Navy's Paul Johnson to be named new GSU football coach

G-A Staff Reports

Former GSU and current Naval Academy offensive coordinator Paul Johnson will be the Eagles' next head football coach, sources confirmed yesterday.

Johnson, 39, was chosen from a list of 22 other applicants, including Carolina Panther assistant coach Kevin Steele.

Athletic Director Sam Baker could not be reached for comment, but GSU officials confirmed that a press conference will be held today at 11 a.m. at the Lupton Building to announce the hiring of Johnson.

Johnson will be GSU's fourth coach since the football program was revived in 1982.

Johnson began his stint at GSU under Coach Erk Russell in 1983 as a defensive coach before moving to offensive coordinator.

He is generally credited with originating the flexbone offense, which helped the Eagles win national championships in 1985 and 1986.

After leaving GSU, Johnson went to the University of Hawaii, where the Rainbows captured their first Western Athletic Conference championship and a Holiday Bowl win over Illinois in 1992.

Under Johnson's flexbone system, Navy has compiled a 6-2 mark so far this season.

Counterfeit $20 bills circulating through Georgia

By Wendi Williams
Staff Writer

A GSU student may be connected to a counterfeiting scheme in which phony $20 bills have surfaced in several middle Georgia counties, according to law enforcement officials.

The student is one of three men reported to have stolen the phony currency from a businessman in Fort Valley, Ga.

Although officials say the fake currency is of bad quality, it was accepted at businesses in Fort Valley, Dublin, Macon and Byron until bank officials noticed the bogus bills.

Authorities in Bulloch County say that no counterfeit bills have surfaced locally.

Buddy Peaster, public safety captain, said that they are not currently looking for any suspects in the case.

"All we can do is assist the Peach County agency with anything that they may need us to do until the bills surface here and it becomes a local issue," Peaster said.

Peach County law enforce-

Middle Georgia counties are on the look out for counterfeit $20 bills with the serial number F1159895D that have been stolen from a businessman in Fort Valley, Ga. Bulloch County authorities said that no counterfeit bills have surfaced locally.

ment officials were notified by a resident that he had produced a large amount of counterfeit $20 bills, which he was using as "flash money" while attempting to start a business.

The resident told officials that a few days after he had invited some friends over, he noticed several of the $20 bills were missing.

Major Deas, of the Peach County Sheriff's office said that their agency was not able to press charges on the informant.

"Because there is no state law on counterfeiting, only forgery, we had to turn it over to the GBI and Secret Service since it is a federal offense," Deas said.

Joe Marshburn, of the Secret Service, who is in charge of the investigation, said that no charges have been filed and the case is still under investigation.

"I have one agent currently working on 35 cases, but we thought this one needed our attention," Marshburn said.

The currency is thicker and stiffer than regular money and all of the counterfeit bills have the serial number of F1159895D.

"The currency is of bad quality because it was made on a color copier," Marshburn said.

"It is not deceptive by our standards, but a sales clerk may not be able to tell the difference."

If anyone has any information about the counterfeit bills, please contact Buddy Peaster at 681-5234.

Recent incidents cause concern for pedestrian safety

By Kevin Bonsor
Assistant News Editor

GSU Public Safety is advising all pedestrians, drivers and bike riders to be more careful when traveling around the GSU campus.

The advice comes on the heels of two incidents where pedestrians were struck by oncoming vehicles.

On Nov. 1, one student was hit by a car while trying to cross University Place just off campus.

The victim had to be hospitalized and will have to undergo extensive rehabilitation to walk again.

In another accident, a student was hit by a vehicle while riding her bike on campus, but in this case, the student was not injured.

Guy Sharp of Public Safety said that people should just be more careful when they are on campus.

He said that accidents on campus weren't an "epidemic problem," but by obeying laws they can be avoided.

One thing that drivers can do is be more aware of walkers and bikers.

Sharp said that when people are walking, they are not paying attention and may step out in the road without looking for oncoming cars.

Mike Spilker

Guy Sharp of Public Safety says that accidents may decrease if pedestrians always cross at crosswalks.

Sharp advises drivers to obey the traffic laws and stop at stop signs and crosswalks.

"Stay alert and don't drive so fast because this is a congested area," Sharp said.

Pedestrians also need to be careful and obey laws while walking on campus.

Some pedestrians step out into traffic without looking and they fail to cross at the crosswalks.

"Although you [walkers] may have the right of the way, drivers may not be paying attention," Sharp said.

"Make sure the car is going to stop for you before you cross the street."

Sharp said bikers should obey the same traffic laws as drivers.

By law, bikers should ride with the flow of traffic and not weave in and out of traffic.

Sharp said he has witnessed bikers not following these traffic laws.

"You see people darting across traffic, not obeying traffic laws," he said.

Sharp suggested that all concerned should take their time and look out for other drivers and walkers.

Students warned of 'date rape drug'

By Joshua Edmonson
News Editor

Rohypnol, more commonly known as "roofies" and named the "date rape drug" by police, has possibly been invading Bulloch County according to various local law enforcement officials.

Detective Sgt. Rex Martin of the Statesboro Police Department said what authorities have found could possibly be Rohypnol.

"It appears to be, but we can't confirm it until we get it back from the crime lab," Martin said.

When mixed with any type of drink, Rohypnol is odorless and tasteless. Once the drug has taken effect, girls have often been raped, according to university police officials.

So far, there have not been any reported cases of Rohypnol being used on someone in Bulloch County.

Guy Sharp, of GSU Public Safety, warned students not to allow others to fix their drinks.

"Be careful where you are at," Sharp said. "Don't leave your cup unattended and watch whenever someone refreshes your drink for you. It can lead to some unpleasant consequences."

Recently, a 19-year old woman at State University of West Georgia was hospitalized as a result of GHB, another "date rape drug," similar to Rohypnol. She has been in a coma since being given the pill at an off-campus party.

Rohypnol is a sleeping pill and has similar effects to that of Valium, except it is ten times more powerful. The victim commonly experiences short-term amnesia.

