All eyes on 12th district race

Twelfth Congressional District elections take place Tuesday, Nov. 5

From Staff and Wire Reports

Whether it's Republican Max Burns or Democrat Charles "Champ" Walker Jr., the first man to represent the 12th Congressional District seems certain to draw national attention.

A win by the conservative Burns, a Georgia Southern University professor from Screven County, would make news as a major upset in a district that was drawn to guarantee election of a Democrat. In the 2000 presidential election, about 56 percent of the district's voters went for Al Gore and 64 percent voted for Democratic Gov. Roy Barnes in the gubernatorial race.

A win by Walker, the son of state Senate Majority Leader Charles Walker of Augusta, could be part of a dramatic shift of power in Georgia's congressional ranks.

Because of a newly drawn congressional district map, political analysts have predicted that the Democratic Party could take six or seven of Georgia's 13 seats in the U.S. House of Representatives, including the 12th District seat. Republicans now hold eight of the state's 11 seats.

The long and narrow 12th District, created by a Democrat-controlled Legislature, stretches south and east from Athens to include parts of Augusta and Savannah, about 200 miles apart.

About 39 percent of the district's voters are black, which would make a win by Burns an even bigger upset, notes University of Georgia political science professor Charles Bullock. Black voters overwhelming vote Democratic, he said.

But a recent poll indicates that Burns could be on the verge of pulling off an upset: In a recent survey of 402 likely voters, Republican pollsters The Tarrance Group found that 48 percent favored Burns, 33 percent favored

No longer the 'solid South,' but Democrats still hold decisive edge in Georgia politics

By Christopher Johnson
cjohns10@eagle4.cc.gasou.edu

There was a time in Georgia's past when the term "the Democratic south" applied across the entire state.

"You knew who would win the elections after the Democratic primary," said professor of Political Science Dr. Lois Duke-Whitaker.

That time is no more. The typical Georgia voter now epitomizes the phrase "swing voter."

In the 1998 elections 70 Georgia counties were carried by both Democratic gubernatorial candidate Roy Barnes (the eventual winner) and the Republican U.S. Senatorial candidate Paul Coverdell.

The recent trend in Georgia elections has been to vote Democratic in state elections and Republican in national elections. Current party ties in both the Georgia House of Representatives and Senate reflect this trend. In the House, Democrats outnumber Republicans 105-65, while in the Senate they have a 33-23 edge.

This tendency holds true for the governor's office as well, which Democrats have held for the past 130 years. On the national level, however, eight Republicans (all in the House of Representatives) and five Democrats represent Georgia.

In presidential elections, Georgians tend to support Republican candidates.

This trend dates back to the 1964 presidential election, when Republican presidential candidate Barry Goldwater defeated Lyndon Johnson.

According to Whitaker, the strong Democratic hold of the South came about around the turn of the century and was due, in part, to an influx of African-American voters. Also, she said, since most young voters are introduced to politics by their parents, their views tend to reflect the views of their parents.

So, what must a candidate in Georgia do, to appeal to the states independent voters? Atlanta Journal-Constitution columnist Jim Calhoun said that Republican strategy has them, for the first time since 1974, reaching out to the state's southern counties.

"We're trying to capture the basic voting instincts of the non-metro Atlanta voter," said Sonny Perdue, Republican gubernatorial candidate.

The average southern Georgian tends to vote moderate to conservative. Therefore, Georgia's moderate Democrats have fared well in the state.

What the Republicans are seeking to do is link themselves to President Bush, who won Georgia in an overwhelming majority in 2000, while establishing a link between Georgia Democrats and what is seen as the

Barnes not assured bid for re-election

Associated Press

ATLANTA — He was the class cutup as a kid; the one who flushed dry ice down a commode and got school evacuated for a day; the one who loosened screws in school door handles so they would spin but not open.

Years later, his fun-loving streak evolved into a fondness for delivering wickedly funny quips not always suitable for public consumption—a tendency he sheepishly attributed to his "smart-ass gene."

But Gov. Roy Barnes has suppressed that side of his personality in a re-election campaign that's seen him denounced as a tyrant and dogged by those bitterly opposed to the way he changed the state flag.

"I still like humor. I also realize that being governor, you can't cut up as much," he said. "It's a realization that what you say really has an effect and can cause unintended consequences if you don't watch what you say."

That's one explanation. Another is that in modern campaigns, it's perilous to stray off script because the other side is watching closely for the unguarded comment or misstatement.

The odds seem to favor Barnes this year. He has a 7-1 fund-raising edge over Republican challenger Sonny Perdue and led Perdue in two recent polls.

On paper, at least, the race doesn't look that competitive, said Emory University political science professor Merle Black. "But it's all contingent upon turnout. Getting your votes to the polls. It's not anything anybody can take for granted any more."

Clearly, Barnes isn't. He's been raising money for re-election since he won the office four years ago. His TV ads have been on the air since spring. He's shelling out big bucks for image-polishers, consultants and polls.

During a drive to middle Georgia, Barnes said he's applying the lessons he learned from the biggest defeat of his life in 1990 when he lost the Democratic gubernatorial nomination to Zell Miller.

"I sat down afterward and made a list of everything I had done wrong. It all came down to lack of discipline," he said.

It was a more disciplined Roy Barnes who ran for governor again in 1998 at the completion of Miller's term. That fall, he defeated Republican Guy Millner despite having been outspent by the

Hall-O-Ween pleases candy seekers

By Adam Brady
that_guy@stouthouse.org

Johnson Hall has historically been known to house the youngest of the GSU community, but Monday night, that was an understatement.

The Third Annual Hall-O-Ween sponsored by Johnson Hall and the Residence Hall Presidents' Council opened the second largest residence hall on campus to tiny trick-or-treaters from around the Statesboro and GSU community.

Young and old alike dressed in the spooky fatigues of the season to participate in holiday games like Pin the Tail on the Cat, Halloween Twister, Catch the Pumpkin and even Halloween Bowling.

The most important part to many, however, was the part that caters to sweet tooths: trick-or-treating.

For the Hall-O-Ween program, Johnson Hall residents on the first floor of the building were allowed to choose to participate in handing out candy to children as they make their way down each of the halls in the building.

Each of the hall action teams from the 12 residence halls on campus decided on an idea for a booth at the event, while the residents of Johnson Hall decorated the building's lobby and hallways in the décor of the season. Some of the booths included fortune telling, cookie decorating and face painting.

