President Henry still a candidate for position as chancellor of UTC

By Kevin Bonsor
News Editor

GSU President Nicholas Henry remains a candidate for the chancellor's position at the University of Tennessee at Chattanooga.

Henry wouldn't say that he is leaving the university to take the position, but he said that he has not withdrawn his candidacy for the position.

University System of Tennessee officials reported Henry as being one of six finalists for the UTC position.

Henry said he made a trip to Chattanooga to meet with the search committee and tour the UTC campus April 23-25.

Henry said yesterday that he wasn't sure what was going on with the search committee's process right now.

"It is really in a state of placidity," Henry said. "I'm not quite sure what is going on there now. I've not really thought about it since I've been back."

Homer Fisher, chair of the search committee and senior vice president of the University of Knoxville, said Wednesday that the search committee has just finished up all the interviews.

The search committee will meet again in two weeks and select two or three candidates from the six and recommend those finalists to University System of Tennessee President Joe Johnson.

Johnson will then make his selection and recommend that person to the Tennessee Board of Regents.

If Henry is selected and he accepts the position as chancellor, then he would be succeeding Frederick Obear, who has been chancellor at UTC for the past 16 years.

Obear is stepping down to work with the American Association of State Colleges and Universities in Washington, D.C.

Henry, who has been GSU president since 1987, has been a candidate for jobs at other state university systems in the past. In fact, this makes the third time in three years that Henry has been in the running for jobs in other university systems.

Last year, Henry was one of four final candidates to be considered for the position of president at the University of Idaho at Moscow.

He was interviewed for that position, but was not chosen. UIM officials told Henry they were looking for somebody with a western background.

In 1995, Henry was nominated to head the Connecticut State University System, but he withdrew his candidacy before a decision was made.

School not planning to investigate Elkins

By Kevin Bonsor
News Editor

GSU officials say they are not going to look into the recent actions SGA President-elect Chad Elkins made during his campaign until after a complaint is filed by someone.

Michael West, assistant director of programs for the Russell Union and SGA advisor, said Tuesday that the school is holding off on taking any action and there is no investigation as of now.

"We haven't planned one [an investigation] at this point," he said.

Although he said there won't be an investigation, he didn't comment on if there would be investigation if a complaint is filed by a member of the Burns' ticket.

Last week, members of the Burns ticket said they were looking to file a complaint.

"We're still considering it," Charles Carroll said Wednesday. "We're still looking into a couple of things."

West said that if a investigation is begun, he does not know how it would be handled or who would be involved in handling the investigation.

Lameisha Hunter, SGA executive vice president, who is responsible for overseeing the elections could not be reached for comment as of press time.

If a complaint is filed, it could call into question the raising and disbursement of funds by the Elkins ticket.

Elkins had used the Students for a Better Statesboro checking account to pay for advertising space in The George-Anne.

According to forms filed by Elkins with the State Ethics Commission, SBS, which was a campaign committee, spent all but $10.11 of the $5,405 raised to support the liquor referendum.

The leftover funds were used as a donation to a local charity and Elkins closed the account on May 1.

Patrick Novotny, professor of political science, said that he didn't believe that

University officials say present plans don't include shuttle bus system

By January Holmes
Staff Writer

In order to resolve the problems of traffic and parking on the GSU campus, university officials say more parking lots will be built, but for now there are no plans in progress for a shuttle bus system to transport students to and from classes at designated areas around campus.

Bob Chambers, director of parking and transportation, said that they are going to continue the original plan of building more parking lots, which he believes is a better solution to the problem of parking.

"It [additional parking lots] will serve most of the people's needs better," he said.

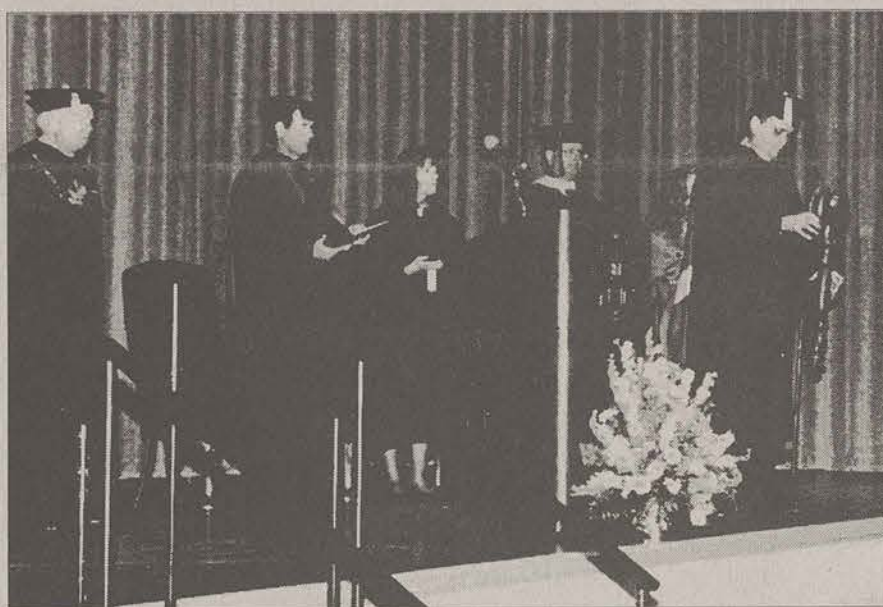

Chambers said the construction of future parking lots will be completed in the next several years. The transportation department plans to build these parking lots near the Russell Union, the baseball field, communication arts building and the Southern Center. Chambers also said that the lots should serve the student public well for the next 15 years without the use of a shuttle service for the students.

Austin Hardy, vice president of auxiliary affairs for the Student Government Association, disagrees with Chambers' plan.

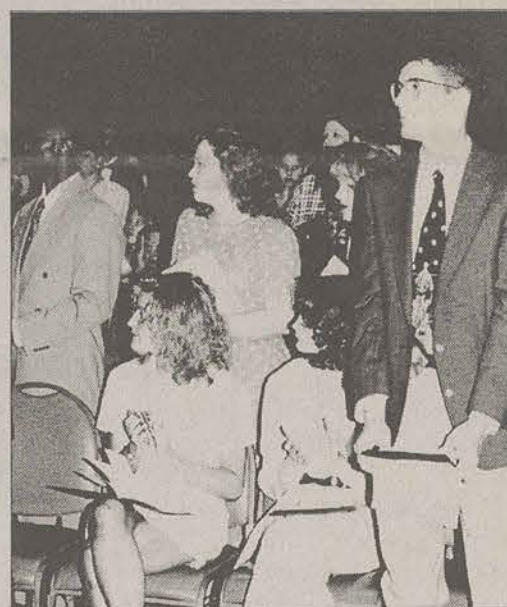

"A shuttle bus system would be a good idea," Hardy said. "Instead of more parking lots, we need a parking deck. It would utilize resources a lot better," Chambers said.

Honors Day ceremony

While award recipients filed in during the processional, William Bolen, business alumni professor of marketing, served as the official mace bearer.

Students who received awards were seated in a reserved section during the ceremony.

A recipient is all smiles as she leaves the stage with her award in hand.

President Nicholas Henry congratulates Melissa Massey as she receives her leadership/service award.

At this year's Honors Day, there were many winners. The awards ranged from leadership awards to honor societies to departmental awards. It was won by an emotional Debra Sabia of the political science department. The day was an overall success and ran very smoothly. An emotional Debra Sabia of the political science department was named professor of the year by Gamma Beta Phi.

GSU Museum to honor former GSU geology professor

By Laura Owens
Staff Writer

A late longtime GSU professor is being honored by the GSU Museum with the establishment of a fund in his name.

Richard Petkewich, who taught geology at GSU for 26 years before passing away in March, is being honored by the museum with an establishment of a fund in his name.

Del Presley, director of the museum, said Petkewich made a major contribution to the university's museum.

"Petkewich was responsible for the symbol of the museum, the Mosasaur," Presley said.

Petkewich came to the university in 1971 and was involved in museum planning and programming since the inception of the facility. He acquired and put together the mosasaur skeleton from 1980-

Sheriff's death means another election in Dodge County

By Lori Wiechman
Associated Press

ATLANTA—Dodge County residents reluctantly face the third sheriff's election in less than a year after a vote fraud scandal.

The latest ballot is due to the death of Sheriff Ted Parkerson, who was elected in February after successfully challenging the July 1996 primary he lost by six votes.

"I think people are really getting tired of elections down here," said Chuck Eckels, editor and publisher of the weekly Dodge County News in Eastman, a town of 5,000 about 60 miles southeast of Macon.

"It's sort of like you don't have a lot of interest right now," said Eastman resident Linda Lowery, 50.

Parkerson, 56, had a heart attack eight weeks ago and died of complications Wednesday at Emory University Hospital in Atlanta. He was Dodge County's chief deputy for many years before defeating Sheriff Jackson Jones, his former boss, in February's special election.

That vote was necessary because the results of July's primary, in which Jones defeated Parkerson, were thrown out by the courts. State and federal officials investigated the elections for sheriff and county commissioner and found numerous examples of vote-buying and other fraud, including votes cast by at least one dead person.