Buddy Peaster, public safety captain, says that it is hard to find evidence to use in a rape trial if the victim is given Rohypnol because often, the victim does not remember being raped.

The drug comes in a pill form in doses of 1 and 2 milligrams. The tablets come packaged in blister packs and sell for $3 to $5 per dose. According to the university police, the tablets are marked with a "R," "H" and a "2" on one side and cross dividing indentations on the other.

Though Rohypnol is illegal in the United States, it is legal and produced in Europe. The drug is then smuggled into the country by mail or delivery services, according to the DEA. Police suspect that Rohypnol is being shipped throughout Georgia from out of Atlanta.

Gay professor bashes prejudice aimed at homosexual lifestyle

By Emily Rollison
Staff Writer

Fred Richter, associate professor of English, hosted an open lecture Tuesday night at Dorman Hall discussing the problem of prejudice against homosexuals in the 90s.

The lecture centered mainly on gay rights nationwide and problems facing the gay community here on campus.

"The dilemma in our country is making gay prejudice inappropriate," Richter said. "Sexuality is much more complicated than pink and blue."

Another topic addressed concerned gay students and the problems they face when telling their peers about their sexuality.

Richter said he was 26 years old before he told his parents.

"Parents of gay children often say 'This must be my fault,'" he said.

"But it would only be their fault if homosexuality was wrong and it isn't."

Richter said that because these problems, most gay people do not come out while in college.

Instead they wait until later when they are less likely to be discriminated against by their peers.

Richter believes that many people are born with gay tendencies and that human sexuality is not always a black or white issue.

He doesn't believe in the idea that people can be persuaded or influenced into becoming homosexual.

"Many gays here at GSU are praying, hoping, wishing and denying that they are gay," Richter said.

The Triangle Club is GSU's gay and lesbian organization. Its purpose is to provide education, outreach and support for gay students.

There are approximately 50 active participants in the Triangle Club.

Board members consider tightening rules for high achievement school

The Associated Press

FAIRFAX— Some Fairfax School Board members want to impose more rules at a top-rated high school where students have been allowed to roam the halls or relax in a lounge instead of going to class.

Thomas Jefferson High School for Science and Technology opened 11 years ago as an elite campus for northern Virginia's brightest students.

The school has no bells to summon students, and teachers do not require hall passes.

Administrators say the idea is to teach students to be responsible for themselves.

However, several recent incidents have prompted some school board members to question the level of respect and discipline at the school.

In one instance, seven Jefferson students were caught last spring defacing the school building with toilet paper and spray paint.

Two weeks later, six students were charged by police with spray-painting the home of an assistant principal.

This fall, two Jefferson band directors were so upset about losing a band competition that they refused to accept the second-place trophy.

Many parents and school officials complained about the example they were setting.

"There's going to be a much closer scrutiny" of Jefferson's policies and the values it is teaching, said board chairwoman Kristen J. Amundson.

"The last thing that you need is a bright kid who thinks he doesn't have to play by the rules. It would be terrible to have a school where the kids think they are so special the rules don't apply."

Mark Emery, the school board's vice chairman, said Jefferson students should be held to the same behavioral standards as teen-agers in any school.

"Every student has to know there are limits," Emery said.

"You can have a very rich and free-learning academic environment and still have very strong discipline."

Fairfax School Superintendent Robert R. Spillane said the complaints are "another example of individual school board members micromanaging."

"I'm interested in end results," he said. "The end result is, (Jefferson) is the highest-achieving school in the nation."

Jefferson offers its 1,642 students access to supercomputers, college-level math courses, interdisciplinary course work and an extra period every day.

From 1989 to 1995, it had more National Merit semifinalists than any other school in the country.

Students at the school, who generally blame a small fraction of its teen-agers for any unruliness, say they fear that tightening the rules will ruin an atmosphere that breeds academic success.

"Maybe our school isn't as much a prison state as other schools. But I think that reflects poorly on those schools," said Carl Bender, 17.

Parents of Jefferson students are divided over whether more rules are needed.

Group of students protest the end of affirmative action in California

By Larry Gerber
The Associated Press

RIVERSIDE, Calif.—A group of students took over the administration building at the University of California campus, protesting Proposition 209's mandatory end to affirmative action programs.

Campus police began arresting the students and by midday 17 had been hauled out the back of the building and put in a sheriff's van.

About 150 demonstrators blocked the front entryway of Hindraker Hall and supporters cheered them on, refusing police orders to leave.

The protesters got into the building sometime after 6 a.m. and locked doors from the inside, said UC Riverside spokeswoman Kathy Barton.

Instead of heading for his office, Chancellor Raymond L. Orbach met with a delegation outside the building.

"He made the point that they are also denying access to students who need to come to the building to do their finances and admissions business," but the protesters refused to leave, said Barton.

A statement handed out by protesters said: "Over the past 25 years, race, class, and gender inequality has widened. People of color, women, immigrants, and gays and lesbians have been scapegoated for the nation's economic problems."

Proposition 209, approved in the Nov. 5 election, ends race and gender as considerations for admissions, financial aid and jobs.

Welfare reform leaves students in limbo

The Associated Press

CASPER, Wyo.— Wyoming's conversion to a new welfare plan begins in less than two months, but the timetable for the change has put many who want to attend college in limbo.

State officials hope to mesh the Wyoming welfare plan with the recently passed national welfare program. An estimated 4,300 families who receive assistance in Wyoming will be seeing changes after Jan. 1.

Welfare caseworkers in January are expected to start meeting with welfare recipients on how the new changes will impact them. During the second month of 1997, the recipients also would get checks with their new benefit amounts.

But one big question hovers over the issue.

College students who currently receive welfare cannot be sure whether they can attend school and have that count toward the welfare system's work, job search or training requirements.

The Wyoming Legislature earlier this year approved a welfare program that called for welfare recipients to work, attend school or take part in public projects to remain eligible for welfare.

But because the federal plan doesn't spell out that schooling would still be allowed, people who want assistance and attend college are not sure where they stand.

