

Newsroom

December 20, 2018

Georgia Southern University

Follow this and additional works at: <https://digitalcommons.georgiasouthern.edu/newsroom>

Part of the Higher Education Commons

Recommended Citation

Georgia Southern University, "Newsroom" (2018). Newsroom. 1598.
<https://digitalcommons.georgiasouthern.edu/newsroom/1598>

This article is brought to you for free and open access by the Office of Strategic Communications & Marketing at Digital Commons@Georgia Southern. It has been accepted for inclusion in Newsroom by an authorized administrator of Digital Commons@Georgia Southern. For more information, please contact digitalcommons@georgiasouthern.edu.

Georgia Southern University recognized for research focus with latest Carnegie ranking

DECEMBER 20, 2018

Save

Georgia Southern University is now ranked as an "R2" high research institution, placing it in the top 6% of all institutions ranked by the Carnegie Classification of Institutions of Higher Education. The "R2" designation, the second-highest classification for research institutions, was unveiled this week.

Carnegie ranked 4,424 universities and colleges — public and private, both for profit and not for profit. Of those, 120 were classified as "R1" or Doctoral Universities: Very High Research Activity, and 139 — including Georgia Southern — were designated as "R2" or Doctoral Universities: High Research Activity.

"This says our faculty have been doing a good job," said Carl L. Reiber, Ph.D., Georgia Southern's provost and vice president for academic affairs. "This is a great accomplishment. From a national perspective, it really does put us in a different league. This will say a lot about who we are to prospective students and faculty."

Reiber said Georgia Southern last year spent about $17.5 million on research to support the university's broader educational goals and in support of the region's needs. The elevated ranking of an "R2" came after computing those expenditures with the number of doctoral degrees awarded.

The "R1" and "R2" designations include institutions that conferred at least 20 research/scholarship doctorates and reported a minimum of $5 million dollars of total research expenditures through the NSF HERD survey. The research activity index was then used to determine a cutoff between the "very high research activity" (R1) institutions, and "high research activity" (R2) institutions.

The "R2" ranking and the recent news about Georgia Southern's $1 billion annual economic impact on southeast Georgia show how much the university means to the region, said Shelley C. Nickel, Georgia Southern's president.

"This designation is an important recognition of the research across the University that meets the needs of our community," Nickel said. "I expect that this 'R2' ranking will continue to be exemplified by the work we are doing to impact our region and grow our research and scholarship contributions in Savannah."

Georgia Southern University, a public Carnegie Doctoral/R2 institution founded in 1906, offers 141 degree programs serving nearly 26,500 students through nine colleges on three campuses in Statesboro, Savannah, Hinesville and online instruction. A leader in higher education in southeast Georgia, the University provides a diverse student population with expert faculty, world-class scholarship and hands-on learning opportunities. Georgia Southern creates lifelong learners who serve as responsible scholars, leaders and stewards in their communities.

Visit GeorgiaSouthern.edu.

First-year students to represent Georgia Southern in National College Cornhole Championship

DECEMBER 20, 2018

Save

Graham, left, and Yaklin pose with prize money from past tournaments.

To most people, cornhole is a game played during cookouts, tailgates and beach trips, but for Georgia Southern University first-year students James Graham and Hunter Yaklin, it's an opportunity for students from the Armstrong and Statesboro campuses to come together for a shot at earning $25,000 in scholarship money.

The duo will spend their holiday break competing in both the doubles and singles tournaments at the National College Cornhole Championship on Dec. 29 and 30 in Myrtle Beach, South Carolina. Graham said he's looking forward to competing in the tournaments televised on ESPN.

"Representing Georgia Southern on ESPN is a dream come true and an honor," he said. "I've wanted to play cornhole professionally ever since I first played it in 9th grade."

Yaklin, who is a biology major on the Armstrong Campus, and Graham, who is a sports management major on the Statesboro Campus, met at the Georgia State Championships of Cornhole where Yaklin won the Junior State Title.

Yaklin played in local tournaments for about a year before competing against the best players in the world in American Cornhole Organization and American Cornhole League (ACL) tournaments. His first year playing he won the Georgia 18-and-under state championship. Last year he won the ACL Southeastern Conference competitive singles title.

The collegiate tournaments are open to anyone, but the competition will be high. Yaklin is tied for the No. 82 spot in the national overall ACL rankings, and he's ranked No. 9 in the Georgia ACL rankings. Graham is ranked No. 89 in Georgia. The scholarship prize for the doubles tournament is $15,000, which the duo will split if they win, while the singles tournament offers a $10,000 prize. They have both won hundreds of dollars in tournaments.

"I love traveling and meeting new people, which allows me to play the best in the game and better my game," Yaklin said. "I love to compete and have fun doing it."

Yaklin, who is from Savannah, said he practices regularly and plays in one to three tournaments a week to stay sharp. Graham, who is from Vada, Georgia, and whose dad is also ranked in the top 100 in the country, has a simpler approach.

"I just don't think about it too much and throw the bags," Graham said.

The team will look to balance each other out during their first tournament representing Georgia Southern, but the duo definitely knows what's at stake with the two campuses uniting.

"I want (Graham) and I to be the ones that bring the first ever National Cornhole Championship to Georgia Southern," Yaklin said. "Being able to represent my school on ESPN will be one of the biggest accomplishments in my life."

Georgia Southern University, a public Carnegie Doctoral/Research institution founded in 1906, offers 141 degree programs serving nearly 26,500 students through nine colleges on three campuses in Statesboro, Savannah, Hinesville and online instruction. A leader in higher education in southeast Georgia, the University provides a diverse student population with expert faculty, world-class scholarship and hands-on learning opportunities. Georgia Southern creates lifelong learners who serve as responsible scholars, leaders and stewards in their communities. Visit GeorgiaSouthern.edu.