WVGS 91.9 FM was even there to provide a live broadcast of portions of the event.

In its third year, Hall-O-Ween had one of the best turnouts it's ever seen with over one hundred community children, parents, and students participating.

Trick-or-treaters filed through Johnson Hall in their costumes on Monday night collecting candy from first floor residents.

Credit card counseling centers can be a an added problem for in-debt students

College-age adults are a big target for groups that claim to repair bad credit for a fee

By Michelle Flournoy
mlf21@hotmail.com

The ads are everywhere and they claim that—for a fee—blemishes can be banished from your credit report.

The debt that students rack up during their college years has paved the way for a variety of businesses claiming that they can repair credit, but students should question the validity of some of these businesses' claims, experts say.

The Federal Trade Commission advises staying away from any agency that says they can take something that is accurate off of your credit report. The Credit Repair Organizations Act states that credit repair companies cannot require you to pay anything before a service is provided—so you should beware of anyone wanting money up front.

For people needing assistance with debt problems one of the best options may be a credit-counseling agency though it is beneficial to shop around since some may require higher fees than others.

Special to the G-A

Consumers should be aware of any company that asks for money up front to help with fixing credit reports, the Federal Trade Commission says.

Sonny Coley of Consumer Credit Counseling Services in Savannah said that his company functions to stop over-limit fees, reduce interest rates, and reduce late fees for its clients.

After a client enters the program and makes consecutive payments the account may be re-aged by the credit grantor. This means that if the account was past due it will be brought into a current status.

Coley said the counselors that work for his company go through a training program. Most of the counselors have a background in financial situations.

"The average age of the people that we serve is 32 years old," said Coley. "Most of our clients acquired their debt from credit cards that they got while they were in college. Colleges allow credit cards to promote on campus. The credit card companies give students credit cards knowing that they have no income to pay back the charges."

Coley said that the average person is $20,000 in debt and has 10 credit cards.

Education is a key factor in Coley's program. The program teaches its clients how to set up a budget and how to work within that budget.

The program is nonprofit though they do ask for a contribution of $25. If a client is unable to pay the $25 this does not affect their service.

Coley frequently gives free speeches and workshops on managing credit.

"We all have financial perimeters," said Coley. "We need to know how to set up a plan, how to save money for a house or to put the kids through college. It doesn't just happen by rubbing a magic genie bottle."

Coley said it is important to note that some credit problems may be fixed on your own.

You are entitled to one free report per year if you are seeking a job, if you are on welfare, or if you believe your credit report is inaccurate.

If you have been denied credit within the past two months you are also eligible to receive a free report. You can then dispute any items that are incorrect or outdated by sending in a dispute form along with the proper documentation.

Manufacturer recalls 'convenient' contraceptive

By Laura Porte
laura_porte@hotmail.com

The Lunelle Contraceptive Injection has been recalled by the Pharmacia Corporation. Women who have been prescribed this method of birth control need to see their current health care provider for another method, health care officials warn.

So why is Lunelle being recalled? The manufacturer says the product has a lack of assurance of full potency and possible risk of pregnancy. Not every woman taking Lunelle, however, is at risk of pregnancy.

Eldonna Hilde of GSU Health Services, is in charge of the Lunelle recall on campus. Hilde explained that the prefilled syringes of Lunelle are produced in lots. The lots are numbered, and only 17 lots have been recalled.

"Those on Lunelle need to come see me, and we'll see what lot their syringe came from," said Hilde.

Lunelle, approved by the FDA in the Fall of 2000, is a somewhat new form of birth control, although it's not as popular as the birth control pill or Depo-Provera. It is a monthly injection that was said to be 99 percent effective against pregnancy.

Lunelle is advertised as being extremely convenient; women only have to think about it one day out of the month, as opposed to the daily birth control pill. The injection inserts microcrystals filled with estrogen and progesterone into the body.

The crystals are absorbed and slowly dissolve, providing the body with a combination of hormones that give birth control protection for an entire month.

The injections are given every 28-30 days, and 90 percent of women said they would recommend it to their friends.

Even if the specific injection hasn't been recalled, the manufacturer recommends that everyone taking Lunelle begin another form of birth control.

The manufacturer also says that Lunelle packaged in vials is not affected by this recall, but those women may also want to seek another form.

Lunelle may sound similar to the birth control injection Depo-Provera, but Hilde assures that they are two completely different products.

"Lunelle is completely different, and those on Depo-Provera have nothing to worry about," said Hilde.

Those who have been prescribed Lunelle should call health services and request an appointment with Eldonna Hilde.

To request a reimbursement for the cost of Lunelle, call Pharmacia Medical Drug Information at 888-691-6813.

Cold and influenza season nothing to sneeze at, health officials warn

Sneezes don't do good enough job of getting checked out's time of fear, say GSU Health Center officials

By el Watts
jwatts@email.gasou.edu

As cold and influenza can appear anytime during the year, these ailments tend to be especially pervasive during the fall and winter months.

"Such a large student body, the but is not nearly large enough for hots," said Barbara James of the Georgia Southern Health Education Center.

It said that many students dismiss and influenza during this time because they do not think these sicknesses are serious, or because they are afraid of momentary pain flu shots.

It said that she considers the inconvenience of pain to be an illogical excuse for avoiding a flu shot. She said that she has seen people become very ill from influenza and miss much as a week of class.

Flu shot
GSU Health Center offers flu shots to students for $6, while the local health dept. charges $10.00 and a private doctor charges more. These shots are available at anytime to students.

It said that shot sessions are periodically offered for faculty and will be held in the Russell Union on November 6, 7, but that she had to choose to have the shot administered outside of the Health Center. The Health Center seeks to assist students as much as possible.

About the bug
The pamphlet Kill the Bug, which is available at the GSU Health Center, describes the common cold and influenza, both of which are prevalent throughout November and December.

The common cold starts slowly, with its symptoms usually "local" in the head and can include sneezing, runny nose, stuffy head, headache, sore throat, cough, hoarseness and fever below 101 degrees F, lasting 7-10 days.

Special to the G-A

Fear of getting a flu shot is one of the reasons students don't come to the Health Center, workers say.

Influenza is described as appearing suddenly with "generalized" symptoms of fever over 101 degrees F, weakness, aches and pains, dry cough, headache, sore eyes and throat, runny nose, sneezing and subsiding of symptoms in 1-2 days, however recovery may take more than a week.

