trust did not immediately return a telephone call seeking comment.

The complaint contended Coverdell used his official Senate database for a mass mailing seeking campaign contributions.

The trust based its contention on two letters. On Nov. 3, 1995, the trust sent Coverdell a letter signed by Sens. Edmund S. Muskie and Robert T. Stafford, honorary co-chairmen of the trust. On April 5, Coverdell sent the trust a letter addressed to Muskie, who had died a few days earlier, seeking campaign contributions.

The Clean Air Trust said the letters suggest Coverdell improperly took Muskie's name and address from his official Senate database and used it to seek campaign contributions.

"You have not provided the committee with any facts and information to justify such a conclusion," the committee told the trust.

Coverdell spokeswoman Donna Pierson said the Muskie address used on the campaign solicitation letter most likely came from a purchased mailing list. It is a different address for Muskie than the one listed in Coverdell's Senate database, she said.

The Best and Worst in the NBA

Now that we are in the midst of the NBA playoffs, I can't help but reminisce on some of the ever-so-peculiar incidents that occurred. Some of them were good, and others were bad.

That is why I have bestowed upon myself, the privilege to reward and "de"ward some of the players and teams for their actions.

Hence, I present to you for the first time ever, The George-Anne NBA Awards.

 Stay in School Award - While there is a host of nominees for this one, let's go ahead and give it to Kevin Garnett, the first intellectual in years to go pro.

 Best NBA Cheerleaders - For the 1,000th year in a row, the Laker Girls.

 "Please Retire" Award - Tie between Magic Johnson or Robert Parrish. You were once good, with the key word being "were."

 Pretty Boy Award - Steve Kerr, who was the only person I saw all year that combed his hair during an interview.

 Best Player Nickname - "Never Nervous" Pervis Ellison

 Christopher Cole Award - named after the editor of The George-Anne, this is given to the player who causes the most controversy. Who would argue that when there is controversy, there is Dennis Rodman.

 Best NBA Publicist - What the heck. Let's give this one to Rodman too. Who would watch every single episode of Sports Center if it didn't have "the Worm" in it.

 Most Overpaid Player - Kobe Bryant, and he hasn't even played a game yet.

 Absence Award - Hawks fans. Typical for Atlanta. They just show up when the team is winning.

 Hocus Pocus Award - Cedric Ceballos, and it's not the dunk he did several years ago either. It was that disappearing act he did when nobody, including his teammates, knew where he was.

 Best Fans - Definitely the Spike Lee led New York Knick fans. Just ask Pat Riley.

 Best NBA Mascot - Crunch the Wolf, from Minnesota.

 Best Starting Line-up Introductions - The Chicago Bulls, and it is all because of their PA announcer.

 Best NBA Commercial - Without a doubt the Visa commercial where Hakeem Olajuwon says he's going to treat these guys for lunch.

 Ugliest home court - This one is a tie between Houston and Toronto.

 Ugliest home uniforms - Houston again. They are going for the sweep of the big uglies.

 Ugliest Player - Four-way tie between Patrick Ewing, George Muresan, Shaun Bradley, and Sam Cassell.

 The George-Anne Award - The most honorable award, given to the team who is liked by many, cussed by some, but watched by them all... the Chicago Bulls, whose 70-plus win season was nothing less than spectacular.

Congratulations to the winners. For those of you who didn't make it, try harder next year, because only the best of the best (or worst of the worst) make it here.

Nieto invited to NCAA tennis championships

GSU News Service

Elizabeth Nieto, a Lady Eagle tennis player, was invited to participate in the NCAA National Championship on May 21 in Tallahassee, Fla.

With a season record of 17-1, Nieto is the most honored tennis player in GSU history as a three-time Southern conference Player-of-the-Year and four-time Tournament MVP.

During her GSU career, Nieto earned a 68-4 record and currently ranks 55th in the ITA Collegiate Poll.

"What better way to end her collegiate career than to earn a bid to the national tournament," said Jim Reese, assistant coach. "Being selected one of the elite 64 in the nation is a great way for Elizabeth to go out with a bang, considering all she's accomplished here at Southern.

"She's excited and nervous but you won't notice because one she gets on the court she remains cool and focused and just does her business," Reese said. "Everyone at GSU is proud and excited for her."

Butler not giving up cancer bout

By William E. Schultz

The Associated Press

ATLANTA - Sidelined with cancer, Los Angeles Dodgers center fielder Brett Butler is not giving up.