"Young mothers in school want to know if they should sign up for school for a second semester," said Roy Liedke.

Wyoming's Department of Family Services Director Shirley Carson said the federal welfare reform act doesn't address how the changes will work with Wyoming's system.

Temporary Assistance for Needy Families, or TANF, is the new federal plan that will take the place of Aid to Families With Dependent Children.

Our Opinion

Following the traffic rules will make our campus safer

In light of recent accidents in which pedestrians or bikers were struck by cars, a few words of caution may be in order.

With more than 14,000 students walking, biking or driving on this campus, it becomes imperative that we obey all the traffic rules. And we each have a set of rules to follow.

Drivers should not drive so fast that it becomes impossible to stop if a pedestrian steps out into the middle of the road. Also, drivers should always remain alert for any pedestrians or bikers who may not be paying attention. Remember that a car could be a lethal weapon if not used properly.

Bikers should use bike paths, instead of the sidewalks or roads, whenever possible. That is the reason the paths were built. If a biker must ride along the side of the road, he or she should ride with the flow of traffic and never weave in and out of traffic. Bikers should also be aware of pedestrians who may not be aware of them.

Pedestrians should cross in crosswalks and make sure that all the cars have stopped before crossing. Some students complain that it is inconvenient and time-consuming to cross at the crosswalk, but what are a few extra minutes when our safety is at stake?

By following these simple rules, perhaps we will be able to reduce the number of accidents on and around our campus.

Our country may not be as unified as we think

America what a place indeed! A nation full of unity, but not as much as you might think. From the rural plains of North Dakota to the metro area of Miami, personalities, customs, environments and views change. We might not be as united as you think.

For example, on Nov. 5 when incumbent President Bill Clinton won a second term in our capital, states were pretty much divided concerning the electoral vote distribution.

The states that went to Dole were pretty much banded together in the southeast from Virginia to Mississippi and in the midwest from Montana to Texas with Indiana and Alaska as loners.

The northeast from Maine to Minnesota and the west coast from Washington to California went to Clinton. As seen on a map, the distribution is definitely divide. Are we as united as we think?

Not really, and that is not referring to just the election. The election has shown the political diverseness that might draw a division line. We all pretty much speak the same language, eat the same realm of food, and drive on the same side of the road. But,

Don't get me wrong when I speak of unity. We all don't wear the same clothes and listen to the same tunes, but I believe that America is slipping away from agreeing on major issues more than ever since the Civil War.

Major population centers, such as cities, can be found in the states where Clinton won the votes. On the contrary, Dole won his votes in states where the majority of the population lives in rural areas. Does this say anything?

The square mileage of the states that Dole won is far greater than the states that Clinton won.

So we can say that most conservative thinkers reside in these rural areas, and most of the conservative thinkers are Republican. On the other hand, most liberal-thinking people live in metro areas and mainly vote Democratic.

So that means we are drawing the line, the division line. Social changes lead to political changes. Cities are definitely different environments than rural areas. People in cities are more subject to social problems because of the population density than people who live in rural areas.

So maybe this explains why the United States might be diverging in terms of geographic boundaries. I would not have thought twice about this if it was not for the electoral vote distribution that was seemingly divided.

Professors, please stick to your course syllabuses

I have noticed more dark circles under the eyes of students lately. For many, including me, the end of the quarter almost seemed to sneak up from behind and attack when least expected. This happens almost every quarter. Because of a lack of proper planning, students always seem to rush around the last few weeks of the quarter in a frantic attempt to finish papers, ace their finals, or catch up on any neglected reading.

Professors suffer from the same problem. They have to teach all of the course material in a short span of time, and by the end of the quarter, many are struggling to cover the bare facts.

On the first day of class, every GSU professor hands out a course syllabus which details the course objectives, expectations and requirements. With all of the important dates spelled out for them, many students use these papers as a way to arrange their schedules. My roommate, for example, plans weekends to write her papers according to the due dates that her professors have assigned.

However, lately I have noticed a disturbing trend. Professors are moving, adding, and altering their syllabuses in the last weeks of class. This is sending students all over campus in a frantic rush to fulfill their professors' expectations.

ALETHA YOHO

COLUMNIST

I realize, as a prospective educator, that plans change. In most cases, I understand that teachers may overestimate the material they can cover, and when they fall behind, adjustments are necessary.

Teachers routinely change test dates, assign a little more reading, or decide to drop an assignment altogether because of a lack of time. A little change is justified, but some teachers have taken these "adjustments" to the extreme.

My roommate came home from class late last week with a look of frantic worry on her face. When I asked her what was wrong, she said that one of her professors had just decided to add a four-page paper to his list of class requirements.

Maybe four pages does not seem like such a huge project, but when you also have three other papers due at the same time, those four pages are a real pain in the you-know-where.

I understand my roommate's predicament. Friday, one of my professors decided to move the due date of our paper up an entire week. On the original syllabus, the papers were due on the last day of class. I planned ahead, because I have two other papers scheduled to be turned in the two days before Thanksgiving break.

Originally, I had hoped to concentrate on one project a week, and do the third paper at a more relaxed pace.

Now, I will be forced to do less complete work on all my papers because the professor changed his mind.

The excuse this professor gave to the class was that he wanted to have the holidays to grade the papers, so that we would know what we needed to make on the final.

I understand that the holidays would give him more time to grade the reports, but couldn't he have said that from day one instead of misleading the class for almost the entire quarter.

Every teacher believes his or her class should be at the top of the students' priority lists. A professor this quarter told me that my job at GSU was to get an education, and that I was not receiving the full benefit of his class if I had a job, a social life, or did anything else that would get in the way of my learning. For an entire hour, this professor lectured on the reasons why students with jobs weren't going to be able to keep up with the pace of the class. I interjected that some of us would not be here if we didn't have jobs.

To this, he replied that I had to place my education at the top of my priority list and that a job would get in the way. Being an honor student, I let him know that my job allows me to get my education and that I resented being told that I could not keep up with his class.

And guess what? This is the same professor who moved the due date of the paper up an entire week.