Since these illnesses are viral and not bacterial, antibiotics are useless. It is further advised to be alert for signs that can be treated with professional medical help. While the symptoms tend to be similar, flu is usually much more severe and longer lasting.

Easy to get it
Georgia Southern student Justine Anderson is currently suffering from cold symptoms such as sore throat, cough and head congestion, all cold symptoms. She is using Vicks cough syrup and lemon tea to treat her symptoms. She said that she notices an improvement in her condition when she uses these products daily.

Anderson added that she obtained her illness from her boyfriend.

"Don't hang around your boyfriend when he's sick," she said. She also said that in the future she will drink echinacea tea to help boost her immune system and hopefully be more likely to avoid such illnesses.

Ways to avoid a cold
Quanta-gaia.org says that more often than not, people infect themselves by placing their contaminated hands into their eyes, mouth or nose without cleaning.

The website also says that these infections are less frequently spread by air. It is advised that you wash your hands before injecting them into the aforementioned orifices.

CNN.com similarly advises washing hands, avoiding contact with those suffering from cold or flu symptoms, keeping kitchen and bathroom areas clean—particularly when shared with a cold/flu sufferer.

Also, immediate disposal of used tissues, avoiding dry air when indoors—dry nasal passages are often vulnerable to cold virus, and to give up smoking because those who smoke are more susceptible to respiratory illness.

People in close contact with the aforementioned groups should also consider flu shots. Antibodies against the flu take about one to two weeks to develop.

OPINIONS

OUR OPINION

This one's gonna have to last you 'til next Wednesday

We here at The George-Anne regret to inform you, the average reader, that The George-Anne will not be produced on both Friday, Nov. 1 and Monday, Nov. 6.

The bulk of the editorial staff as well as other executive members of Student Media will be thoroughly involved in the painstaking process of education in our field that has come to be called the National Student Media Convention.

Unfortunately, this year's conference on learning will be taking place in the blisteringly sunny State of Florida. What's even worse, they've coordinated the program to occur in Orlando, the biggest tourist trap in the state.

We're not quite sure what kind of hijinks may ensue as a large group of Student Media representatives are brought to the city.

Perhaps the city will decide to hold us for ransom on some of the best theme park rides in the country. Or even worse yet: hotel rooms with a spectacular view from the 14th floor.

But please, faithful reader, have no fear for the lives of your fellow classmates. We will do our best to represent you to the fullest and learn the most we can to bring you the quality in news you deserve. Try not to picture us as we face the plight ahead: roller coasters are no match for the undying courage to succeed in the name of Georgia Southern.

May your Halloween weekend be filled with much fun, excitement and, of course, candy. We're outta here.

Rock is still made of Stone

The Rolling Stones are old.

Everyone knows that. But what everyone doesn't know is that they are the greatest rock n' roll band of all time. They helped jump-start the serious rock movement in the '60's, and they have proved wrong the general misconception that most rock bands - successful or not - do not survive the test of time. They have serious soul and they have indomitable spirit, and they care about making music and performing it.

Undoubtedly, I have a lot of cynics reading this. You may believe that the 'Stones' tunes are just oldies played incessantly on the radio, or that they are way past their prime and the only music worth listening to is relatively new. (Too bad most new music is somewhat influenced by them). You may think they are only survivors of the music business because of the lure of money, or you may not know anything about them. The challenge is to stay in those frames of mind after really getting to know their music, or better yet, after seeing them live in concert.

I was fortunate enough to have my dad, an avid rock and all-around music fan, talk me into going to the 'Stones Voodoo Lounge' tour concert at Florida Field in Gainesville, Fla at the tender age of 12. He told me that liked "old people music."

Eight years later, I embarked on my second journey to see the Rolling Stones last Saturday. This stretch of time has allowed me to grow a newfound respect for the band that I was once hesitant about...this is a band that once played to a meager crowd here in Statesboro generations ago.

Just as my dad said, I waited and I've seen.

the band had been around for decades and vowed they would continue to endure. "Just wait and see," he would say.

The 'Stones' were much, much better remembered. Their energy was tangible, and you could tell that the 'Stones' (all four of them: Mick Jagger, Keith Richards, Charlie Watts, and Ron Wood) were people who live for music, and genuinely love what they do. They have the heart.

To hear a powerhouse of a song like "Sympathy for the Devil," - a song that the group performed decades ago - performed with genuine charisma and passion as if it was the newest addition to the barelengthy library of songs is a rarity in music. The essence of such a performance is one of a kind.

Granted, there will always be those diehards that feel the 'Stones' lengthy careers and repeated tours are only the result of greed and the want for bank accounts.

I have a hard time believing that a band as talented and enduring as the Rolling Stones, with talent and such passion backing their music, is in anything but themselves. They are too old. They're still rock solid.

WELLSTONE: It shouldn't take death for us to remember 'champions of the people'

KRT Campus

The following editorial appeared in the Detroit Free Press on Monday, Oct. 28.

Twice in two years, a popular politician has died seeking the votes of the people he chose to serve.

U.S. Sen. Paul Wellstone, a maverick Democrat, died with his wife and daughter just 11 days before the Nov. 5 election - an eerie echo of the 2000 plane crash that killed Missouri Gov. Mel Carnahan 18 days before Election Day.

Wellstone's death Friday heightens the fight for Senate power, where one person can tip the Democratic majority; Republicans had targeted his Minnesota seat as vulnerable.

Behind the scenes, scrambling may already have begun, but publicly, at least, all either party focused on Friday was the nation's great loss.

At 5-foot-5, the former college wrestler never stopped fighting for the little guy. He campaigned passionately for mental health care, human rights, workplace protections, veterans and the environment.

Considered too liberal by many - the left-leaning Mother Jones magazine labeled him the "first '60s radical elected to the U.S. Senate" - the vibrant populist was universally respected. Self-deprecating and genuinely likable, Wellstone worked to build relationships while sticking to his heartfelt beliefs and fighting good fights.

He was the only Democrat in a competitive race to win against war in Iraq.

"Wellstone is one of those senators who cared about advancing principles that he hopes will someday triumph over the easy victories in the short term," the Almanac of American Politics said.