"We're going to beat this thing. One of these days I'm going to be back out there tipping my hat, and hopefully everything will be all right," Butler said Wednesday, five days after a surgeon removed a plum-sized tumor that grew in his right tonsil.

The 38-year-old Butler, who once played for the Atlanta Braves and makes his home in suburban Duluth, did not rule out a return to the playing field this season.

"I don't know. Let's wait," he told television station KNBC of Los Angeles, which sent a reporter to Atlanta to interview him.

"Is there a chance that I could play this year? Talking to all the doctors and everything, I don't know if there is a chance that I can come back. If it is, it would probably be late in the season. Then again, we're not going to close any door right now," he said.

Butler said he was "overwhelmed" by the response from friends and fans.

Dr. Robert Gadlage, who was treating Butler for tonsillitis for the past two months, said he tried to conceal his shock when he looked into his throat minutes before a scheduled routine tonsillectomy.

Garagiola and others want to lose the tradition of tobacco

By Beth Harris

The Associated Press

LOS ANGELES - Former major league catcher Joe Garagiola wants to rid baseball of a habit he says was never part of the game's tradition chewing tobacco.

Bill Tuttle, whose cheeks bulged with the stuff during the 1950s, wishes he'd gotten the message years ago. After four operations for cancer, Tuttle uses his reedy voice to warn players about the dangers of chewing the intoxicating leaf.

Now 66, Tuttle has squamous cell carcinoma, the same cancer doctors discovered last week in the tonsils of Brett Butler of the Los Angeles Dodgers during a tonsillectomy.

"I chewed 37 years before it got me," said Tuttle, an outfielder for Detroit, Kansas City and Minnesota during an 11-year major league career. "Guys like Brett Butler, he only chewed a few years and all of a sudden this came up out of nowhere."

Butler and his doctor have downplayed the outfielder's use of chewing tobacco early in his career as a cause of the cancer. Instead, they point to the secondhand smoke Butler was exposed to as a child by his chain-smoking parents.

Still, the shocking news about Butler has many major leaguers thinking harder about their own tobacco habits.

"It's definitely a hard thing to quit, because it becomes like a ritual for you," said Atlanta's Chipper Jones, who has been chewing since he was 15. "I've quit a number of times and found

"IT'S DEFINITELY A HARD THING TO QUIT, BECAUSE IT BECOMES LIKE A RITUAL FOR YOU. I'VE QUIT A NUMBER OF TIMES AND FOUND MYSELF TWO OR THREE DAYS AFTER THE FACT STARTING BACK UP, NOT HAVING REALLY REALIZED IT. myself two or three days after the fact starting back up, not having really realized it. It's like you're walking out of the clubhouse and you just throw one in (your mouth) as a pregame ritual."

Nevertheless, there are signs that tobacco, already banned in the minor leagues, is becoming less of a fixture around big league clubhouses and dugouts.

Several major league teams — including California, Milwaukee and Philadelphia — no longer have tobacco readily available next to the packs of chewing gum and sunflower seeds in their clubhouses.

Four Braves buy minor league team

The Associated Press

AUSTIN, Minn. — Three Atlanta Braves pitchers have each purchased 10 percent of the Southern Minny Stars, the Prairie League baseball team based in this southern Minnesota city.

The team announced Thursday that Braves pitchers Steve Avery, Tom Glavine and John Smoltz have joined former Braves catcher Gregg Olson as co-owners.

Olson manages the team, formerly the Minneapolis Loons before moving to Austin this year. Together, the four own 40 percent of the Southern Minny Stars.

The other owners are Joe Kardock and Dick Jensch.

"We're all in this together," Avery said. "This will be a new experience, and I think we'll be keen to the players' needs. It's all experimental, so we'll see how it works."

Olson was a batterymate of the three pitchers in the 1991 World Series, which the Braves lost to the Minnesota Twins in seven games.

Olson has maintained contact with his former teammates since injuries forced his retirement as a player, and asked the three pitchers if they were interested in owning part of the Minny Stars, Avery said.

"This is definitely not something we explored on our own. It was something to help a friend. Now we'll get a chance to view this game from the other side of the fence," he said.

The Southern Minny Stars open the season May 30 at Marcusen Park in Austin.

Maddux not worried about swelling ERA

By Paul Newberry

The Associated Press

ATLANTA (AP) - Greg Maddux has the highest ERA among Atlanta's four starters, a shocking development for the Atlanta Braves.