The earliest date for a new special election is June, said John Kelley, superintendent for elections in Dodge County. Georgia Secretary of State Lewis Massey said Thursday his office will aid Kelley in the election.

"We are fully committed to having a very strong and visible presence in Dodge County ... to ensure the election is fair," Massey said.

"Everybody hates that he's deceased, but in this case, you still have to have an election," Kelley said.

An interim sheriff will not be appointed until after Parkerson's funeral Friday, he said.

Deputy Ed Graham, who has been acting sheriff since Parkerson's illness, is expected to continue in that role, but he hasn't considered running in the special election. Jones would not comment on his plans.

Twenty-one Dodge County residents, including the mayor of Milan, were indicted for conspiring to buy and sell votes in the primary. Most of the defendants pleaded guilty. On April 18, a federal jury in Dublin found eight defendants guilty.

Milan Mayor Wayne Cartwright has resigned, meaning residents of Milan also will have to elect a mayor in June. Another Dodge County town, Rhine, will have to elect a mayor as well; its mayor resigned for reasons unrelated to the vote fraud case.

Many Dodge County residents remember Parkerson fondly.

"He was honest and straightforward. He was a caring person," Ms. Lowery said.

In his election campaign, Parkerson vowed to crack down on illegal drugs, improve the department's relations with other law enforcement agencies and rekindle an investigation into the murder of Eastman accountant Donald Purser, who handled the finances of some of the town's most prominent residents before he was killed in 1993.

Sue Thomas, a 30-year Eastman resident and employee at Eastman Drugs, thought Parkerson was an honest official.

"People are tired of corruption. The way I look at it, I'm praying for a Christian, and that we will be able to put someone who is honest in the office," she said.

UGA adopts tough new honor code

The Associated Press

ATHENS, Ga.—The University of Georgia's University Council has passed a tough honor code that asks students to report cheaters.

The action puts Georgia in an elite group of colleges, including Virginia and North Carolina.

University President Charles Knapp said he would be "surprised if students would object" to the code. And student leaders themselves called for the change.

But some students already resent the change, saying they do not feel it is a student's responsibility to turn in their peers.

"I don't think that has anything to do with coming to college, to play policeman. It's not fair," said Austin Haas, a sophomore from Ohio.

Facing high-tech cheating and with proof of increased cheating, more schools, like the University of Florida and Colgate University, have adopted honor codes this decade. Both Florida and Colgate, however, stopped short of asking students to report peers.

Under the proposed Georgia pledge, to be included on all applications for admission, prospective students would promise: "I will be academically honest in all my academic work and will not tolerate academic dishonesty of others."

Penalties, which can include expulsion, won't change. Sanctions are meted out by an Honor Council of two faculty members and three students, which will continue to hear cheating cases. The council already sees 80 to 100 cheating cases a year, but only two students have been expelled for cheating since 1994.

Officials take dim view of bright TV sign on I-85

The Associated Press

ATLANTA—MediaOne's bright, big-screen billboard on Interstate 85 in north Atlanta could lose its lights.

Motorists complain that the two-sided sign, which uses video images and bright lettering to promote MediaOne's cable TV channels, is too distracting. And DeKalb County officials say it doesn't comply with the sign permit the company received.

The permit called for straight script messages "like an old ticker tape," said Ernie Blow, the county's manager of code enforcement. "If it was the way it was intended to be, it would not be distracting. What I understand is that it's like a full movie screen."

MediaOne has been told it must get a new permit within five days, Blow said. He added that he suspects MediaOne will "probably have a problem getting it approved."

MediaOne spokesman Reg Griffin said the company complied with county ordinances. He said he has not received any complaints about the sign.

"IT'S AS BRIGHT AS THE LIGHTS AT THE TURNER FIELD THAT ARE GIVING THE OUTFIELDERS FITS."

--MICHAEL KILGORE, ATTORNEY

"They have asked to meet with us to discuss the concerns they have," Griffin said.

"We are always open to trying to work out any problems they have."

"This thing hits you like the Second Coming," said Michael Kilgore, an Atlanta attorney who has driven past the sign. "It's as bright as the lights at the new Turner Field that are giving the outfielders fits."

"It's as if somebody were coming right at you with their high beams on," said James McDaniel of Atlanta, who commutes to Gwinnett County. "I'm amazed they were allowed to put it there."

The state Department of Transportation also is upset about the sign. Marion Waters, the DOT's state traffic engineer, said engineers have been asked to determine whether the sign is a hazard.

Also, Tim Klob, a DOT legal affairs officer, said he is concerned that some of the things advertised and promoted are not actually sold on site, as state law requires.

Not so, Griffin said. The sign promotes only cable channels available from MediaOne, which has offices at the base of the sign, he said.

Griffin said the sign is state of the art in terms of its video clarity. "At night, it's particularly impressive," he said.

Women's college names its first woman president

The Associated Press

MACON, Ga.—Nora Kizer Bell was named president of Wesleyan College, the first woman to lead the women's school in its 161-year history.

Ms. Bell, dean of the College of Arts and Sciences at the University of North Texas, takes office July 1 as the 23rd president of the four-year liberal arts college. She succeeds Robert K. Ackerman, who announced his retirement last August after 13 years in the post.

"I want, whatever I do, to serve as a model of what young women can accomplish in higher education and in their communities," Ms. Bell said.

Ms. Bell holds a doctorate from the University of North Caro-

Governor refuses to judge parole board for freeing cop killer

By Joan Kirchner
The Associated Press

ATLANTA—As a convicted cop killer walked out of prison after serving only six years of a life sentence, the governor refused to join the chorus of outrage over the parole board's decision to free him.

"That's not my decision," Gov. Zell Miller said. "I don't ever second-guess my parole board. I'm not going to get into that."

The five-member board drew the ire of the attorney general, police officers and the victim's family over the release of Terrance Lee Roach.

Roach, a 45-year-old New Port Richey, Fla., truck driver, walked out of an Atlanta minimum security prison carrying some bags and a portable TV. He was greeted by his father, stepbrother and several reporters.

He served six years of a life sentence for the 1986 murder of Lowndes County Sheriff's Deputy John Rowe, a father of three whose brother and grandfather also were officers.

Rowe's relatives criticized the parole board for failing to notify them of Roach's release beforehand. Roach's release fell on the 19th birthday of Rowe's twin son and daughter.

"I don't think it is fair at all that the man who killed, murdered, my father will walk free on my birthday," Stephanie Rowe said to The Valdosta Daily Times.

"I think it's outrageous," Attorney General Mike Bowers said Wednesday.

Roach was at the wheel of a tractor-trailer rig April 17, 1986, on Interstate 75 in northern Florida when he sped north to try to elude police.

Roach fired a gun at police during the chase, which ended

25 miles later in Georgia when Roach swerved his rig into the median, slammed into Rowe standing beside his patrol car and dragged the officer 200 feet.

On Dec. 12, 1986, Roach pleaded guilty to murder, driving under the influence and attempting to elude police. He served five years of a 20-year sentence in Florida, and then was sent to Georgia to serve a life sentence.

The Georgia parole board freed Roach because he earned a high school diploma and bachelor's degree, underwent substance abuse counseling and kept a clean disciplinary record in prison, spokeswoman Scheree Lipscomb said.

Shuttle service needed

Each year, parking on this campus seems to become more of a problem. Some students even arrive to campus nearly a half hour early to wait for a parking space to become available.

Without a doubt, something must be done. Bob Chambers, the director of parking and transportation, says building more parking lots is the solution.

Yes, more parking lots might help alleviate the problem, but why don't we start looking for a solution which offers more than a mere band-aid?

One such solution might be a shuttle bus service on campus. The beauty of this solution is that it might solve more than just the parking problem.

A shuttle bus service could help alleviate the parking crunch on campus by offering services to surrounding apartment complexes as an option to driving to campus. Fewer cars on campus means more parking spaces.

In addition, with the continuing expansion on this campus, the service could help students make it from one end of campus to the other in the ten minutes allotted between classes. Many students already schedule their classes according to their location, but this method may not always be possible.

The completion of the new College of Education Building on Akins Boulevard will be just the beginning of expansion on the south end of the campus. Regardless of the fact that administrators hate to admit that GSU is fast becoming another UGA, the facts point to that reality. UGA has a shuttle service for the same reason that GSU should begin considering one: this campus is too large to rely on walking as the primary means of transportation.

Continuing to expand may be necessary, but during the expansion, this school must have the foresight to provide options for transportation. A shuttle bus service may be an option worth considering.

Living with someone means living with quirks and all

I am in the final stages of planning my wedding. Yes, on June 14, I will enter into holy matrimony with the man I have been dating for five years.

Although my friends like my fiancé, some of them think I am absolutely crazy. Over the last few months, I have had numerous conversations with people who believe that it would be impossible to live with the same person and their quirks for the rest of eternity. But yes people, it can be done.

Well, I am the first one to admit that a person's quirks can easily drive another person to the brink of insanity. For example, my roommate, though I love her dearly, is very particular about the way our apartment looks. She makes her bed every day immediately after she gets up in the morning. For her, this is a necessity. She is afraid that a person will walk into our apartment and see the place where she slept the night before. For me, I could care less about what my bedroom looks like when I walk out the door.