Yes, I will have a problem keeping up with a professor who can't make up his mind.

To the credit of a lot of GSU professors, there are some great faculty members on this campus. A majority understand that students can't do everything at once and are willing to compromise. These are the teachers that students respect, admire, and recommend to other students. These are the teachers that make me want to put education at the top of my priorities. But maybe some GSU professors need to put understanding and compromise at the top of their lists.

Give Ellwood due credit for his loyalty

Try to imagine yourself in this situation. You're sitting in your warm, cozy office as the Senior Associate Athletic Director at GSU. You're feeling pretty good now, especially since this whole "interim AD" thing that you've had to deal with is behind you. You've got your title, you know your job and it's almost lunch break so you lock up the office for an hour or so. Everything is fine. Perfect. Splendid. You've put in your time on the field, from the days of Woody Hayes at Ohio State to Marshall, a program that was coming off tragedy. Little do you know that on that day the almost brand-new, just out of the box, athletics director comes to you about his decision to fire the head football coach of six years, meaning, the Eagles were fixing to start spring football practice without a head man.

Whether you disagree with him or not, it was going to happen, so you're just waiting around to see what's next. Hey, this is all part of it.

Thanks, Tim. You've been great. So Sam, what'll we do now?

Here's what happens next. This newly-out-of-the-box athletics director asks you take over, just for a year, just until they name a new coach. What you don't know is the problems that were to happen, like the losing record and the suspensions. Before you know it, you've taken the position of football coach for a year, a long year, while the appointed search committee takes their precious time in finding a new chief. And I mean time.

Now you're saying, "Thank God it's not me."

If you really think about it, Frank Ellwood has been GSU's dish-rag. When there is a problem, he's there to take over until the administration catches up to the times and takes action.

And now, after a dismal 3-7 year, Ellwood is fixing to stand on the Paulson sidelines for the last time this Saturday when his Eagles face Liberty University.

The whole point of this is simple. While all the talk of the new head coach has not in the least bit waned from any discussion, the person left out of the whole picture has been the man who basically kept this football program going for a year.

"I tell you, I can't wait until Frank gets back," said AD Sam Baker in an interview about month ago. "He's so valuable up here, yet he's valuable on the field too. Nothing like this could have happened without Frank. His willingness to step in and coach a football team shows what kind of man he is. He didn't volunteer. We asked him to. I think he's done a fabulous job with the team this year."

And remind you, he hadn't coached for 18 years. You don't think that was on his mind, do you?

Bottom line, Frank Ellwood should be commended and thanked for his work at GSU. He is a mark of loyalty to the program, and it shouldn't go unnoticed.

Ellwood and Eagle seniors looking to go out winners

By Carolyn Wynn
Staff Writer

The Eagles, coming off a 21-14 loss to Furman, return home for their last game of the season to face the Flames of Liberty University and are hoping to end their losing season with a win.

The Flames are led by head coach Sam Rutigliano, a former coach for the Cleveland Browns from 1978 to 1984. His overall record is 49-52, while leading the Flames to a current record of 5-5.

This week's match-up will be the third meeting between the 3-7 Eagles and Flames.

"Rutigliano has got a great professional background as far as coaching is concerned, and they use a professional type offense," said GSU coach Frank Ellwood, who will be coaching his last game for GSU.

"They are 5-5 and I am sure they are going to come down here with the idea that they would like to end their season with a win as well.

"When you see the Liberty line-up, you might think that it was Sunday with the type of plays that they run. They have a tall quarterback that has decent speed and good wide receivers. They are just a good solid football team."

GSU leads the series between the two schools with a 2-0 record.

The first meeting was in 1994 in Paulson Stadium, with the Eagles winning the game 48-11. The next year GSU defeated Liberty on the road in a slim 7-6 victory.

The Flames are hoping to continue closing the point difference by securing a win on their return to Statesboro. One of the Liberty standouts leading this campaign is Damon Bomar, a 5-foot-10-inch, 228-pound senior line-backer.

Bomar, who holds several Liberty records and is advancing on others, is the career leader for fumble recoveries and is currently ranked fifth for quarterback sacks with 13.

In addition to those other records, Bomar is also in a four way tie for forced fumbles with six and is also tied for fifth in tackles for a loss in a season with 11.

If the Flames were to be successful with a win against GSU Saturday, it will mark their second consecutive winning season and their sixth winning season overall.

Looking toward this weekend's game, the Eagles are hoping for a strong end for a shaky season.

"They have great passing technique," said senior middle line-backer Edward Thomas, who will also be playing in his last game

FLAMES STAND IN THE WAY: Liberty will try to send the GSU seniors as well as Frank Ellwood out with a loss this Saturday at Paulson Stadium in what will be a non-conference clash.

for the blue and white. "They have great offensive linemen and really a newer kind of mobile quarterback. They like to throw the ball and get the long passes, quick scores and big plays. We are really going to have to contain the pass this week if we want to secure the win."

As well as this being the last game of the regular season, this will also be the last game for the GSU seniors.

"We have a fine group of seniors that are finishing their careers," Ellwood said. "They have provided the fans of this area four years of competition at GSU."

Jamie Glover explained his mixed emotions.

"In a way, going into my last week of practice on the banks of Eagle Creek feels great knowing this will be the last week of practice for me," Glover said. "But going into the last game will be a sad one for me.

"In the past years, the last game has always been an opportunity for going to the playoffs, but this year there are no playoffs, and this is my last game. So I know I will be sad."

The game is set to kickoff at 3:30 p.m. at Paulson Stadium.

Tutt gives Eagle football major impact

By Carolyn Wynn
Staff Writer

For freshmen Eagle football players, this year meant the start of their careers and their first opportunity to begin forging a name for themselves as GSU athletes.

However, one Eagle freshman has already made a name for himself, Recio Tutt.

Tutt is from Lincolnton, Ga., a place known for its football and a place where it is hard not to grow a love for the popular sport.

Tutt attended Lincoln County High School, where during his senior season, he had 45 receptions and gained 843 yards, which eventually landed him a spot to play in the annual Georgia-Florida all-star game and also gave him all-state honorable mention by the Georgia Sportswriters Association.