"He's probably just spotting us an early lead, so he can make a late run at the Cy Young," said teammate Tom Glavine, the last pitcher to win the NL Cy Young before Maddux began his streak of four consecutive awards.

After giving up 10 runs in his last two starts, Maddux (4-2) saw his ERA climb to 3.05. That's almost twice as high as the numbers he posted the past two years, when he was the most dominating pitcher in baseball, but still more than a run below the league average.

"I'm sure there are 22 other guys who would love to have him," said Glavine, who got his ERA below Maddux's by pitching four-hit ball for eight innings in a 5-1 victory over the Rockies on Wednesday night. "The fact that he has the highest ERA among the starters just shows the quality of pitching we have around here."

Maddux certainly doesn't look concerned.

Munching on a hamburger after he gave up four runs in eight innings to Colorado on Tuesday, he shrugged off questions about his "slump."

"I don't feel like I'm in a slump really," he said. "If I was out there making bad pitches on a consistent basis, yeah, I would say I was in a slump. If I was weak mentally, not confident in what I was doing out there, yeah, I would say I was in a slump."

Maddux insisted that his pitches are "not too far different than they were last year and the year before."

In a way, he has become a victim of his own brilliance, since everyone expects him to duplicate what he did the past two seasons: 16-6 with a 1.56 ERA in 1994 and 19-2 with a 1.63 ERA last year.

"What happened in the past was I caught a lot of breaks," he said. "I was making good pitches, but it was kind of ridiculous what happened last year."

Actually, Maddux's ERA would be in familiar territory if he could make two pitches over again.

Last Friday, he gave up the first regular-season grand slam of his career to Benito Santiago in the ninth inning of a 6-3 loss to the Phillies.

Against the Rockies, the right-hander was cruising along with a 2-0 lead in the seventh when Vinny Castilla hit a three-run homer off the foul pole in left.

"I tried to throw him a fastball in, thinking he can't keep it in fair territory," Maddux said. "I knew he would get a good swing at it, but I just needed it in a little more."

Maddux was in line to lose two straight starts for the first time since June 1994, but he wound up with a no-decision after the Braves scored three runs in the ninth to tie the game 5-5 and one in the 10th to win it 6-5.

For Maddux, though, the art of pitching should not be judged on mere numbers. He would rather make a good pitch and give up a bloop single than have a bad pitch turn into a line-drive out.

"Most people think the outcome of a game determines how you're pitching, but that's not necessarily true," he said. "I don't get too caught up in the outcome of games. I'm happy with the way I'm throwing."

Manager Bobby Cox agreed.

"I think it's a little ridiculous to be worried about Greg," he said.

and contribute to periodontal disease.

A popular practice in the majors is dipping snuff, putting tobacco processed into a coarse, moist powder between the cheek and gum. That, too, exposes the Cy Young Award winner said. "It's not so much that it gives you pleasure when you do it. It causes you discomfort when you don't do it."

Cincinnati Reds pitcher Jeff Brantley considered the plight of his friend Butler and quit, just like that.

"I came to the ballpark, and I took the chewing tobacco out of my locker and put it in the trash can," Brantley told ESPN. "I'm not going to touch the stuff. Life to me is a little bit more important to me than sticking tobacco in your mouth."

Tuttle has learned that lesson too late. His cancer was discovered in his right cheek, even though he stuck his tobacco wad in the left side.

Tuttle's agonizing pain shows on his disfigured face. The right side is sunken and he has no jawbone, despite doctors' attempts to rebuild his face using skin from his neck.

His teeth are gone, leaving him to gum the food he can't taste anyway because radiation killed his taste buds.

"I blame this all on tobacco," his wife, Gloria, said from the couple's home in suburban Minneapolis. "My husband was addicted and he'll be the first to admit that. He has lived in hell for 2 1/2 years. I feel so badly for the Butlers, because I know what they still have to go through."

Two foreign students experience International Week at GSU

French student Babette Dijols improves her English in America

By Wayne Waters
Staff Writer

Babette Dijols is a 22-year-old GSU student from France, and has found life in the U.S. to be all that she dreamed it would.

Dijols, who speaks English, a little Spanish and, of course, her native tongue, left the comforts of France to begin her college life in the U.S.

How does a young person growing up in France end up attending a university in south Georgia?

"I was in Paris studying at a hostelry school (hotel operations management) for two years after cause she didn't have a chance to visit it in her earlier visit.

Both Dijols and Chouraqui applied to several schools, but GSU was the first to accept their applications.

"I like the life I have here," Dijols said. "It is very different from my life in Paris, but the campus is nice and I have made some nice friends."