My bed is hardly ever made,

Lies, even little white ones, may be the downfall of our civilization

I promised my boss that I would write a serious column for her sometime before I graduate. I also promised her that I would do it this week. I lied.

But lying is a serious subject, so maybe I can squeak my way through this after all.

Who out there hasn't lied? If anyone says "me," you are lying just now. We're all liars.

I am willing to wager that at one point or another we have all lied. Even white lies count. You know the ones, the ones you say at 2 a.m. on the phone to the ex-boyfriend or ex-girlfriend. The ones that start out, "You know, I was out with the guys (or girls) tonight and I really missed you..."

Translation: "I went looking to hook up, but I didn't, so now I'm giving you a late night 'booty-call'—by the way, I'm drunk."

Yep, innocent lies like that, that sever relationships and shatter lives. There's just one thing bothersome about all these lies. They have become the cornerstone of our society.

I was talking to a friend of mine from Europe the other day and he said, "You Americans have lying down to a science. How do you call it—political science?" Then he broke into laughter. Ha ha, very funny. But he's right. Lying has replaced mom, apple pie and baseball. Maybe it's time for a new song and a new flag, and while we're at it, let's and frankly, it doesn't bother me in the least. She doesn't understand that perspective. I don't understand her point of view. The point is that we still make out okay.

I concede that there are things about my future husband that drive me crazy. For instance, he likes to channel surf. Just as I'm getting involved in a program, he changes the channel in search of something more entertaining.

I'm sure my roommate finds this funny. She says I do the same thing. But I knew from the beginning that he has these quirks, and I don't think they are enough to drive me to a lawyer for a divorce.

One of my friends says that she feels that marriage should be the "unification of souls." She told me that she would only get married when she felt that she would become "one" with her spouse. I will be the first to tell you that my marriage is not going to be that way. I am my own person, and he is his. We are not going to be one soul united.

After all, I wouldn't like living in his mind. Frankly the way his mind works is sometimes scary. His quirks are his own. I don't want anything to do with them.

Quirks are funny things. We all have something we have to do a certain way. For example, I load and unload the dishwasher the same way every time. First, I take all of the clean dishes out of the dishwasher and put them on the counter. Then, I put all of the dirty dishes into the dishwasher, and finally, I put away the clean dishes. I've just always done it that way. My roommate thinks it is one of the silliest things she has ever seen.

But I get her back on a daily basis. The other day, she was just walking around and around our coffee table. I was on the phone and it really started to bother me. Finally, I just yelled out "please stop." She said, "I'm just walking." She was bothering me. I couldn't deny it. I realize now that it was rude of me to ask her to stop, but if she hadn't I think I would have ended up in the asylum.

I guess the best advice that I can give other people is to know what you are getting into. Whether it is a marriage or a roommate, make sure that you are comfortable with that person, regardless of his or her quirks.

Well, what if you don't know what your roommate's quirks are? You better find out really quick. You could end up spending the year in the middle of the next new horror movie, "Nightmare on Chandler Road." If you can't live with a person's quirks, you can't live with that person. Trust me, I have tried and it doesn't work.

change the pledge of allegiance. "One nation under God . . . " Yeah right.

In all this lying we forgot that lying is wrong. What's worse is that we forgot that when someone lies, including ourselves, we you know nobody is trustworthy and everybody is a liar in your mind, because heck, you're a liar too.

And the ultimate problem is that this paranoia leads to bad Oliver Stone movies and freaks should have to own up to it and pay the penalties for our lying.

What happens when people don't hold each other responsible for their lies? We'll find out in the next fifty years, and folks, it ain't gonna be pretty.

Overcrowded prisons, violent crime, unwed mothers, abortion, rape, divorce, racism, bad education—all these things can be linked directly or indirectly to lying. And it's only getting worse.

When someone lies, and they get away with it, it propitiates more lies. This then escalates to bigger lies about bigger things. Pretty soon someone they know sees them getting away with it so they do it, too. The next thing like Timothy McVeigh and The Republic of Texas. We don't need militias or JFK conspiracy theories. What we need is the truth.

Okay, everyone chime in together in your best Jack Nicholson voices, "You can't handle the truth!"

And that's the point. We can't handle the truth. We're even getting to the point where truth doesn't even exist.

"Everything's relative. Whatever you think is right, is right for you. If it makes you happy..." Yada, Yada, Yada.

There are a couple of things synonymous with the fall of every great civilization. One of them is a push for relativism and a move against absolutism. When people stop believing in one over-riding principle or system they crumble.

Another is a heightened desire to have "needs" (really we're talking desires) satisfied quicker and quicker. Immediate gratification is what it's called, and it precludes every nation's fall (from the British empire to the Byzantine empire).

Of course in politics we have a different situation altogether, don't we? Politicians lie? You got to be kidding me. I, of all people, thought all politicians were honest. Not. Of course they're all liars, we pay them to tell us what we want to hear, which may not be the same thing as telling us the way things really are. And then we hate them for it.

But they're safe, because we won't ever do anything to change the situation. Shoot, we don't even vote. Besides, if things got better, what would we have to complain about?

The biggest lie of all? We lie because it's human nature to lie. Wrongo bub! It isn't human nature at all. As the front cover of Jewel's cd, "Pieces of You" says, what we call human nature is in reality human habit.

Now, what's the point of all that? There is no point unless you make it a point, but since everything's relative...

That's just my opinion, but I could be lying.

Alabama law denying state funds to gay groups loses again on appeal

The Associated Press

ATLANTA—A federal appeals court upheld the decision of a federal judge who struck down a 1992 Alabama law prohibiting state funds from going to homosexual groups, chiefly student groups at public universities.

The ruling, made by a three-judge panel of the 11th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals, affirmed a 1996 decision that threw out the law as being unconstitutional and discriminatory.

The 11th Circuit panel's action came as Alabama appealed the decision by U.S. District Judge Myron Thompson of Montgomery, who called the law unconstitutional and a blatant form of discrimination.

The statute prohibited groups from using public facilities or receiving public money if they "foster" and "promote" activities prohibited by the state's sodomy and sexual misconduct laws.

The Gay, Lesbian, Bisexual Alliance at the University of South Alabama, located in Mobile, sued over the law after the alliance was denied student activity money because of the statute.

Thompson ruled last year as then-Attorney General Jeff Sessions and conservative activists pointed to the law as they sought to block a regional conference for homosexuals at the University of Alabama.

Thompson's ruling blocked Sessions from citing the state law to challenge the meeting, which was held at the campus in Tuscaloosa.

Former Savannah transit official files for time off prison sentence

The Associated Press

SAVANNAH, Ga.—A former Chatham County transit official who pleaded guilty to embezzlement and money laundering has asked a federal judge to reduce her five-year prison sentence and drop most of the charges against her.

Susan Wynn, 46, pleaded guilty in federal court in 1996 to stealing about $370,000 from the Chatham Area Transit Authority, where she served as finance director from 1987 until resigning in 1995.

Ms. Wynn has filed a 20-page motion in U.S. District Court in Savannah asking Judge B. Avant Edenfield to drop the 100 counts of money laundering to which she pleaded guilty. She admits guilt to one count of embezzlement but her motion said that after 11 months of treatment and medication at a federal prison camp in Marianna, Fla., she realized that the criminal-justice system fooled her into confessing and pleading guilty to money laundering.

"Appellant argues that her actions in offense do not fall under the definition of money laundering," she wrote. "She embezzled money from her employer by writing checks made payable to herself and deposited to her bank account. No other person was involved. No elaborate scheme was used to conceal."

Her motion said she "suffers from bipolar disorder that is characterized by alternating states of manic and depressive behavior."

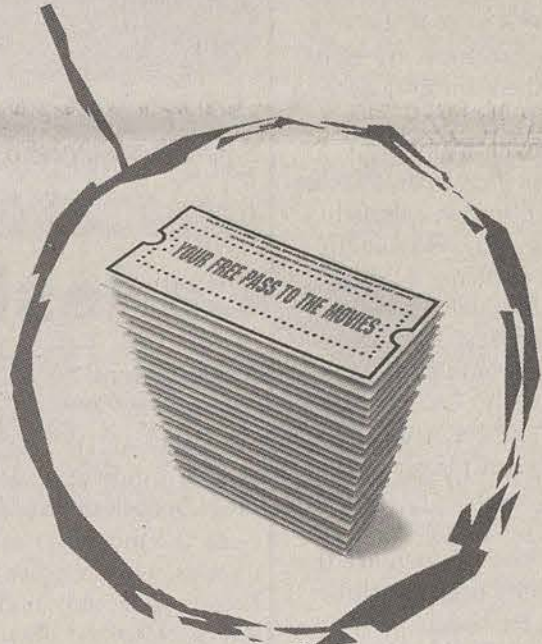

The U.S. Attorney's Office, which prosecuted Ms. Wynn because the bus system receives some federal funds, will file a reply to her motion, spokesman Dan Drake said.