The 5-foot-10-inch, 170-pound split-end has already started to forge his way as a team leader, as earlier in the season, the freshman delivered a half-time pep talk to the rest of the team during the Appalachian State game.

Like many other freshman, Tutt has not decided on his major but says that he is considering becoming an education major.

"I enjoy math, and I think I would be good at teaching the subject," he said.

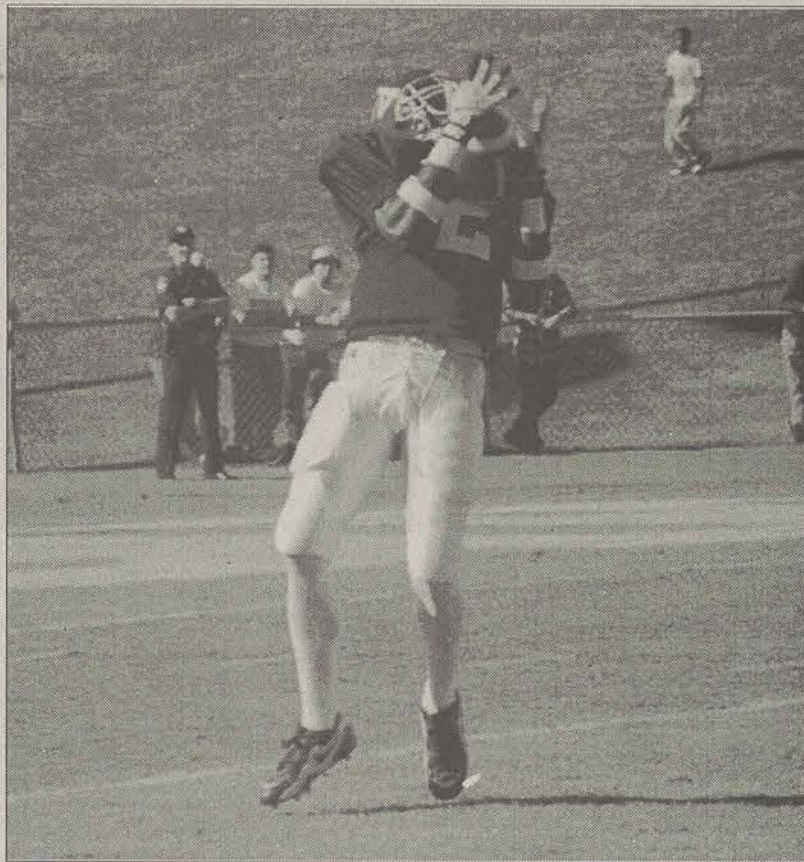

Tutt is the middle child of three boys and says that two of his biggest inspirations are his father and his one-year old daughter, Kenchasela.

"I try to play a major role in the life of my daughter," Tutt said. "I want the best for her. I want to get my education, graduate and hopefully create a path for my daughter to follow.

"I try to do the best I can for her. Whatever is mine is hers. I think that is the way it should be."

His other influences include Detroit Lion wide receiver Herman Moore and San Francisco 49er star Jerry Rice.

But in search for role models, Tutt doesn't have to look any further then his hometown of Lincolnton, which is also the home of former Heisman candidate and current Cincinnati Bengal running back, Garrison

Mike Spilker

FRESHMAN PHENOM: After getting over an injury at the beginning of the season, Recio Tutt has been nothing less than spectacular for GSU.

Hearst. He acknowledges that Hearst has played a hands-on role in his development as an athlete.

"Hearst has been a big influence on me, when it comes to football," Tutt said. "He worked with me and showed me different ways to work out to improve both my strength and speed.

"The workouts were hard, but I don't like to give up. I just had to deal with it. However, the most important thing he has taught me is to keep my head on straight."

Tutt feels good about his performance so far this season.

"I have been able to accomplish a lot of things this year," Tutt said. "I feel I have made the transition from high school to college by growing as a player.

In addition to hoping to finish this season with a win, Tutt would not mind being considered for Southern Conference honors.

"I would not mind the honor of a post-season freshman award if possible, but it is not a big concern for me right now," he said. "If I am not considered, I will still be satisfied with my performance and maybe that will give me something to work towards."

Tutt's performance so far this year may help to win him some consideration for post-season honors as he made 13 receptions, gaining 262 yards and scoring one touchdown. In addition, Tutt has had a combined 29 kickoff and punt returns, gaining over 340 combined yards.

In addition to being a college freshman, Tutt has to contend with the hectic schedule of a student athlete but says his first quarter at GSU has not been too stressful.

"Getting used to balancing school and sports wasn't hard for me," he said. "It just carried over from high school."

Tutt would like to be known for more then being just a football player.

"I am nice person," he said. "I enjoy having fun and hanging out with my friends."

For fun, Tutt says he enjoys many sports, from fishing to tennis.

GSU SWIMMING

Seminoles scalp Eagle swim team

By Travis Walden
Staff Writer

The GSU swim team went to Tallahassee, Fl., this weekend to take on Florida State, Georgia Tech and Florida A&M.

However, the Eagles ended up swimming only against Florida State, who took the win on the men's side by the score of 153-84 and also on the women's side, 148-87.

Apparently, FSU did not inform the GSU swim team about changes made in the starting time, leaving the Seminolas as the only competition for the Eagles Saturday.

"We were pretty upset about the lack of organization at the meet," senior swimmer Brian Gupton said.

"It was kind of a let-down not being able to swim against Georgia Tech and FAMU but we swam pretty well considering the circumstances."

Great swims came from both teams in the 100-yard freestyle. The women's team was led by Nicole Goodwin, who won both the 50-yard and 100-yard freestyle, and Jennifer Mayhen, who posted two second-place finishes in the 1000-yard freestyle and the 500-yard freestyle.

The women divers also scored 16 points in both diving events.

"We are real positive now that we went to FSU and had a great meet," Goodwin said.

"If this trend continues, there is no telling what this team can do."