This time of year, as election politics grow silly, it's easy to become cynical and lose sight of their names and miles politicians log. Paul Wellstone made sacrifices tirelessly because he believed in the importance of being a public servant. It shouldn't have been his death to remember what champions of the people politicians can be.

Animals feel the fear of 'snipers' everyday

By Jason Baker
People for the Ethical Treatment of Animals

KRT Campus

The fear is lifting in the Washington area. The snipers who allegedly gunned down 13 people, killing 10, in the last month are behind bars. As authorities sort out the prosecution, we should remember the victims - all of the innocent men, women and children who were just going about their lives - filling their cars with gas, cutting grass, stepping onto a bus or walking to school.

Imagine the fear. Not knowing where or when the shooter would strike again. People were afraid to step outdoors and newspapers warned shoppers to walk in a zigzag pattern across parking lots and not to linger in open spaces. One of my colleagues who lives in that area was out early one morning last week and was stopped by a little boy who was so terrified that he begged her - a complete stranger - to walk him to school.

Talking to her, I began to realize that these people are now experiencing what many innocent animals feel every single day of their lives: constant, unrelenting fear. Fear that they will be suddenly singled out and beaten or killed.

Animals who are hunted live in a constant state of alertness or alarm, forever having to "zigzag" their way through life in case a person with a net or gun or spear sneaks up on them.

Animals in laboratories also experience this "hyper-alertness," which results in constant strain on the nerves. Because if you look at it from an animal's point of view, this is what experimentation is all about. Not science or medicine or knowledge. It's about pain and deprivation. About someone deciding that they must feel pain and death today. Recent studies have shown that this strain affects the nervous system and the immune system, and that it shortens animals' lifespans, making results of tests on the animals faulty at best.

So, too, animals in circuses and traveling shows never know when the "sniper" will strike. They already endure being forced to live as they never would, away from family and all others of their own kind, locked in cages or confined by chains, carted from place to place. The fear of the whip and the club is their constant companion. They would never perform tricks if they didn't fear they would be punished severely for refusing.

Animals we see every day know this fear, too. Many dogs are met with a kick or a curse. Cattle go to slaughter to see their fellow being dying slowly in a pool of blood.

We can do something about the "snipers" in our midst so as to relieve the sum total of fear in our community. We can insist that animals who men no harm, while the people now terrified of being hurt and killed, are not tormented or beaten, but afforded the opportunity to live peacefully in the world. We can do our best to make sure they are greeted with gentleness rather than violence.

We can teach our children the real value of, of never supporting industries that harm animals like circuses and roadside zoos; choose healthy food over meat always, and "pleather" or cotton over leather; and void products that are tested on animals. If each of us makes a few changes, we can touch the lives of many and make our neighborhoods refuges not target ranges.

Antiques show to benefit university Nursing Dept.

By Angela Jones
tastecake00@yahoo.com

It's about that time again, ladies and gentlemen. Time to make your lists and check them twice, then check the status of the cash stash earmarked for Christmas gifts.

If your piggy bank looks a bit like Mother Hubbard's cupboard, don't worry, help is on the way.

The Statesboro Business and Professional Women, a community organization active in a variety of service projects for more than 50 years, is hosting an Antiques and Fine Art show and sale Nov. 1 through 3 at the Kiwanis-Ogeechee Fairgrounds.

Hours for the show and sale are Friday from 6 p.m. to 9 p.m., Saturday from 9 a.m. to 7 p.m. and Sunday from 1 to 5 p.m. Admission is $3, and parking is free.

"All the money we raise at this event will go back to the nursing department, into the scholarship fund we provide," said event co-chair Anna Beecher.

Statesboro Business and Professional Women has provided one or two scholarships for nursing students in Bulloch County for 48 years.

Georgia Southern University's Nursing Dept. will have a booth displaying old nursing uniforms and equipment such as mal bedpans and syringes, along with information about the nursing program today.

"Our display is in keeping with the antiques theme of the show," said Dr. Carol Simonson, associate nursing professor.

"This should be a pretty educational booth for some people. Older people, those in their mid 50s or so, might recognize some of this stuff, but for the Gen. X crowd, it'll be a new experience. All they know is plastics and disposable things."

Author Tony Thompson will be on hand to sign his book "Kinfolks across the River" on Saturday from 9 a.m. to 7 p.m. and Southern cruisers will have a classic car display.

GSU's Wildlife center will also have booth at the event, where visitors can see demonstrations featuring hawks and owls, handle snakes and get an up close look at various bugs, including cockroaches, millipedes and spiders.

"Our booth will provide the folks coming out to the antique and art show with one more fun thing to do," said Wendy Denton, assistant director of the Wildlife Center. "The kids will really enjoy this booth, with all the creepy crawlies."

Items up for auction include furniture, estate and silver jewelry, oriental rugs, pottery and linens. Home cooking and sweets will also be available for sale.

Other entertainment will be provided by the Sunshine Squares and the Bulloch County Bass Masters Fishing Rodeo.

cent favored Walker, and 18 percent were undecided. Earlier this month, the same pollsters called the race a dead heat.

But the campaign has been anything but pleasant.

Seeking moral high ground in the tight race, Burns is attacking Walker for personal lapses ranging from arrests that were never prosecuted to Walker's fathering a child with his wife before they married.

"I'm the individual that has lived a life that will not embarrass my wife and my children," Burns said in a recent interview.

With the election two weeks away, Burns wants to convince voters that Walker, 34, lacks the character to represent the 12th Congressional District, Bullock said.

"He's just trying to tear down a person so he can go to Congress," said Walker campaign spokesman Doug Moore. "He attacks Champ on any possible issue at any possible time, whether it's true or not."

Burns began airing television ads this week that divulge Walker's arrests 12 and 14 years ago, without mentioning prosecutors dropped the charges in both cases.

"What Burns is trying to do here is turn Walker into a very flawed candidate, a candidate even Democratic voters in the district would not want to support," said Merle Black, a political science professor at Emory University.

That strategy could backfire if voters decide Burns is misleading or his attacks are too personal, Black said.

It would not be the first upset for Burns.

His primary opponent, Barbara Dooley of Athens, raised three times as much money as Burns, but the professor parlayed strong showings in Augusta and the district's rural counties into a razor-thin win.

Walker won a September runoff with state Rep. Ben Allen, of Augusta.

national, liberal ideology.

Anyone labeled as "too liberal" probably runs the risk of losing in this year's election.