Mercer chairman, wife pledge $10 million

The Associated Press

ATLANTA—The chairman of the Mercer University board of trustees and his wife have pledged $10 million to Mercer's new School of Theology, the largest gift by a living donor in Mercer's 164-year history.

In turn, university trustees voted unanimously to name the theology school for chairman James T. McAfee Jr. and Carolyn Townsend McAfee of Atlanta.

Most of the money will go to the school's endowment but some will be used to buy an organ for worship services, said Alan Culpepper, dean of the school, which opened in August in Atlanta. The Baptist university is based in Macon.

The theology school has 60 students, 58 of them Baptist, and hopes to add 50 new seminary students with each class entering the three-year program, spokesman Ben McDade said.

McAfee is chairman and chief executive of Atlanta-based ValueMark Healthcare Systems Inc., which owns and manages behavioral health care facilities throughout the country. He and his wife co-chair the School of Theology component of Mercer's $130 million capital campaign.

The couple, members of Second Ponce de Leon Baptist Church in Atlanta, became familiar with Mercer when they lived in Macon in the 1980s.

*The stage is set for my prediction,
Hawks over Bulls*

The scene is set. I've made my prediction, received heavy criticism and endured sleepless nights due to harassing death threats.

However, I will stand by my pick and say that the Atlanta Hawks will indeed knock off the reigning champs, Chicago Bulls.

By now, I'm sure your reaction is you'd like to kill the fool who thinks that any team could knock off Michael Jordan and company.

Well before you reach for your sidearm, let me explain myself.

The first column I ever wrote for The George-Anne was this hopeful prediction that Atlanta would dispose of the Bulls. Well, here we are.

With all the factors thrown together, the Bulls and the Hawks will finally collide head-to-head in the playoffs.

Sure, the season was long and you heard ignorant people like myself say that Atlanta had a legitimate shot at defeating the Bulls.

I guess we'll find out within the next week or so if those ignoramuses out there are right.

During the regular season, the Bulls, like other teams, had the Hawks' number.

They took 3-of-4 games from Atlanta, yet Jordan seemed worried about the Hawks. In an interview during All-Star break, Jordan expressed his concerns and said Atlanta was the team he would truly be concerned with.

Ah, finally, someone is making the greatest player of all time sweat a bit.

Home court advantage, Jordan and Scottie Pippen are the three and only pros the Bulls have going for them.

Oh sure, ONLY Jordan and Pippen are the two major causes to lead the Bulls to victory. That's two big only's. On the other hand, the Hawks do have a good, deep bench and two superb defensive players to anchor the team.

A large advantage the Hawks have, and I mean large, is Dikembe Mutombo. It's safe to say the Bulls are a doughnut team.

With no man in the middle, Mutombo can take great advantage of his size in the paint.

The Bulls offense is 80 percent on the shoulders of Jordan.

If Jordan can be shut down, which is obviously easier said than done, then the Hawks will come away with some wins.

Along with Mutombo's shot blocking, Mookie Blaylock brings his league-leading steals category into the series. These two defensive standouts are the catalyst Atlanta needs to get by the Bulls.

If you throw in All-Star Christian Laettner, outside threat Steve Smith and the coaching of Lenny Wilkins, the Hawks are a difficult team to match up with.

The shenanigans of Dennis Rodman and the air from Jordan can be handled, and the Hawks are the best equipped team to do so.

In any case, I see an excellent series and if the Bulls do happen to sweep the Hawks, well, I guess I am that ignorant fool.

GSU football makes changes in staff

By Mike Davis
Sports Editor

Following the stunning announcement that GSU wide receivers coach Tracy Ham had opted to return to the Canadian Football League to continue his playing career, GSU head coach Paul Johnson has now filled the vacant spot left by the former Eagle great.

Jeff Monken has officially been elevated to full-time assistant football coach at GSU as of last Monday.

Monken, 30, replaces Ham, who resigned last week after agreeing to terms on a playing contract with the Montreal Alouettes of the CFL.

"Jeff has been moved from restricted earnings to a full-time coaching position," Johnson said Tuesday afternoon. "I think he'll do a good job for us."

"I'm happy for Tracy, and what I want is what's best for his family. It's certainly a good opportunity for him financially, and it was something that he couldn't turn down."

"I'm going to miss him more personally than as a coach. He certainly represents a lot of the things you want your program to stand for. But he'll still come around because he lives here and he's still a part of our program."

Prior to his appointment to coach GSU's slotbacks, Monken had already experienced a wide variety of duties throughout his young career, beginning in 1989 as a graduate assistant at the University of Hawaii.

After a one-year stint as a graduate assistant at Arizona State University in 1991, he traveled north to the University of Buffalo, where he served as an assistant coach responsible for wide receivers, tight ends and recruiting.

He also served on the staffs of Morton (Ill.) High School and Concordia (Ill.) University before joining Johnson's staff in December.

The Joliet, Ill., native received his bachelor's degree from Millikin (Ill.) in 1989 where he played wide receiver for four years and was a two-time track letterman. In 1991, Monken received his master's degree from the University of Hawaii.

Johnson also announced that former University of Georgia four-year letterman Brian Bohannon has joined the staff as an assistant wide receivers coach.

"Brian's dad is a well-respected high school coach at Griffin High School, and Brian played at Georgia and coached at West Georgia," Johnson said. "I certainly think that will help him in recruiting, because people know and respect him and his dad."

Bohannon, who was a wide receiver for the Bulldogs from 1990 to 1993, started his coaching career at West Georgia before earning his first full-time position at Garner-Webb (N.C.) University as wide receivers coach in 1996.

Bohannon earned his bachelor's degree in General Business from UGA in 1994.

"I don't think the coaching changes will affect us at a football standpoint," Johnson said. "Tracy will be around and in the offices, so he'll still give us his input, and we've got some really good coaches stepping in."

MORE NEW FACES AT THE CONTROLS: Eagle football took on more changes when Jeff Monken and Brian Bohannon were promoted due to the departure of Tracy Ham, who opted for the CFL.

AROUND THE WORLD

Carlesimo brushes off rumors of quick Portland exit

By Bob Baum
The Associated Press

PORTLAND, Ore. — P.J. Carlesimo certainly didn't talk as if he didn't expect to come back next season.

In the moments after Portland's 95-91 season-ending loss to the Los Angeles Lakers on Friday night, the Trail Blazers coach talked about his team's effort and potential.

He brushed aside rumors, that surfaced in a column in The Oregonian on Friday, that Blazers president Bob Whitsitt already has lined up a replacement.

"Rumors don't bother me at all," Carlesimo said. "I had a job to do and I did it. This team stayed together and improved. We won 20 of 25 down the stretch and not many did that. We're a good team, but a very young team."

Despite all the turmoil that swirled around the franchise through the season, with players publicly swearing at the coach and periodically being penalized for various team rule violations, Carlesimo said he liked this team.

"We have a good nucleus for the future," he said. "I think we exceeded what a lot of people thought we would do, but we didn't exceed our own expectations. We need to keep the team together and go from there. The key for us is to keep the nucleus intact, and there's no reason to think we won't."

Blazers president Bob Whitsitt again denied that he'd made any decision on a coaching change.

"We'll step back and take some time and start evaluating everything," he said.

Carlesimo has two years left on his contract, but a buyout would be no problem for Paul Allen, the wealthiest owner in sports.

Whitsitt was hired after Carlesimo. After the Blazers' fifth consecutive first-round playoff exit, three under Carlesimo, Whitsitt might go after a different style of coach.

For now, Whitsitt is keeping his thoughts to himself.

"Right now it's just time to let the adrenalin of the series end," he said. "Whenever you end, you end, and it's never a good feeling."

Lakers coach Del Harris offered unsolicited praise of Carlesimo, who directed the Blazers to a 49-33 regular-season record and the No. 5 spot in the Western Conference with an assemblage of players labeled by many as troublemakers.

"As far as I'm concerned, they're as well coached as anybody that we play against," Harris said.

Whitsitt has at least three player situations to deal with. Clifford Robinson, coming off perhaps his best overall season, becomes a free agent this summer, and Chris Dudley has said he will opt out of his contract to test the free-agent market.

Robinson, the last remaining player from the Blazers teams that made it to the finals in 1990 and 1992, wants to sign again with Portland.

"That's my plan, but we'll see," he said.

Atop the list of priorities is a new contract for Rasheed Wallace, who averaged better than 20 points per game in the playoffs.

"I THINK WE EXCEEDED WHAT A LOT OF PEOPLE THOUGHT WE WOULD DO, BUT WE DIDN'T EXCEED OUR OWN EXPECTATIONS. WE NEED TO KEEP THE TEAM TOGETHER AND GO FROM THERE."

— P.J. CARLESIMO

NBA BASKETBALL

Rodman makes hefty deal

The Associated Press

CHICAGO — Dennis Rodman insists he's worth every penny of it.

"Before next season I am going to sign a $9 million or $10 million contract and tell the team, 'If I'm not worth it, don't pay me,'" basketball's bad boy told Playboy magazine for its May edition.

"If I don't play up to that contract, keep the money," he said. Asked if he meant it, Rodman replied, "That's right."