Coach Anne Marie Wozniak was also pleased with the swims turned in by the women's team.

"All the 200 girls swam well, and I was really happy with Kim Doughty's and Kristen Strickland's performances this weekend," Wozniak said.

On the men's side, great swims were turned in as well. Freshman Brad Mori won the 200-yard breast with a time of 2:11.24, and Troy Wagoner won the 200-yard backstroke by turning in a 1:57.00.

This men's team also saw great swims from Kevin Kolling, who swam a time of 2:17.87 in the 200-yard breast. The relays also had great performances and their splits continued to go down.

The meet was much different from that in years past.

The men's team earned the respect from FSU that the women's team had earned with a victory a few years ago.

"I am pleased overall with this meet," Wozniak said. "This was good for us to compete against a school like FSU."

The team's next meet will be at Davidson University on Dec. 7, where they will take on Davidson and East Carolina University.

ECU has a great team and will be tough to beat but it is within reach for the Eagles, Wozniak said.

"We are looking for best unshaved times at the meet," Wozniak said. "There is going to be some great competition and I believe we are up to the challenge."

LADY EAGLE SOCCER

Norton and three players receive honors

By Dennis Stovall
Staff Writer

The GSU women's soccer team lost Sunday in the finals of Southern Conference Championship, but the women and coach Tom Norton didn't leave empty-handed, after ending the season with a very successful campaign.

On personal accomplishments, striker Tara Chaisson, midfielder Rachel Tolliver and defender Jodi Berto were named to the all-tournament team.

Tolliver, Chaisson and Lindsey Grossman were named to the Southern Conference All-Conference team. Chaisson was also named Freshman-of-the-Year. Coach Norton won Coach-of-the-Year for the Southern Conference.

Chaisson had 14 goals and nine assists.

The 14 goals tied a GSU record and was the most goals scored in the conference.

"Her play this year brought a lot of enthusiasm and added a lot of power to the attack," Norton said of Chaisson.

Tolliver, who Norton felt was the go-to player all season, is a third year all-conference member, as she controlled the middle for the Lady Eagles. This, her last year, was one for the books as she contributed eight goals and seven assists.

Grossman, a sophomore, put together her finest season yet for the Lady Eagles, and Norton is quick to point out her importance.

"Lindsey is the heart and soul of the team," Norton said. "She has had an outstanding year. She is also the most improved and the most dedicated player. I am glad the other coaches recognized her outstanding ability and the kind of year she has had."

This is only the fourth season for women's soccer, and already Norton has received the honor of Coach-of-the-Year twice.

Norton has directed the Lady Eagles all four years, and in fact, had assumed the responsibilities of both the men's and women's teams until this year, when Kevin Chambers, an assistant under Norton, took over the men's team, leaving Norton's focus strictly on one squad.

According to Norton, of the two times he's claimed the award, this one is the most special.

"This is the most special," said Norton. "This year the conference was more competitive, and we played bigger teams. It's nice to win the award, but I would trade it for the conference championship."

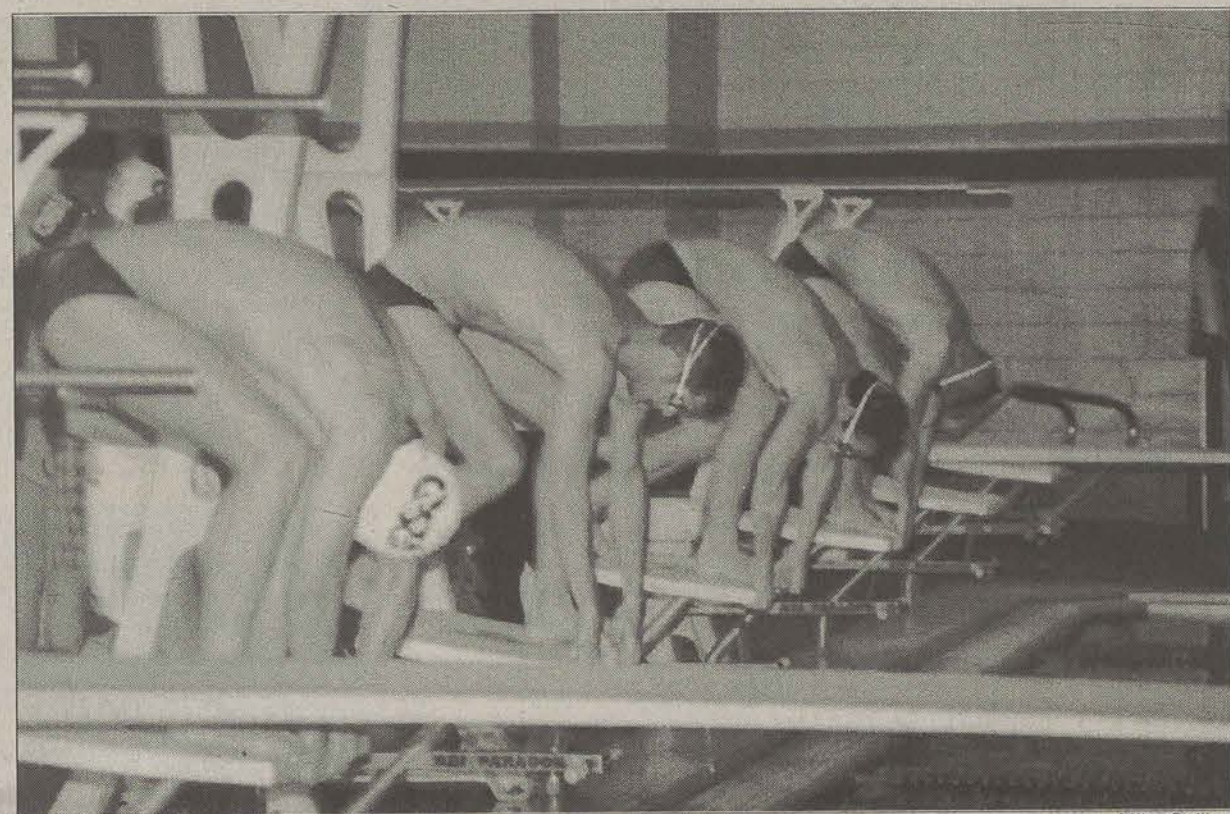

The GSU women's soccer program will have five seniors graduating that started the program.