"[Al Gore] ran as an old-style Democrat... Southern whites, being conservative, don't want to hear that," said University of Georgia political scientist Dr. Charles Bullock.

The Democrats response to this Republican tactic has been to reach to keep quiet on typical "liberal" issues.

Swing voters tend to be influenced by issues dealing with the here and now, and the Georgia Democrats seem to know this. Instead of pointing out their stance on issues such as abortion and affirmative action, their strategy is to bring to the forefront issues that cut across party lines, issues such as social security, Medicare, and education reform.

These issues apply to everyone, and the Democrats hope that their stance will be appealing enough, not liberal or moderate enough, to "swing" Georgia's growing number of independent voters their way on November 5, experts say.

despite having been outspent by the millionaire businessman.

This year, no one will outspend Barnes, but there are some issues out there that could cause him trouble. Changing the state flag is one. Education reform is another.

"Damn Barnes!" a man in the crowd shouted at a high school football game in south Georgia recently while Perdue was on a campaign visit.

Passions run high in some parts of Georgia over Barnes successful push last year to all but eliminate the Confederate battle emblem from Georgia's flag.

The most vocal opposition seems to be in rural parts of the state that are trending Republican. Support for the change was centered in the business community, which feared economic boycotts, and among urban liberals.

Eagles lead conference race in 10th week

By Eli Boorstein
Nietsroob17@hotmail.com

With the Southern Conference football season winding down, every game is becoming increasingly important in separating the haves from the have-nots in the race for spots in the 16-team NCAA Tournament field.

After Saturday's four-game SoCon slate, it could become more evident who will be the lucky teams to see postseason play.

In each of the last three seasons, Appalachian State, Furman, and Georgia Southern have been lucky enough to get a berth in the postseason. This year, things could be different with Appalachian State struggling, and a strong Wofford team making strides.

Georgia Southern currently sits atop the SoCon standings with a 5-1 mark in league play, with Furman and Wofford close behind at 4-1. Appalachian State is two games out of first at 3-2, followed by VMI and East Tennessee State at 2-3. Western Carolina (2-4), The Citadel (1-4), and Chattanooga (0-4) close out the league standings.

Last weekend, the Georgia Southern was able to fend off an upset bid from The Citadel, narrowly escaping Charleston with a 28-24 win. The Bulldogs held the lead into the fourth quarter before a Chaz Williams touchdown run with 5:28 left put the Eagles into the lead. The Citadel was victimized by a shaky kicking game, missing an extra point while having two more attempts blocked.

Furman had no trouble on the road, shutting out East Tennessee State 25-0 in Johnson City, Tenn. The Paladins put together 397 yards of offense, led by quarterback Billy Napier's 188 yards passing. The Bucs turned the ball over three times in the loss.

A surprising VMI team reached five wins for the first time in 20 years as they took a non-conference matchup with Liberty 38-14 in Lexington, Va. The Keydets ran for 338 yards on the ground led by 125 yards from T.J. Snelling and 121 from Sean Mizzer. The Flames also had a strong running game as Verondre Barnes put together 202 yards rushing.

Chattanooga remained winless on the season as they fell to Western Carolina 45-28 in Cullowhee, N.C. The Catamounts were led to the victory by a 163-yard rushing performance from Manny DeShauters. The Mocs were unable to capitalize off a strong game from quarterback Ryan McCann, as the UCLA transfer completed 28-of-43 passes for 375 yards.

Wofford amassed 507 yards of total offense as they upset Appalachian State 26-19 in Boone, N.C. Down by seven, the Mountaineers were able to tie the game up on a Jermaine Little touchdown with 2:32 left to play. Just under a minute later, Terrier halfback Gabriel Jackson broke loose for a 61-yard touchdown run to take the lead back.

As for Saturday's action, Western Carolina will kick off the festivities when they travel to battle VMI at 1 p.m. The 4-5 Catamounts, who have won their last ten meetings with the Keydets, are led behind center by Pat Cileto, who has completed 64 percent of his passes this season. VMI, 5-4 overall, will count on the arm of Joey Gibson who leads the SoCon with 14 touchdown passes this year.

No. 14 Appalachian State will try to avoid their third straight loss

Adam Bonner/STAFF

With the season race getting tighter, the Eagles lead in the conference with a SoCon record of 5-1. Furman and Wofford are in second with records of 4-1. Appalachian State has fallen to a distant third with a record of 3-2.

when they travel to face winless Chattanooga at 1:30 p.m. The 5-3 Mountaineers have won 12 of the last 13 against the Mocs, including a 51-14 pasting last season in Boone. Chattanooga quarterback Ryan McCann has been one of the few bright spots for the 0-8 Mocs, as he leads the conference, averaging 220 yards passing per game.

The Citadel will have a tough game ahead of them when they travel to face No. 18 Wofford in Greenville at 1:30 p.m. The 6-2 Terriers were buoyed last week by 145 yards rushing from halfback Jesse McCoy, who missed the previous game due to a concussion. The 2-6 Bulldogs will rely on the arm of quarterback Jeff Klein, who passed for 218 yards in their loss to Georgia Southern last week.

No. 9 Georgia Southern, 6-2 overall, will try to maintain their hold on first place when East Tennessee State comes to Statesboro for a 3 p.m. kickoff. The Eagles are led by quarterback Chaz Williams, who has rushed for at least 100 yards in five straight games and leads the SoCon in rushing. East Tennessee State, 4-5 overall, were able to pull an upset of Georgia Southern at home last season, beating the Eagles 19-16 in Johnson City.

No. 4 Furman, also 6-2 this season, will watch all the action from home, as they are idle this week.

Veiglova named Player of the Week

Ryan Moore/STAFF

Junior Martina Veiglova was honored for the third time this season for her performance in three conference matches last week.

G-A News Service

SPARTANBURG, SC — Georgia Southern outside hitter Martina Veiglova has been named Southern Conference Volleyball Player of the Week for October 28.

Veiglova recorded 58 kills in three matches, averaging 5.80 kills with a .449 hitting percentage.

She also had 29 digs, five service aces and four blocks in the three matches in which Georgia Southern defeated three Southern Conference opponents, The Citadel (3-0) on October 22, Appalachian State (3-0) on October 26 and East Tennessee State (3-1) on October 27.

Georgia Southern currently stands alone at the top of the Southern Conference standings at 13-1.