The interview was conducted while Rodman was serving an 11-game suspension for kicking a cameraman during a game at Minneapolis on Jan. 15.

The Chicago Bulls forward won the NBA's rebounding title this season, despite missing 14 games because of suspensions and 13 more due to injury.

His current one-year contract is worth $9 million.

Rodman, 36, also said he believes NBA Commissioner David Stern thinks he is good for the league: "David Stern is a closet Dennis Rodman fan."

He played college basketball at Southeastern Oklahoma State University in Durant, Okla.

Bird-watching in Boston or Indianapolis?

The Associated Press

INDIANAPOLIS — Larry Bird is considering a "great offer" to be the next coach of the Indiana Pacers but it not expected to decide whether to accept it until early next week, published reports Saturday said.

The Indianapolis Star and News and Boston newspapers reported Bird also was mulling an offer from the Boston Celtics to become either their coach or to take another position with the franchise with which he starred 13 years as a player.

Bird, now a consultant for the Celtics, was quoted Saturday as saying if he left that team, it would be to join the Pacers.

"Indiana has made me a good offer — no, a great offer," Bird told The Boston Globe.

"I've known the owners since college, through mutual friends, and I have great respect for Donnie Walsh. We are definitely talking, and if I decide to do something (other than remain with the Celtics in some capacity), it would definitely be there."

Bird, from French Lick, Ind., took Indiana State to the 1979 NCAA championship game. He now resides in Naples, Fla.

Walsh, the Pacers president, had dinner with Bird last weekend to discuss the job offer.

He said he was staying in regular contact with Bird.

"We're having ongoing discussions," Walsh said. "That's as far as I'll go."

It's been widely reported that Kentucky coach Rick Pitino has the inside track for the Celtics job. At a book signing in Louisville, Ky., Pitino said he will make a decision about his future either Tuesday or Wednesday.

Published reports have said the Celtics have offered Pitino upwards of $40 million and part ownership to become coach.

Winning Cy Young matters little to Maddux, he pitches on

By Paul Newberry
The Associated Press

ATLANTA — Cy Young awards don't matter much to Greg Maddux. He's got plenty of them. He prefers to focus on the minutiae of pitching: the next team, the next hitter, the next pitch.

On this day, relaxing in the Atlanta Braves clubhouse between starts in the early stages of a season that has shown Cy Young-like brilliance once again, Maddux refused to let the conversation shift to large, sweeping goals.

Twenty wins? There's too many factors that could scuttle such a season, no matter how well he pitches.

A fifth Cy Young? Too far off to even worry about.

"I enjoy watching the game. I just think about what I have to do to make good pitches. That's it," said Maddux, whose unprecedented streak of four straight Cy Youngs was broken last season by teammate John Smoltz. "I don't try to collect numbers or win games. I just try to make good pitches."

Based on the first month of the season, Maddux might want to go ahead and clear off a shelf for another Cy Young.

During five starts in April, he went 3-1 with a 1.13 ERA. He took a scoreless streak of 29 innings into May. One of his starts took all of 1 hour, 47 minutes to complete, the fastest major-league game in five years.

"I think Greg is throwing a lot better," said Eddie Perez, his personal catcher. "He has more velocity and even better control on the corners. I mean, he was great before, but awesome is the word now."

Indeed, Maddux the Magnificent is back, though it's not like he really ever left.

"For about the 913th time, there is nothing different about Maddux," pitching coach Leo Mazzone said impatiently. "He's consistent as consistent is. He's simply the greatest pitcher in baseball."

It's a tribute to Maddux's greatness that 1996, 15-11 with a 2.72 ERA and, more telling, no Cy Young, is considered a subpar year, only in the sense that it was human.

The previous two seasons, Maddux seemed almost from another world, putting together back-to-back performances that statistically rate as the two greatest years for a pitcher in baseball history, 16-6 with a 1.56 ERA in 1994, 19-2 with a 1.63 ERA in '95.

How do those seasons compare with this season?

"I don't even try to do that," he said. "What good does it do me? I'm worrying about the Pirates (his next opponent). They've got a lot of new faces. You try to remember what you did against them, what they did against you. Man, I'm not worried about, what was it, 1993 or '94? I don't think it's going to help me."

That's the heart of Maddux's brilliance. He keeps looking forward, yet he has the computer-like ability to retain all those tidbits that will help him keep the upper hand.

"Greg's the most intelligent pitcher, no, make that one of the most intelligent guys, I've ever coached," Mazzone said. "He's always looking to upgrade his game."

Maddux is a work that's constantly in progress. "You change every year," he said.

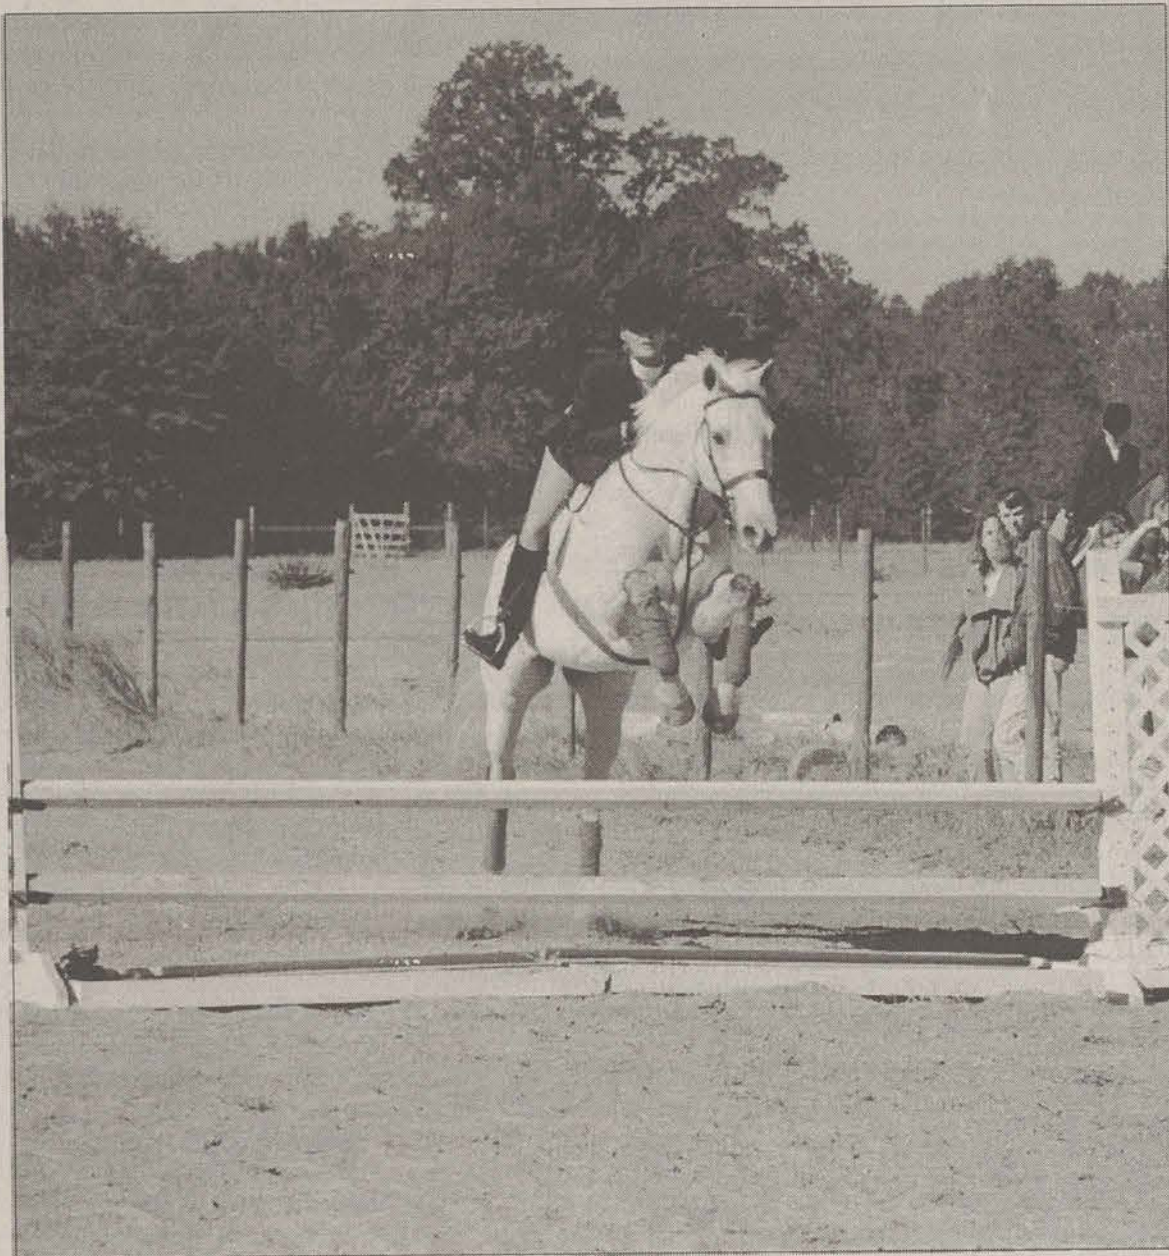

"I see a lot of guys who are totally different pitchers today than they were two years ago when they had their career year, their best year. There not even close to pitching that way now, yet they try to."