Dijols continues to work on her English language skills, but the great difficulty lies in missing her family and friends back home.

However, it didn't take long for her to develop new friend-parents will come and we will all take a vacation together," Dijols said.

She plans to get a bachelor's degree from GSU and then work in the U.S. for a year, as it is allowed by the U.S. government policy, before heading back to France.

Dijols said she will continue to do a little scuba diving, which is near the top of her list of favorite things to do since taking the course here at GSU.

In securing her diving diploma, Dijols had the thrilling experience of swimming with manatees in the Crystal River

Hisako Nakada 'grew up with American culture' all around her

By Wayne Waters
Staff Writer

She is from the Deep South — the southern part of the island nation of Japan, that is. Her name is Hisako Nakada and she is a 23-year-old communication arts major here at GSU who grew up on the Okinawa Islands.

"I grew up with American culture all around me," Nakada said. "There is a large American military base on the island, so I was used to seeing Americans and hearing the English language."

She said Japan is a country that is influenced greatly by other nations.

"I had access to American television, movies and popular music," Nakada said. "Even though Japan is a very traditional society, there is plenty of international influence."

Nakada originally came to the U.S. to learn computer graphics and to improve her English. Though she had always done well in her English language classes in Japan, Nakada knew she would improve tremendously if she used the language in its natural environment.

GSU was not Nakada's first choice for her college career. She applied to Ohio Valley Junior College in West Virginia first, but while finishing the core curriculum courses there, her interests had expanded to include the broader spectrum of mass communication and media studies.

According to Nakada, most things here in the U.S. are only half the cost of the same item in Japan. Can you imagine shelling out $15 for the latest movie? She said this is the typical cost for a movie in Japan.

Nakada said she will graduate sometime next year and plans to work in the advertising field as a career.

Until then, Nakada said she will continue to study hard and maybe even learn a new language, probably French.

Nakada said she attended some of the festivities associated with International Week.

"It's a good chance for students from various international backgrounds to meet," Nakada said. "It's good to get to know each other."

finishing the French equivalent of high school," Dijols said. "I consulted with friends and with the director of the school and they all suggested that I continue my studies and improve my English."

Dijols' voice and accent has quality that is particularly pleasing to ears accustomed to the harder edge of the English language, but when she speaks French, the effect is even more compelling.

"I figured the best way to improve my English was to live in an English-speaking country," Dijols said.

She thought about going to school at a closer site, but decided going to college in America would be the better choice.

"I thought about England, which was closer, of course," Dijols said. "But I had spent one summer in America when I was 15 years old, and I had very good memories of the trip."

Dijols and a friend traveled the U.S. to see if this was where they wanted to attend college.

"I visited Los Angeles, San Diego, Philadelphia and the state of Connecticut," Dijols said. "So I decided, along with my good friend Cynthia Chouraqui, to apply to universities in the U.S."

Dijols wanted to be in the southern part of the U.S. be-ships.

"I've met students from Belgium, Bulgaria, Honduras, Venezuela, Turkey and other places," Dijols said. "In some ways we are all different, but in another way, we are kind of all the same because we are far from home and have no family here."

She was also fortunate to get a "host family," in the person of Denise McCaslin, GSU Spanish professor.

Dijols said she is looking forward to seeing her family this summer.

"My little sister, Elise, is coming to stay with me for several weeks in July, and then my near Tampa.

"These big, wonderful sea creatures actually let me scratch their stomachs," Dijols said. "They were quite playful and would swim around or come up to you so that you could rub their bellies."

International Week at GSU offers people of all cultures the chance to interact with each other in an environment of mutual appreciation and respect of each other's beliefs.

"I think International Week is a great idea," Dijols said. "It offers students a chance to get a little taste of the culture from other nations and allows them to appreciate it as well."

Housing of eagle at GSU raises concern

by Stacy Clemons
Features Editor

Last November, GSU received the largest donation ever for an academic project. One million dollars went to The Center for Wildlife Education and The Lamar Q Ball, Jr. Raptor Center.

The grant, from the Robert W. Woodruff Foundation, will be used for the construction of the facility.

Lately, some GSU students have raised a concern about GSU housing an eagle on campus and its purpose.

The eagle in mention is being housed in an area behind the Biology Building and can only be viewed through the holes in the brick masonry.

"The acquisition of the eagle is to be part of the Center for Wildlife Education and The Lamar Q Ball, Jr. Raptor Center, which is going to showcase birds of prey," said Steve Hein, executive director for the project.