Veiglova, a 6-1 junior from Bratislava, Slovakia, is averaging 5.31 kills per game and 2.67 digs per contest while hitting .323.

She tallied her 13th double-double of the season as she added ten digs against The Citadel and recorded her 14th double-double as she tallied eleven digs at East Tennessee State.

Other top performers include Roberta Quis from Davidson, Sara Komosinski from Western Carolina, Chrissy Finch from Appalachian State, Tara Greene from College of Charleston, Abby Simon from Furman, and Kim Dayton from UNC Greensboro.

GSU to take on ETSU in Family Weekend finale

By Eli Boorstein
Nietsroob17@hotmail.com

After starting out the season by losing two of their first three games, the doubters felt that the Georgia Southern football team was done with.

The Eagles have since reeled off five straight wins and will try to stay in first place in the conference when they welcome East Tennessee State to town Saturday for a 3 p.m. kickoff.

Ninth-ranked Georgia Southern currently has a half-game lead in the SoCon at 6-2 with a 5-1 league record. Last Saturday, they narrowly escaped an upset bid at The Citadel, beating the Bulldogs 28-24. The Eagles were behind until quarterback Chaz Williams ran a touchdown in from five yards out with 5:28 left to play.

East Tennessee State sits tied for fifth at 4-5 overall and 2-3 in league play. The Bucs were shut-out last week, falling to Furman 25-0 in Greenville, S.C.

The Eagles hold the edge in the series with the Bucs, winning seven of the 12 meetings between the two clubs, including four of five in Statesboro.

Last season in Johnson City, East Tennessee State was able to take advantage of four Eagle turnovers as they upset Georgia Southern 19-16.

The Eagles held a 9-0 lead at halftime, but saw the Bucs put up 19 unanswered points in the third quarter. After narrowing their deficit to three points, a late comeback effort by Georgia Southern came short when a J.R. Revere pass attempt was intercepted with 3:41 left.

As for this season, the Eagles have a new offensive attack, led by Williams and fullback Jermaine Austin.

Williams, who has rushed for over 100 yards five straight games, leads the SoCon in rushing with 14 touchdowns and 104 yards per game. While he has proved his worth on the ground, Williams has also improved his passing game. Last week, the Apopka, Fla., native ran for 109 yards while passing for 149.

Austin, a redshirt freshman, is second in the conference with a 96 yard average. He has broken triple-digits in rushing three times this season.

Defensively, the Eagles could be without All-American Freddy Pesquiera for the third straight game as the linebacker is questionable with a knee injury. Even with Pesquiera missing, the coaches have been able to count on sophomores Derrick Butler and Matt Rio, who have had strong games.

After already breaking the Eagle record for career yards on punt returns, kick returner Anthony Williams will approaching another record against East Tennessee State. The senior needs just 30 more yards to break Dexter Dawson's record for punt return yardage in a season of 366.

East Tennessee State will be led under center by Jatavis Sanders. The senior quarterback completed 16-of-32 passes for 130 yards in the Bucs loss to Furman. In a win over Elon on Oct. 19, Sanders had a career performance completing 17-of-29 passes for 287 yards.

The Bucs offense will also count on Cecil Moore, the SoCon's fourth leading receiver. In last year's victory over the Eagles, Moore totaled 88 yards on four catches while scoring two touchdowns.

Georgia Southern will need to keep the ball away from Bucs defender Montreal Harkley. Harkley has already picked off five passes this year, returning them for a total of 107 yards.

Miami holds off Irish for second in BCS

KRT Campus

Notre Dame moved a lot closer to national title territory.

The Fighting Irish narrowed the gap behind second-place Miami in the Bowl Championship Series standings released Monday, with Oklahoma holding on to the top spot.

The difference between second and third is so tiny that if Notre Dame beats Boston College next weekend, it might be enough to move the Fighting Irish ahead of Miami. The Hurricanes, No. 1 in both the AP media and the coaches' polls, visit weakening Rutgers.

But it's the final BCS standings Dec. 8 that will determine which teams play in the national title game at the Fiesta Bowl in Tempe, Ariz., on Jan. 3.

For now, though, the possibilities are intriguing—the top six teams in the BCS standings are unbeaten, and five can finish the season with perfect records.

"If five teams finish undefeated, the BCS poll still determines who plays in the national championship game," BCS coordinator Michael Tranghese said. "And, yes, there will be controversy. But this is the system."

The BCS formula uses the

"IF FIVE TEAMS FINISH UNDEFEATED, THE BCS POLL STILL DETERMINES WHO PLAYS IN THE NATIONAL CHAMPIONSHIP GAME, AND, YES, THERE WILL BE CONTROVERSY. BUT THIS IS THE SYSTEM."

—BCS COORDINATOR
MICHAEL TRANGHESE

AP media and coaches' polls, computer polls, strength of schedule, won-loss record and a bonus-point system.

Notre Dame, 8-0 after a 34-24 win over Florida State, moved up thanks largely to its rise from No. 6 to No. 4 in the media poll.

Oklahoma (7-0) had 3.33 points—2 for poll average, 1.17 for computer-rank average, 0.56 for strength-of-schedule, zero for losses and a 0.4 deduction for a victory over Texas.

Miami (7-0) had 6.69 points—1 for poll average, 4.33 for computer average, 1.36 for strength of schedule, zero for losses and no bonus-point deduction.

Notre Dame had 6.99 points—5 for poll average, 1.83 for computer average, 0.16 for strength of schedule and no bonus-point deduction.

Georgia was fourth at 8.24, followed by Ohio State (9.49) and Virginia Tech (10.88).

Oklahoma, No. 2 in the AP media and the coaches' poll, probably will reach the title game if they stay unbeaten.

The remaining games for Miami and Notre Dame appear to give the Hurricanes an edge in strength of schedule. After this week, Notre Dame plays weak teams Navy (1-7) and Rutgers (1-7) before its finale against USC (6-2). Miami plays Tennessee (4-3), Pittsburgh (6-2), Syracuse (2-6) and Virginia Tech (8-0).

Chris Horne/STAFF

After a less-than-perfect performance last year at East Tennessee State, the Eagles are hoping to come out on top this Family Weekend to keep their one game lead in the conference. If the Eagles win, they have only one more SoCon match before playoffs begin.

Angels win Series; Giants fear losing members

Associated Press

ANAHEIM, Calif. — Dusty Baker walked out of the visitors' clubhouse at Edison Field carrying his 3 1/2-year-old boy, both father and son uncertain of their baseball futures.