Hardly anyone realizes that Maddux's weight has fluctuated between 175 pounds and 195 pounds during his career. Some days, he arrives at the park feeling good, other days he doesn't. His knee might hurt, his hamstring might be sore, his foot could be aching, all subtle factors that slightly alter the way the ball leaves his hand.

"People change. So I don't worry about it. I might look back at my last start. What can I do to improve off that? But who's going to remember what you did three or four years ago, even last year? How are you going to remember how you felt and what you did? It's hard enough to remember what you did last week."

Oh, Greg, they'll remember.

Johnson makes it official: he's retiring

By Jim Cour
The Associated Press

SEATTLE — Kevin Johnson, who helped lead the Phoenix Suns into the NBA Finals in 1993, made it official on Saturday: He's retiring.

"If God changes my heart, I'll change my mind," the 31-year-old point guard said Saturday after the Suns were eliminated from the playoffs by the Seattle SuperSonics. "But I don't see that happening."

"God gave me 10 great years. I have no regrets, only highlights," Johnson added.

In the finale of an NBA career that began in Cleveland in 1987, Johnson scored 20 points, but shot only 8-for-27 as the Suns were ousted in the opening round of the playoffs for the second straight year.

Johnson, who was traded by the Cavaliers to Phoenix during his rookie season for Larry Nance and a first-round draft pick, said he planned to sit down and talk to Suns owner Jerry Colangelo.

"But I'm not going to change my mind," he said.

"It sounds as if he's made his mind up," Shawn Kemp of the Sonics said. "I expect he'll stick with it."

In his 10 seasons in Phoenix, Johnson helped the Suns get into the playoffs nine times. The highlight came in '93 when the Suns lost to Michael Jordan and the Chicago Bulls in six games.

Johnson averaged 16 points, but shot just 29 percent in the Seattle series after averaging 20.1 points and shooting 50 percent in 70 regular-season games. He was named NBA Player of the Month in April when he averaged 23.2 points.

In a game against Seattle March 26, Johnson hit a career-high six 3-pointers.

It was difficult for him to leave the court for the last time. The Suns' all-time leading playoff scorer got a pat on the head from Seattle's Gary Payton with 2:25 to go.

His mother, Georgia West, cheered wildly for her son in his final game at the Key Arena. He scored a dozen of his points in the third quarter when the Suns came back to cut a 22-point half-time deficit to six twice.

"In the last few minutes, this crossed my mind that this was my final NBA game," Johnson said. "And that was pretty emotional."

Johnson scored 12,611 regular-season points in 679 games and 1,942 points in 92 playoff games. He was a three-time All-Star and one of six players to surpass 11,500 points, 6,000 assists, 2,000 rebounds and 1,000 steals.

Johnson was hampered by injuries during the last half of his career. He missed the first 11 games of the season while recovering from hernia surgery, but was relatively healthy after that, giving the Suns hope that he would change his mind and return in 1997-98.

Well, in case you haven't noticed, this is not the usual writer of this column. So, if I mess everything up, bear with me. I promise to at least act sorry.

Tonight the Health Education Office and Eagle Cinemas present "Drunks," a film that takes an in-depth look into Alcoholics Anonymous. The film does not promote the group but does provide a truthful depiction of 12-step programs. The showing is free to all students and community members and will have a discussion session following it. The film will be shown at the Russell Union Theatre.

Friday night, Blind Willie's will host Acoustic Workshop. I have never heard this band but give it a go and try something new. If you are familiar with the band, tell your friends and pack 'em in at Blind Willie's.

If this doesn't crank your tractor, there will be a baseball game at J.I. Clements Stadium at 7 p.m. against Charleston Southern. They also play Saturday at 1:30 p.m.

There doesn't appear to be much going on Saturday and Sunday, but Statesboro should be pretty dead that weekend. Yes, it's Mother's Day so buy good ol' Mom some flowers and thank her for giving you life.

Monday is my dad's birthday and Eagle Cinema will be showing "Heat" with Al Pacino, Robert DeNiro and the best Batman ever, Val Kilmer. Happy Birthday, Daddy.

On Tuesday, Cinema Arts will be presenting "Mary Shelley's Frankenstein" and there will be a Faculty Woodwind and Piano Recital at 8 p.m. in Foy.

Wednesday marks Memory Dean's return to Blind Willie's and should be worth checking out. There will also be a Senior Composition Recital by Brian Flynt in Foy at 8 p.m. Brian used to be the drum major for the Southern Pride Marching Band.

On a less local front, the NHL playoffs are going on. If you are not already a hockey fan, sit through one period just to see if you become a die-hard fan. I highly recommend watching the Philadelphia Flyers.

Cinema 9 and College Cinemas have some good movies playing also. I don't recommend "Romy and Michelle's High School Reunion," but no need to take my word for it.

I guess that's about it this week. Remember to call Mom on Sunday. It may benefit you in the future.

LongHorn Steakhouse opens with Texas style, downhome cooking and great atmosphere

By Jake Hallman
Staff Writer

LongHorn Steakhouse of Statesboro opened Monday promising a dining experience "as robust and colorful as the state of Texas."

Saturday, a private preview party was hosted at the restaurant, with proceeds benefiting the Sheriff's Boys Ranch for troubled youth.

The restaurant is located at 719 Northside Drive East, and is the 83rd restaurant in the LongHorn chain.

"We are excited about bringing LongHorn's cowboy cuisine and down-home service to Statesboro," Lane Schmiesing, vice-president of marketing for LongHorn, said. "As a Georgia-based company, we look forward to becoming part of the Statesboro community."

Kirk Hermansen, LongHorn's vice president of development, said many factors influenced LongHorn's decision to open up its Statesboro restaurant.

Jacob Uchitel

LongHorn Steakhouse opened May 5 to bring Texas-style home cooking in a casual atmosphere to Statesboro. The restaurant is open seven days a week.

First, GSU has many students from the Atlanta area, LongHorn's home.

"The trade area and market were underserved by quality, casual dining establishment," Hemansen said. "Statesboro's demographic profile was ideal... due in part to its eight-county trade area."

"The liquor referendum coming through when it did was a coincidence," he said.

He said it had nothing to do with the decision to expand to Statesboro.

The plans for the new branch had been made in Fall of 1995.

But LongHorn has applied for a liquor license.

At the LongHorn of Statesboro, lunch and dinner are served and beer and wine are available. The restaurant is open seven days a week and the hours of operation are: Monday through Thursday, 11:15 a.m. to 10 p.m.; Friday and Saturday, 11:15 a.m. to 11 p.m.; and Sunday from 12 to 9 p.m.

LongHorn Steakhouse restaurants are modeled on the traditional Texas steakhouse and offer casual, full-service dining in a "spirited and colorful atmosphere."

A wide variety of steak and non-steak items are on the menu, and prices range from $4.95 to $18.95.

LongHorn is owned by RARE Hospitality International, Inc. The Atlanta-based company also owns, operates and franchises Skeeter's Grille restaurants, Bugaboo Creek Steakhouses, Capital Grille restaurants and several specialty restaurants.

MOVIE REVIEW

'Austin Powers' meets the standards for comedy: it will make you laugh

By Eric Bray
Staff Writer

It's difficult to analyze most comedies because the genre is so subjective. The only major criteria for most comedic films is whether they are funny or not (and even that in itself is relative).

Everything else is secondary. It's easier to critique dramas, thrillers, action flicks and most other types of films because the elements which make them up must (for the most part) meet some sort of standard to be considered effective.

However, factors such as plot, stunts, and even acting (while these qualities may be employed to enhance the effectiveness of a comedy) are not the hinging components of its success. In most cases it's ridiculous to consider the cinematography of a spoof or farce because it's not necessarily a critical aspect of the film's impact.

For this reason, I'll try to steer clear of over-analyzing the new comedy "Austin Powers" outside of its ability to make the viewer laugh. In this respect it is quite successful.

"Austin Powers" stars Mike Meyers as a British super-spy who is hermetically sealed and frozen in 1967 and thawed out thirty years later to battle his nemesis Dr. Evil (also played by Meyers). Whereas Powers was a suave, charming debonair in the 60s, his lifestyle is laughably outmoded in the 90s.

For starters, at the time he was put on ice, lascivious unprotected sex and experimentation in chemically-induced hallucinations were a sign of the times. These days such irresponsible behavior is not so common (at least according to this movie).

While Powers' anachronistic displacement (namely his taste in clothes) is hilarious, it is a one-laugh gag, and the film mercifully does not ride it to death.

However, this prudence would have been well-advised for other jokes which are man-handled and overdone too clumsily to be considered recurrent or running gags (including Powers' embarrassment over a penis enlargement apparatus and Dr. Evil's dysfunctional relationship with his annoying grunge-era offspring).

While these jokes manage to elicit some amusement, they are labored over too much to be worthwhile. A lack of subtlety could be the cause, but the film overcomes this in most other scenes.