Hein said the bird is being held for educational purposes and to educate the community.

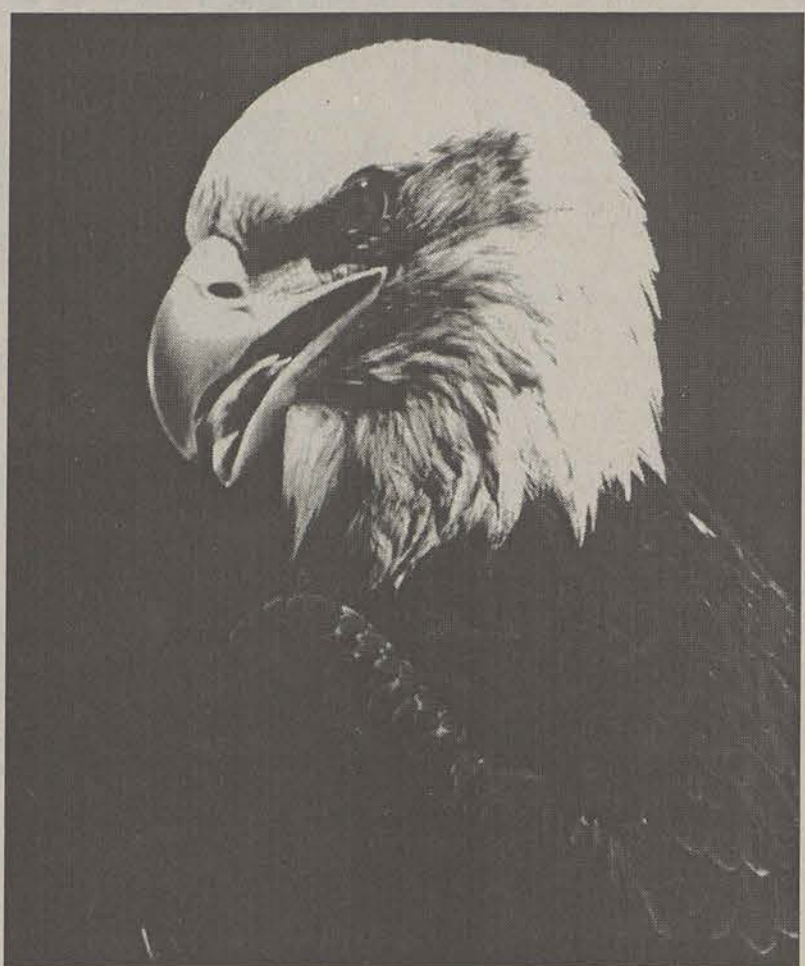

"The eagle is the most protected bird species in the world because it has an act of Congress behind it," Hein said. "The eagle is a highly-regulated bird. We, as a university and a place of higher learning, are allowed to have an eagle on campus."

Students are concerned the bird doesn't have enough room to live.

"Just because you're an institution doesn't mean you get to have an eagle," Hein said. "You have to provide accommodations to facilitate an eagle to be able to have one."

Other guidelines GSU needs in order to have the eagle include:

- A university must have the personnel that knows about the care and maintenance of eagles.
- A university must meet federal and state guidelines for housing birds of prey.

File Photo

The eagle, which has a six-to seven-foot wingspan, has caused many to become concerned about it being housed at GSU.

• A university's personnel must be licensed and permitted federally by the state to house an eagle.

"I am a master falconer and I've been handling and working with birds of prey for probably eight or nine years," Hein said. "I'm also a federal and state licensed rehabilitator."

The eagle was adopted after it was found with a gun shot to its left wing. The bird was shot down over Tifton, Ga. and was then taken under Hein's care.

"There are actually two eagles on campus," Hein said. "The one that you can see is a partial amputee and is non-releaseable."

An eagle can live in the wild for 40 to 50 years and mates for life, but because this one has only one wing, it probably won't live that long.

"This specific eagle was legally taken from a cypress tree in the Florida Everglades by the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Department," Hein said. "And because it has been wounded, it will have to reside in captivity for the remainder of its life for it to survive."

The eagle, along with other birds housed at GSU, will reside at the Center for Wildlife Education and the Lamar Q Ball, Jr. Raptor Center upon its completion, which is scheduled for the beginning of 1997.

Until then, the eagle will remain on the GSU campus and will aid in educating not only the Statesboro community, but also the entire state of Georgia by being taken to sites such as Calloway Gardens.