"The five seniors built this program from nothing to a quality program," Norton said.

"After the hurt of losing to Davidson in the conference finals, I think the five seniors, when they look back, will be proud of what they have accomplished."

Tom Norton

ON YOUR MARK: Here, GSU swimmers prepare to swim their respective races as they wait patiently for the signal to start. Both the men's and women's swim teams lost to Florida State last Saturday, but not without turning in some good times, leaving the coaches optimistic on the season ahead.

EAGLE SOCCER

Three Eagles earn post-season honors

By Mike Gibbs
Staff Writer

Men's soccer coach Kevin Chambers calmly sat in his office a few days after his Eagles had just finished their season after dropping to Furman, 4-2, in the Southern Conference championship game, a place many people thought GSU wouldn't have been last Sunday.

But what he felt was not disappointment, for he sat knowing that the goals set before his first season as head coach had been accomplished.

"Our goal this year was to get respect and to go further than any GSU team had ever gone," Chambers said.

"These Eagles got all the respect this year and even the support they needed."

Chambers assumed responsibilities of the men's squad this year, replacing Tom Norton who concentrated strictly on the women's team.

The Eagles finished their year with a bang by finishing the regular season 9-10-2 and most importantly, improving from last year.

But it was the Eagles' excellent performance in the tournament that will give them tremendous standards for next year.

After downing Virginia Military Institute in the first round, the Eagles were matched up against Marshall, who they also sent home.

But the championship game proved to be a different story as they fell to Furman, 4-2.

"I am very proud of the way the guys handled themselves in representing the university," Chambers said.

"The guys gave a lot of heart this year."

Even though the team did not take home the ultimate trophy in claiming the conference crown, several GSU players did land well-deserved conference awards.

Eagle mid-fielder Jason Russell and forward Kevin Hanfman were named to the All-Southern Conference first team, while defender Chris Starks made the All-Southern Conference second team.

In completing a very promising season, Chambers and the Eagles will be looking forward for the next year, although they are losing three valuable players in Johan Soderstrom, Chris Starks and Josh Sanstead.

"The loss of Soderstrom, Starks, and Sanstead will affect the team for next year," Chambers said.

The Eagles ended the season second in scoring in the Southern Conference.

LIVE MUSIC REVIEWS

Spider Monkey's 'pop-punk' and 'rock-funk' was a sight to see

By Adam Clark
Staff Writer

Last Friday night at Blind Willie's, a very enthusiastic Spider Monkey hit the stage and South Carolina quintet Albert Hill opened up the show.

Albert Hill, a classic alternative band reminded me of a Gin Blossoms/Deep Blue Something kind of band.

Headed by a lead singer who has just as much vocal range as Dave Matthews, their style is highly complimented by the rest of the band as well.

Overall, the rhythmic base and drum lines, coupled with a good, upbeat sound and intricate solos, made Albert Hill a good choice for the opener.

After Albert Hill, it was time for the night's main attraction to come on.

Spider Monkey showed up wearing gas attendant shirts and carrying the attitude that they were going to rock Blind Willie's.

And they did just that. The band itself reminded me of 311, but Todd Horn, the lead vocalist, had a more alternative sound about him, which made for a good compilation of funk and rock which was very evident with the mosh pit in front of the stage.

Spider Monkey has enjoyed success around the southeast and continues to pack whatever house they play.

Spider Monkey is not a 'new' group. Since they've been out they have had several releases, and in a world of neo-hippies and all-too-alternative groups, Spider Monkey proves to be a breath of fresh air.

There are several ways to classify Spider Monkey, but the best is just to say that they're the band to listen to.

If they ever play in your town, you better get over there and join the party.

Wallace Green delivers a thumbs-up performance at Bru-HaHa

By Patrick Doyle
Staff Writer

Thursday night offered up a mix of the old with the new with local favorite Wallace Green playing the 'Boro's newest bar, Bru-HaHa.

Wallace Green is a three-piece band consisting of Chris Mitchell on lead guitar and vocals, Brian Hendrix on bass guitar, and Larry "The Wonderllama" Summerlin on percussion.

Lending a hand on the band's blues number was Brian "Cowboy" Avery, baritone saxophonist.

Wallace Green reached a milestone last year with the release of their CD "Wonderllama Soup."

Also, the band has been granted an endorsement by Peavey, a company from which they will receive new equipment

I would like to see this band put more effort toward original material, but unfortunately the world is not here to please me.

The band has been successful with what they have done in the past and has no urgent need to reinvent themselves.

sustained an injury to his hand when it struck his cymbal, causing his hand to bleed.

It reminded me of that scene from "The Shining" where the walls start to bleed.

The crowd actually broke away from the local tradition of Suspend your disbelief as I know this is stunning and very irregular for any crowd at a live gig in the 'Boro.

Heaven forbid that people move to music that they enjoy.

A final analysis: Wallace Green is a good band musically, and their performances are impressive.

If you haven't seen their show recently, check it out as it offers up a few new tunes.

Wallace Green offers a bit of everything in their music and provide wholesome family fun for all.

THE CROWD ACTUALLY BROKE AWAY FROM THE LOCAL TRADITION OF SITTING ON THEIR DUFFS ALL NIGHT ...

early next year.

Thursday night's show was very energetic, but it was basically the same lineup the band has played for the past year.

Wallace Green has added some new songs and have tweaked the old ones since the release of their CD, but the band's stage show remains the same.

The majority of the crowd at Bru-HaHa really enjoyed the old stuff.

At certain points, more people were watching the band than playing pool.

Not bad for some guys from Claxton.

A definite highlight of the evening was when Summerlin sitting on their duffs all night.

When Wallace Green finished their originals and played some cover tunes, the crowd got up.

Yes folks, the audience DANCED!