Meyers, who also wrote and co-produced "Austin Powers," is the main source of humor in this movie. With Buddy Holly glasses (reminiscent of Woody Allen's), a carpet of chest hair (reminiscent of John Travolta), and grotesque dental structuring (reminiscent of Mr. Ed), Powers is a brilliant creation (as is the antithetical Dr. Evil).

I've always been more of a "Kids in the Hall" fan than a "Saturday Night Live" fan, so I've never been that wild about Meyers or any of the SNL graduates. Nor was I very enthusiastic about "So I Married an Axe Murderer" or "Wayne's World," but "Austin Powers" exhibits a fresh, elevated humor coupled with clever parody, which should return Meyers to the limelight.

Meyers' cohort in spy craft (and love interest) is supermodel Elizabeth Hurley ("Dangerous Ground"). Hurley portrays the daughter and contemporary of his 60s assistant, played by Mimi Rogers ("Monkey Trouble").

Other appearances are made by Robert Wagner as the sinister Number 2, Carrie Fisher as Dr. Evil's support group leader, Michael York as the head of British Intelligence, Rich Hall as an assassin, and Tom Arnold as nobody in particular (a typical obligatory cameo).

The best aspect of "Austin Powers" is the witty parodies of 70s film conventions, including crappy montages and psychedelic Laugh In-like cut-aways.

Even more amusing, though, are the James Bond spoofs, such as a Goldfingerish thug who hurls his shoe at his victims and an allusion to Pussy Galore in the form of a vixen named Allota Fagina.

Campiness pervades the entire film. Its style and fresh humor make "Austin Powers" one of the best comedies in quite a while.

"AUSTIN POWERS" EXHIBITS A FRESH, ELEVATED HUMOR COUPLED WITH CLEVER PARODY, WHICH SHOULD RETURN MEYERS TO THE LIMELIGHT.

Former teen star Kippi Brannon comes back with 'Daddy's Little Girl'

The Associated Press

NASHVILLE, Tenn.— Between Tanya Tucker and LeAnn Rimes there was another teen phenomenon in country music named Kippi Brannon.

Brannon hit the charts with three records in 1981-82, but quit without making near the impact of Tucker and Rimes. She walked away because she wanted to be a teen-ager again, and then go to college.

Fifteen years later, she's back with a hit single that is the most talked-about country record of the moment.

"Daddy's Little Girl" marks

nette and as Southern as Scarlett O'Hara.

She grew up in Nashville's suburbs where she was classmates with two other eventual country singers, Deana Carter and Mila Mason.

All the signs are there for "Daddy's Little Girl" to be a major comeback hit.

It's been selling briskly, steadily moving up the charts, and when it's played on the radio, phones start ringing in response.

"This is a song that has goose bumps written all over it," said John Sebastian, program direc-

"THIS IS A SONG THAT HAS GOOSE BUMPS WRITTEN ALL OVER IT."

—JOHN SEBASTIAN, PROGRAM DIRECTOR AT KZLA IN GLENDALE, CALIF.

quite a comeback for a performer discovered singing in a shopping mall when she was 12. Brannon opened shows in those days for The Oak Ridge Boys, Conway Twitty and George Strait.

Much like Rimes today and Tucker in the 1970s, youth was her selling point.

She passed on a debut album, saying she wanted "a normal situation" rather than a career in 1982.

She was 15 then. Now she's 31.

"Come on, I'm still a kid," Brannon said with a laugh after bounding into a Nashville restaurant to talk about what she's been doing for the past 15 years.

After slipping out of the public eye, Brannon earned a college degree and started taking prelaw courses. She also got married and divorced twice, and mothered a child—Kasey, 9. She struggled to get by on temporary jobs, and for a time was the top car-buffer salesperson at Sears.

"My life didn't turn out exactly how I was hoping that it would," Brannon said. "If you would have told me at 16 that I was going to end up married twice, and have a little girl and be a single mom, I would have laughed in your face."

"There have been some challenges, but for the most part that was the best thing I ever did for myself, was getting a big dose of normal for myself. It kept me very grounded."

Brannon doesn't look much different than she did as a mature 14-year-old: tall, thin, bru-tor at KZLA in Glendale, Calif.

There's been "a lot of emotional response from our female listeners" in Hartford, Conn., said WWYZ's John Saville.

Brannon, a fan of the big ballads of Celine Dion, said she recorded the song because as an only child she is a confirmed "daddy's little girl."

The ballad is as unabashedly sentimental as any Barry Manilow hit.

"I get stories on a daily basis on how this record is affecting lives," Brannon said. "From children, to women, to men—across the board."

"From an artist's standpoint, that's the greatest compliment you can give me."

Curb-Universal Records recently released Brannon's first album.

Besides "Daddy's Little Girl," the standout song is title cut "I'd Be With You," a canny effort to make a record to please Shania Twain fans who are awaiting that million-seller's next album.

Brannon is frank that her decision to start singing again wasn't totally an artistic one, though she says she always knew she'd return down the line.

"When I got my first divorce, I was 22 years old and here I was with a 3-year-old and I didn't know how I was going to support her other than 9-to-5 jobs that were making minimum wage. It was very difficult to make ends meet."

"At that point, bottom of the barrel kind of thing, I said, 'OK, I need to get back into it.'"

Young fiddle player is a natural, won state competition

The Associated Press

MONROE, La. — T-Bo Lairscey's thin fingers glide smoothly over the strings of his fiddle as he plays the first song he ever learned, "Ashakan's Farewell," a Civil War tune.

Since he played that song two years ago at age 14, he has learned many others in different styles, including bluegrass and country.

Lairscey had the chance to showcase his talent recently at a fiddling contest at the Rebel State Commemorative Area in Marthaville. There he competed against 23 other fiddlers and was named the 1997 Louisiana Grand Champion Fiddler.

Despite his proficiency, the fiddle wasn't Lairscey's first instrument.

"I started playing the banjo when I was 10 or 11 and shortly after that I started playing the guitar," he said, plucking the strings on his fiddle.

He also plays the mandolin and bass guitar.

Music seems to run in the Lairscey family. Mom Kathy plays the banjo and dad Travis plays the guitar. They all are members of the North Louisiana Bluegrass Club.

T-Bo has never taken formal music lessons.

He learned the banjo and guitar from his parents, but the fiddle he picked up somewhat by accident.

"I was in seventh grade at Pinecrest and played in the band. The band was small, and I asked the teacher to teach guitar. She said no, but she said I could play violin," the West Quachita High School sophomore said.

He immediately took to the instrument, learning to play mostly by ear. He heard his first fiddle song, "Ashakan's Farewell," at a festival and decided he wanted to play it.

"I just listened to it four or five times, and I learned the first part, and after about an hour, I had learned the whole thing," T-Bo said.

His mother can hardly keep the pride from her voice when she talks about her son's musical talent

RESTAURANT REVIEW

Campus eating establishments receive mixed reviews

By Jennifer Stokes
Staff Writer

This week's restaurant in review is actually reviewing several restaurants. Today, I tackle the behemoth known as GSU Food Services.

Let's start with Lakeside. I eat there several times a week.

The Chinese food is not bad, but it ain't great either. If anyone knows what kind of egg rolls they are serving, please let me know. I have tried them several times and have yet to figure it out. Of course, maybe that's true for all egg rolls.

Moving down the wall, there's the cafeteria section.

I can't say I'm too impressed with the quality there, either. I have tried the Salisbury steak with mashed potatoes. The steak was very much unlike any meat product I've ever had before, and the gravy and potatoes were so salty I was downing water the rest of the day.

The spaghetti is your standard canned institutional food service stuff, so if that's what you like, that's where it is.

I do appreciate the fact that they will prepare a veggie plate for you, but I wonder what they add to them that makes them all so wonderfully brightly colored. Is it additives or flash-freezing? Maybe that's something else I'm better off not knowing.

Now, let's move on to the Union. How about Spud's Doghouse? This is one of the most disgusting places on the whole campus to eat.

I have seen employees preparing food with their little sanitary gloves on, turn around and take money from customers, make change and go back to preparing food with the gloves on. Hey, those gloves are supposed to keep my food clean, not your hands!

On top of all that, the hot dogs are a hundred years old, and the pretzels are seriously overpriced. And the service stinks. I actually saw a clerk have to get out a calculator to make change for a charge of $1.33 out of two dollars. Also, if those people move any slower, they will be going backwards!

So around the corner to Union Station. When I first started going there, service was lousy and the food was worse. But all once, and they put oil dressing on it. Does anyone really eat it like that?

The other place in the Union is the Educated Palate. I am surprised by how many of my classmates don't know this place exists.

If you need a healthy serving of pasta, served on a real plate and tea in a glass glass, this is the place. You can choose what kind of pasta and what kind of sauce. I love their Alfredo sauce — it's very cheesy and creamy. I find the tomato sauces a little too acidic, but they aren't bad.

The daily lunch buffet is a good deal (all you can eat), but every once in a while there is some kind of mystery meat up there. But there's enough stuff up there that you can avoid the alien sustenance and still get plenty. Most of the servers are friendly, too, and really seem to be working to do their best for you.

The biggest problem with food service on campus is attitude.