The Giants' 4-1 loss to Anaheim in Game 7 of the World Series on Sunday night could have been Baker's final hurrah in a San Francisco uniform, and for some of his key players, too. And as for his son, Darren, baseball officials probably will discuss whether there should be a minimum age for bat boys because of his near accident at home plate in Game 5.

The Giants were so close to the franchise's first World Series championship in 48 years. On Saturday, San Francisco held a 5-0 lead in the seventh inning before the Angels launched the biggest comeback ever by a team facing elimination.

Now that the season is over, the Giants could be different within days.

Baker, whose contract is up, hoped to hear a lot earlier that the Giants wanted him back.

"I don't know right now," he said after finishing his 10th season as Giants manager. "My gut right now, it's just heavy."

The 53-year-old Baker, who took the Giants to their first World Series since 1989, said early in the playoffs that he did not intend to "break the bank" — meaning the $6 million a year Joe Torre got from the Yankees — "but I want to be near the bank."

Many managerial jobs have already been filled, but there still remain attractive openings with Seattle and the Chicago Cubs.

Baker isn't the only Giant who could be leaving. Second baseman Jeff Kent must decide whether to leave San Francisco as a free agent.

And general manager Brian Sabean will be awaiting a call from owner Peter Magowan to work out a new deal. Magowan is leaving the managerial decision to the GM.

If Baker leaves, it would be the end of an era that began when he arrived in San Francisco before the 1993 season. He led the Giants to 103 wins his first year — but they didn't make the playoffs.

The Giants won the NL West in 1997 and 2000, but didn't win a playoff series until his team knocked off Atlanta and St. Louis to reach the World Series this year.

The likable Baker would be missed for the way he handled personalities in the clubhouse, allowed players' sons to run around the dugout and for his friendly interaction with fans.

"The guy has meant so much to the city, the area, the last 10 years of managing its ballclub," pitching coach Dave Righetti said. "He's done a terrific job. He's brought a lot of spirit. The organization has definitely prospered because of Dusty Baker. If that day comes (when he leaves), which I'm truly honest I don't know, it would be very sad."

Kent, the 2000 NL MVP, could be one of the top free agents on the market after prospering for six years in San Francisco.

Closer Robb Nen, third baseman David Bell, right fielder Reggie Sanders and center fielder Kenny Lofton also could leave via free agency.

"Guys realize what it took to get to this point," Bell said. "We wanted it really bad and we have to make sure we get another chance. A lot of players don't know where they're going to be. I hope the best for everybody."

As long as Bonds is in the Giants' lineup, they'll be a team worth watching.

Bonds led the majors with a .370 average, hit 46 home runs and put to rest any questions about his poor post-season past. The 38-year-old Bonds hit .356 with eight homers, 16 RBIs and 27 walks in the postseason.

But what October showed is that the Giants need more capable hitters behind Bonds to make the opposition pitch to him.

"It's not going to haunt us," Bonds said. "We'll go to spring training and start again."

KRT Campus

After playing six games neck-and-neck, the Giants lost the seventh and gave the World Series crown to the Angels. As a result, several Giants may leave the franchise, including manager Dusty Baker. Barry Bonds denies all rumors of team members leaving.

GSU Faculty Recital Series

Dr. Maureen Simpson jazzes it up in the Carter Recital Hall

By Heather Roberts
 gsuhikk@yahoo.com

The Faculty Recital Series gave yet another spectacular concert last Tuesday, October 22 in Carol A. Carter Recital Hall.

Dr. Maureen Simpson received a warm welcome as she graced the stage and began her first piece "Jauchzett Gott in allen Landen" by Johann Sebastian Bach. Dr. Tom Pearsall accompanied her on piano and Dr. William Schmid played trumpet.

Simpson then performed "El Desdichado (Bolero) (Chanson Espagnole a 2 voix)" by Camille Saint-Saens and "Tarentelle" by Gabriel Faure as duets with Sarah Hancock.

Dr. Linda Cionitti played her clarinet to the tune of "Der Hirt auf dem Felsen, Opus 129" by Franz Schubert. A lengthy piece, it was nonetheless exciting to listen to.

Dr. J. Hansford Joiner (tenor) joined Simpson in singing "Parigi, o caro" from La Traviata by Giuseppe Verdi and "Strange Music" from Song of Norway by Robert Wright and George Forrest.

After a short break, Dr. Mathew Fallin took a seat behind the drum set and Dr. Michael Braz took to the piano.

The audience chuckled and a few clapped as Simpson then sat on a barstool in front of the two and kicked off her shoes for the next part of the performance.

Three jazz songs including "My Foolish Heart" by Victor Young, "If I Love Again" from Hold Your Horses by Ben Oakland, and "Stormy Weather" by Harold Arlen made up the final set of the show.

The audience erupted with cheers.

"She left me speechless," exclaimed Adam Marlowe.

Simpson has taught here at GSU for four years and also teaches at University of South Carolina in Aiken.

She is originally from Aiken, SC. At two years old, she could not speak very well, and her parents were advised to buy her a record player to help the speech impediment.

After two weeks, she could sing all the records her parents had bought and began down the long road to performance.

Simpson studied music at the Academy of Vocal Arts in Philadelphia, PA, Indiana University - the largest music school in the country - and earned her doctorate at the University of South Carolina.

"I pick and choose what I want to perform and then ask my colleagues to see who's available. All of my colleagues are talented - it took no time to come up with the program," said Simpson.

The cast performs a stunt in the movie "Jackass."

'Jackass: The Movie'

KRT Campus

"With stuff you'd never see on T.V.!" promise the ads for "Jackass: The Movie." It's a boast certain to intrigue fans of the former MTV series, in which Johnny Knoxville and his merry band of anarchists ran around performing the sort of suicidal stunts parental warnings were invented for.

On TV, "Jackass" was already oblivious to the boundaries of good taste, or censors, or even simple sanity. As it turns out, the R-rated movie spinoff isn't all that different, other than the occasional curse word and bit of nudity left intact. The premise remains the same: Knoxville and his gang - made up of several talented skateboarders and athletes, an obese but surprisingly limber fellow and a dwarf with the unusual ability to kick himself in the head - run around trying to outdo each other's collection of bruises, concussions, trips to the hospital and brushes with death. The more spectacular their injuries, the harder everyone else convulses with laughter.