Although they catered to the crowd more than usual, at least they got a response, which is more than some bands get around here.

CD REVIEW

'Short-Pop tunes' prevail on the Lemonheads' new CD, 'Car Button Cloth'

The Lemonheads
"Car Button Cloth"
Atlantic Records

By Robbie Bruce
Staff Writer

In the decade that The Lemonheads have been a band, there have been numerous lineup changes as well as circumstances that have threatened the existence of the band as a whole.

The foremost of these circumstances is the drug and alcohol problems of the Lemonheads' lead man, Evan Dando.

After the 1993 release of "Come On, Feel The Lemonheads," Dando fell into a downward spiral of substance abuse, the other Lemonheads disbanded, and the future of the band seemed uncertain.

Thankfully, though, Dando was able to pull himself together and employ new Lemonheads to help him record the album "Car Button Cloth."

This album is much like previous Lemonhead albums with its short pop tunes, accentuated by Dando's slow, beautiful moan.

Indications of possible mental instability are given on "Losing

Your Mind," as Dando evokes dark, nihilistic images as he sings the lyrics, "burnt the beyond when you learned how to fly/just to learn later on that there isn't a sky."

And who knows what Dando is trying to express on "C'mon Daddy"? "I feel like Steven is my father and I don't know why," he sings soulfully as Spacehog's Royston Langdon plays piano.

One might get the idea that he is describing the life of Liv Tyler, who did not find that Aerosmith rocker, Steven Tyler, was actually her biological father until rather late in her life. (Coincidentally, Dando is slated to be in a movie with Liv Tyler soon.)

Dando creates sheer pop magic on "If I Could Talk To You I'd Tell You." The song structure is very simple, and with the sugar-coated guitar and bass lines, "cheesiness" could well be the verdict of experienced music listeners.

"It's All True" and "One More Time" also prove to be pop gems, the first being from the same vein as recent popular releases from Everclear and Son Volt; whereas "One More Time" uses a change — in the middle of the song nonetheless — to a different key and the addition of a pedal steel guitar to draw the listener's attention.

The original key is then restored for another last verse. The song ends, but it is so short and catchy that it must be played "one more time."

Dando shows his taste for variety on "The Outdoor Type."

It is a charming country tune where Dando sings honestly that his penchant for outdoor activity is nonexistent.

He tells that the closest he has been to sleeping outdoors is when his car broke down in the suburbs once for an hour. "I lied about being the outdoor type," he humbly admits.

There is somewhat of a tribute to the movie "Seven" via the song "Six."

Dando reportedly saw the movie, realized that a friend of his, Gwyneth Paltrow, was on the screen, and decided to write about the scene where her head is severed and placed in a box: "Here comes Gwyneth's head in a box," he sings without a trace of irony.

Dando seems content to just write songs that sound good.

And that's all that matters for now.

RESTAURANT REVIEW

Buffalo's is the place to go for good service, atmosphere, and even a football game

By Jennifer Stokes

This week's restaurant in review is Buffalo's Café. My primary goal was, of course, to get something to eat, but Buffalo's also has a lot of televisions perched near the ceiling allowing my date to watch the game. This helped me out too, because with his head in the TV, I didn't have to make small talk.

Buffalo's has two seating areas. One is mostly booths with high backs, and the other area is open with tables, and a view of the patio and a lake. This is also the area where the bands set up (when there is a band). We opted for the booths.

Once you are in the booth you get the strange feeling that you are all alone in the restaurant because the backs of the booths are so high and they are arranged at such an angle that you can't see anybody else. This would be a good thing if you were there with someone you shouldn't be seen with in public.

The host who sat us was very nice and even turned the television nearest us from the race over to the football game.

The waitress came out promptly and was very friendly and cheerful. We started out with an order of cheese sticks, which came with chips and salsa. This was a good deal for $3.95.

There was a big handful of chips, a small cup of salsa and six cheese sticks. At most places, you would only get the cheese for the same price.

For dinner, we ordered the fajitas for two, half chicken and half beef. The others in our party ordered a hamburger with curly fries and the riblettes with corn-on-the-cob and the fries as well.

I was disappointed with the fajitas. There were plenty of tortillas and plenty of stuff like pico de gallo and guacamole, but nowhere near enough meat for two people. What there was of it tasted good, but at $14.95, it just wasn't worth it.

We were still hungry enough after dinner that we ordered some of their wings (on special, $2.5 each). They came in a basket with the token celery sticks and a cup of bleu cheese dressing. I generally do not like wings, but these were pretty good. I also managed to swipe a riblette from the guy across the table without getting stabbed in the hand with a fork. And I would definitely order the riblette plate ($6.95). In fact, there was so much food that the guy who ordered the riblettes was still eating while I was contemplating dessert.

And what a dessert it was! The waitress suggested the deep-fried cheesecake, and I must have made a face because she then said she would bring out the dessert menu. It was loaded with all kinds of candy-bar concoctions and a pecan-pie-type dessert with a chocolate chip cookie crust. I decided to be brave and try the deep-fried cheesecake.

I don't know whose idea this was, but it was a winner. They take a piece of cheesecake, wrap it in a tortilla, deep-fry it, then serve it with a strawberry topping and a scoop of vanilla ice cream. If you do nothing else, try this dessert.

On the service and atmosphere side of the house, Buffalo's is a 10. The waitress was available and kept the tea glasses full without being overbearing or annoying.

The decor of Buffalo's is a wild west style with pictures of Smith and Wesson guns and old-timey signs and the like on the walls. The booths are pickled pine and match the plank look of the walls and floor. The ceiling of the booth area is corrugated tin, so you get the impression of being in some kind of miner's shanty. It is a very well-thought-out interior design. The open area gives off the casual have-a-beer attitude, and the dollar bills with various scribbling on them stapled to the walls let you know that others have come before you and that they partied well.

Overall, Buffalo's gets an eight out of 10. The food is good, even if they are stingy with the fajita meat.

I say go for the service and the atmosphere and definitely for dessert, and maybe even for the football game.