Too many of the student workers shuffle around as if they never had to stand on the other side of the counter. I am really tired of standing there waiting for my food and hearing employees discussing last night's date or yesterday's homework while they are standing still.

Talk all you want if you are hustling to get stuff over the counter, but if you can't talk and walk at the same time, you're in the wrong place to begin with.

Maybe if the university paid by the number of orders filled per hour, service would be better.

But overall, there are a few good places here on campus to eat.

Granted, all the prices are too high, with the exception of the Educated Palate's buffet. Students are a captive audience, and the university knows it.

Hey, if you ran this place, you'd gouge us too, wouldn't you? Think about it.

that has changed. Service seems to have improved, and now the food is lousy.

I have to admit it. I avoid the place during lunch, when it can still take five or six minutes to get your food, but that's better than the eight or 10 I used to have to wait.

I had a croissant sandwich this morning that looked like someone sat on it. Half of the egg wasn't even on the croissant, and a two-year-old could have wrapped it better.

The hash brown was little more than a sponge of grease. It hardly tasted like potato. I have had several of their sandwiches and none of them impressed me — too much bread, not nearly enough meat.

I ordered a chicken salad sandwich there stayed at the finest hotels. I've seen the best."

This may account for the razzmatazz quality of Hammer's decorating — the acres of black marble, the mirrored bathrooms, the massive gold and black marble Jacuzzi in the bedroom, panoramic view of the Peninsula, two bridges, Shoreline Amphitheatre and the Niumi automobile plant.

I GOT THE IDEA AT THE MIRAGE IN VEGAS."

—M.C. HAMMER, RAP STAR

Beverly Hills realtor-to-the-stars Elaine Young, who sold O.J. Simpson his Rockingham property and who has handled sales for Sylvester Stallone, Zsa Zsa Gabor and Elizabeth Taylor, has the listing — $6.5 million — $5.5 million less than what he paid for it.

Although there is not even a brochure on the property yet, San Francisco Bay area realtors are chomping at the private gate (emblazoned with "Hammer Time") to see the house.

"When I moved in here, it felt more like I was still on vacation," he says. "In my world travels, I the black wall-to-wall carpeting and the marble dining room table made from the same striated marble as the floor.

"That pop-up TV console in the bedroom? I got the idea at The Mirage in Vegas."

Hammer and his wife, Stephanie, daughters Akeiba, 9, and Sarah, 3, and 18-month-old son Stanley Burrell Jr., are living in the house until it sells. Then, says Hammer, the family is moving to Morgan Hill.

CD REVIEW

Latest Strait album grows on you one song at a time

By Mike Davis
Staff Writer

The latest George Strait album hit the shelves last week, but it didn't stay very long.

"Carrying Your Love With Me," the title of his new album, is an improvement over his last album, "Blue Clear Sky."

That last album, coincidentally, won Album-of-the-Year at the American Country Music awards. Strait won Male Performer-of-the-Year as well.

But this album shows just why George Strait is often called a country legend. This album is more heart-felt and personal, not to mention more fun, than his last endeavour.

Songs like "One Night at a Time" and "Carrying Your Love With Me" showcase his way with ballads that has made his songs so popular at weddings.

"Round About Way" is classic Strait in that it sticks to old-fashioned country music and doesn't try to follow the example of many new acts on the charts.

"That's Me Every Chance I Get," my personal favorite, reminds fans of old hits like "You Know Me Better Than That" and "80 Proof Bottle Of Tear-Stopper."

The album also features songs, like "The Nerve," that seem uncharacteristic of Strait. Strait doesn't usually handle the topics of heritage and religion, at least not since, "Love Without End, Amen."

Strait impressed me, as well as many other country fans, with this new album, and there are blank spaces on store's shelves to prove it.

Union plans to picket rock hall induction ceremony

The Associated Press

CLEVELAND — Unionists plan to conduct informational picketing Tuesday outside of a hotel where the Rock and Roll Hall of Fame and Museum will hold its annual induction ceremony.

The International Theatrical and Stage Employees Union intends to protest the hiring of production workers for the ceremony who are not represented by any union.

Dale W. Short, business agent for the union's Local 27, said Friday the ceremony could have employed about 35 workers who belong to the union. He said members of the union worked the hall's opening ceremony in 1995 and voluntarily took a 15 percent wage cut to do so.

"And now they are not being allowed to work at the first Rock and Roll Hall of Fame induction held in Cleveland. This is a disgrace," Short said.

The Rock and Roll Hall of Fame Foundation, which produces the annual ceremony, responded Friday night that it has no obligation to hire union workers for the event.

"While our workers are non-union they are members of the local Cleveland community and are highly qualified professionals who are being well compensated for their services," said Suzan Evans, the foundation's executive director.

Short said the union anticipates the support of the Cleveland Federation of Labor, the Building Trades Council and Teamsters Local 407 on the picket line.

GSU students search for slave artifacts at former plantation site

The Associated Press

ST. SIMONS ISLAND, Ga. — The rich black soil trickled through the mesh screen at the bottom of the 3-by-4-foot wooden box being shaken by Laura Chiudini.

Soon, she had found half a dozen ancient pottery shards in the dirt, none of them bigger than a quarter.

Ms. Chiudini, 46, is one of eight Georgia Southern University students unearthing long-buried remnants of slaves who worked at what once was Hamilton Plantation on St. Simons Island.

"It's like a treasure hunt. You just never know what you're going to find," said Ms. Chiudini, a former U.S. Marine and Defense Department worker now studying anthropology and archaeology at the Statesboro school.

The students began their excavation April 7 at old garbage dumps near the slave cabins on Gascoigne Bluff. It is part of a research project examining the lives and history of slaves in coastal Georgia.

So far, they have unearthed pieces of fine china dating to 1851, a hand-etched smoking pipe stem, gun parts, musket balls and buttons made from shells and bone.

Fragments of glass from medicine bottles, wine bottles and gingerbeer bottles also have been found, as have an ornate keyhole cover plate, nails, tacks, door hinges and pieces of clay pipes.

"You get a very objective sample and view of people by looking at what they throw away in the garbage," said Stephen Hale, the archaeology professor who is leading the dig.

Hale said artifacts unearthed so far help show how the slaves lived and worked before, during and after the Civil War.

"This is the first archaeological work ever done at this plantation," he said. "It's our hope that this dig will add a lot of firsthand data and history documenting slave life."

Most of what is known about slave life was written by slave owners, plantation overseers and white historians, Hale said. "It is history written from the perspective of whites."

The slave cabins, which are on the National Register of Historic Places, were part of a sprawling plantation owned by James Hamilton, a Charleston, S.C., merchant who moved to St. Simons Island in the late 18th century, according to Glynn County historians.

Hale said the plantation had about half a dozen tabby cabins, constructed about 1806, for the slaves who worked in the fields. Two of the cabins remain standing, while only the foundations remain for the others.

Hale and others, including his students, members of the Golden Isles Archaeological Society and residents volunteering their time have been working at the site since Feb. 1. The first two months were spent doing field research, such as surveys to map out the cabin foundations.

All artifacts are being cleaned and meticulously cataloged and will be left in a Glynn County museum when the students are finished, Hale said.

Ten biggest newspapers see decline in circulation

By Farrell Kramer
The Associated Press

NEW YORK — Despite surging profits at major newspaper companies, circulation declined at six of the nation's 10 biggest newspapers during the most recent reporting period.

Of the top 10, only USA Today, the Los Angeles Times, Newsday and the San Francisco Chronicle posted circulation gains, according to figures compiled by the Audit Bureau of Circulations for the six months through March 31.

In Florida, nine of the state's 10 biggest newspapers saw daily circulation drop this winter.

The Miami Herald, long the state's biggest seller, suffered a 4.2-percent decline, dropping it to No. 2, The Orlando Sentinel reported.

"The newspaper industry is very large and very profitable," said John Morton, a newspaper industry analyst at Morton Research. "It's a disturbing long-term trend, though."

The circulation weakness came as the industry felt the effects of newspaper price increases and cutbacks of costly deliveries to outlying areas.

Circulation at the nation's largest paper, The Wall Street Journal, dropped 0.2 percent to 1.84 million. The New York Times fell 4.4 percent, the biggest percentage decline in the top 10, from 1.16 million to 1.11 million. The Washington Post reported a 1.8 percent drop to 818,231 from 833,427.

Other declines in the top 10: the Daily News of New York, down 4.0 percent from 758,509 to 728,107; the Chicago Tribune, down from 667,909 to 664,586, 0.5 percent; the Houston Chronicle, off 0.3 percent from 551,553 to 549,856.

USA Today, the nation's second-biggest newspaper, saw circulation improve 2.7 percent from 1.62 million to 1.66 million. The Los Angeles Times had the biggest percentage gain of the top 10, 4.7 percent to 1.07 million from 1.02 million.

Newsday improved 0.7 percent from 555,203 to 559,233, while the San Francisco Chronicle added 0.03 percent to 494,093.

The Newspaper Association of America, an industry trade group, calculated that the bureau figures for all dailies showed a combined 1.2 percent circulation decline. Circulation gains were seen in 33 percent of the papers, which had a total circulation of more than 51 million.