Whether you join in depends on how much humor you find in watching the guys take turns giving each other electric shocks to their genital areas; or getting a tattoo aboard a speeding Hummer vehicle as it bounces across hilly terrain; or sticking Matchbox cars into bodily orifices and then going to an unsuspecting doctor for an X-ray; or snorting lines of wasabi up their nose through a straw, then trying - and failing messily - to keep it down.

There is a lot of waste matter on display in "Jackass: The Movie," so much so that even the camera crew occasionally can't help but revisit their lunches. The gang also likes to train their sights on the unsuspecting public, "Candid Camera" style: The preternaturally patient parents of Jackass team member Bam Margera are awakened in the middle of the night by a bucket of fireworks set off in their bedroom, and later come home to find a 15-foot alligator lounging in their kitchen.

The presumably higher budget of "Jackass: The Movie" allows the pranksters to travel to Miami, where they engage in some unorthodox pole vaulting, and even Japan, where they run around the streets dressed as giant panda bears and terrorize the staff at a department store by ripping off their clothes and yelling "Let's party!"

It is not at all sexist to suggest most women will find "Jackass: The Movie" as further evidence they are the more intelligent sex. As much as I laughed throughout the movie, I cannot mount a cogent defense of the film as entertainment, or even performance art, although the movie does leave you marveling at these guys' superhuman capacity to withstand pain (and their even stranger eagerness to suffer it). Compared to these jackasses, Vin Diesel is a big, overpaid wuss.

Timeless Rockers still know how to Roll

By Brittany Shiver
britt_nic@hotmail.com

Around 40,000 fans had something to cheer about Saturday night at Turner Field. Not baseball fans. Rolling Stones fans.

Keith Richards "started up" the night with intro chords from "Brown Sugar", with the rest of the band following his lead, provoking the crowd into fits of dancing and applause.

The always magnetic Mick Jagger strutted up and down the stage, belting out classic hits and charming concertgoers with his patented slick stage movement.

The rest of the 'Stones - drummer Charlie Watts, guitarist Ron Wood, and guitarist Keith Richards - played like excited young rockers with nothing to lose, not seasoned vetrans of rock straining to prove something.

Their songs flowed effortlessly, but not hurriedly, with a set list that included a rock solid "Sympathy for the Devil" and an electrifying "Can't You Hear Me Knockin'."

Among other favorites, the 'Stones hammered out memorable versions of songs like "Honky Tonk Woman" and "Angie."

The tour has the most extensive song repertoire to date, with the 'Stones changing set lists repeatedly depending on venue.

Concertgoers in every row of every section of the stadium could feel the band's insurmountable energy; the show lasted for over two hours and almost every song was fused with powerful guitar riffs and upbeat, rocking tunes.

"It was one of the best concerts I've seen," said GSU junior Mark Harboldt, a long-time concertgoer who attended last weekend's show. "It was pretty awesome," he said.

The stage was less than elaborate - it was void of décor and featured a huge flat screen that mostly displayed close-ups of the band. Instead of props, the 'Stones relied solely on their music and their charisma to fuel the audience.

Jagger continued to perform on the stage as if he owned it, Richards and Wood grinned and plugged away at their guitars, and Watts smiled through every beat of the drum.

The 'Stones bid Georgia farewell with an enthusiastic rendition of "Satisfaction."

And satisfaction is what every audience member got.

Jagger, Richards, Wood, and Watts continue to amaze fans new and old with their rock histories.

Reading Kurt Cobain's 'Journals' offers much pain, little gain

KRT Campus

How would you like to spend several hours with a humorless, enraged, paranoid, contemptuous, suicidal heroin addict?

Well, you can, simply by shelling out $30 for a new collection of Kurt Cobain's whiny diaries and doodles, which hit stores Tuesday.

"I went on a three-week heroin binge after our last European tour," goes a typical missive. "Kicked it in a hotel, three days sleeping, vomiting and the worst gas you'll ever know."

Titled "Journals," this 280-page, oversized and much discussed book reproduces scores of the late Nirvana star's letters, drawings, lyrics and drafts - everything short of his shopping lists.

There are at least two levels on which to feel potentially appalled by this: First, there's the privacy issue in reading the fantasies and thoughts of a deeply disturbed young man. Second, there's the enjoyment issue of sitting so long with a soul we know was irredeemably poisoned by life.

Certainly, there's an undeniable creepiness factor in reading Cobain's musings, which invite a morbid voyeurism. But Cobain did leave some evidence of interest in having his thoughts come to light.

"Look through my things and figure me out," he scrawled on a notebook cover, reproduced near the book's start as a likely justification for publication.

Of course, "Journals" offers our most elaborate, first-hand evidence of the inner life of one of rock's most important figures. But is such elaborate evidence necessary?

There's nothing here that will surprise even the most casual Nirvana fan. Over and over, we have to read about Cobain's well-known physical problems, from his chronic stomach ailments to his drug habit.

"The pain left me immobile, doubled up on the bathroom floor, vomiting water and blood," he writes.

There's endless contempt for the media - especially journalist Lynn Hirschberg, who alleged in Vanity Fair that Courtney Love took heroin while pregnant. "My life's dedication now is to do nothing but slag MTV and Lynn Hirschberg (sic)."

There's a sad letter written by Cobain to his father, with the singer explaining that it wasn't his mother who turned son against dad. "While I was growing up, I had equal contempt for you both," he informs.

Most of these primitively written screeds have the cruel tone and poignant confusion you'd find in the diary of any lonely teenage outcast. It's resonant in that way, but also insufferable and repetitive. If the document has undeniable historical value, it should be displayed at the Rock 'n' Roll Hall of Fame rather than mass-marketed as some perverse keepsake.

Fans looking for more insight would do better to read Michael Azzerad's excellent Nirvana bio "Come As You Are." Better yet, they could listen to the band's music, which has a wit, liveliness and transformative power these depressing little scrawls can't touch.

WEB MAIL

Email is very important in today's world. It is becoming the best way to get information to people. Georgia Southern is joining this trend and will be using the student email system as the official means of contacting students in the very near future.

If you would like to learn how to use the new Georgia Southern student email system, attend one of the many sessions being offered in the Union Theater. These classes are taught by fellow students who are experts in the many features offered by the new email system. The times are listed below:
