Library expansion set to open Sunday morning

By Justin Burris
Staff writer

Students will get to use the new addition to the library on Sunday, when it opens to the public for the first time. The library will not be closed during the change to the new addition, said Assistant Dean of the Library Ann Hamilton.

"We are maintaining our regular hours in the older part of the building," said Hamilton. "We will close at 10 Saturday night, as we always do, but when we reopen at our usual time of noon on Sunday, we will open in the addition."

She said that when the new part of the library opens, the original library will close until the renovations are complete in 2008.

With the move to the new library, a lot of speculation has arisen regarding what exactly is happening to the books, magazines and computers. When the new addition opens, all of the books will have been moved and relocated to their correct places in the addition, ready for student check out.

According to Hamilton, the books will be organized based on how often they are used. Books that students use the most will be located on the second floor of the new addition. These books will be on open shelves and will have a black dot. Magazines that are post 1990 in origin will be located on the third floor, for use in the library.

Hamilton said that items that have seen medium traffic the past few years will be stored in the ARC (automated retrieval collection) system. These items will be marked with a red dot to represent this.

Once a request is put into the ARC, an item can generally be produced in 15 minutes. When the request is entered, the machine retrieves the book and prints out a receipt for it.

Hamilton said books that haven't been checked out for ten or more years will be placed into remote storage. After putting in a request for the book, it can take anywhere between 24 and 48 hours for the book to be available for pick up at the library. The collection of law books and Government documents will still be located in building 805.

The newer addition will be sporting fewer computers, but wireless Internet will be operational the day the library opens.

"There will be about 110 computers, but we still don't have the exact figure because we may be able to squeeze a few more in as we make the final furniture arrangements."

Students will also be able to browse what the library has to offer and they will be able to put in requests for books to be transferred from the ARC or out of remote storage from most any computer on campus. It's a pretty simple process, but it does require knowledge of either your Eagle ID or your Social.

To request a book, go to the library section of the GSU webpage and click your library account. Log in and then do a search for your book. If you see that it's either located in the warehouse or remote storage, you can click on it and then at the top of the page hit the button that says request. Then just select where the item is located, usually either warehouse or ARC, and follow the instructions on how to retrieve your book.

Free HIV testing available Monday

Collaborative effort aimed at helping students know status

By Anthony Fierstos
Copy editor

Although the HIV/AIDS epidemic is one of the most dangerous health developments of the last century, there is something you can do to combat it. Thanks to a collaborative effort between Health Services, the Health Department of Bulloch County and the Multicultural Student Center, there will be free HIV/AIDS testing from 11 a.m. until 2 p.m. on Monday, Oct. 2. The testing will take place in Russell Union room 2080.

One of the scariest aspects of HIV/AIDS is that so many people unknowingly carry the disease. According to the Center for Disease Control (CDC), located in Atlanta, more than 250,000 Americans could be carrying the disease without knowing.

This situation is dangerous for several reasons. First, if the case is not diagnosed, lifesaving medication applications are delayed. Secondly, an unknowing carrier passes on the disease at a much higher rate than diagnosed cases. The purpose of the testing is to diagnose HIV at an earlier stage, when medications are more effective. By the time HIV progresses to AIDS, medications are simply less effective.

Clean sweep this Saturday

Local group to clean Statesboro waterways

Keeping a county clean is a monumental task, but Keep Bulloch Beautiful works hard to keep where we live a nice and clean place to be. Once a year they participate in a state wide event called "Rivers Alive." Volunteers walk along the rivers, streams and coast lines of Georgia, picking up all sorts of trash as they go. A good bit of trash is gathered at this event. Last year across the state, 25 thousand volunteers collected around 684,000 pounds of trash.

According to Brooke Brandenburg of Keep Bulloch Beautiful, Georgia Southern students have played a major part in helping with this event. She said she has been "very impressed with the school's attendance." Sadly, this year GSU's SAGE, Student Alliance for a Green Earth, won't be participating in the clean up, as they have a meeting in Athens attending a clean energy summit.

Library opened with high hopes

Zach S. Henderson Library opened in 1975. At the time, the 135,000-square foot building dwarfed its surroundings and marked a major academic milestone for tiny Georgia Southern College.

"There really wasn't anything around that was even close to it in size," said Charles Bond, who taught in the College of Education in the early '70s when the building project was first announced. "When I think about it now, the campus really ended at the Marvin Pittman Building and there wasn't much else to the campus."

Saturday will mark the end of public use of the monstrous white cement building. School officials will relocate the contents of the current library to a new 100,000-square foot addition next door. When the library re-opens in 2008, few remnants of the old building will be visible, including the whitish-yellow cement exterior that's caught the ire of many architecture hawks.

"I think it was designed to be a landmark, and it certainly was," said Del Presley, the university historian. "It was supposed to reflect the Southern lifestyle, while still projecting a modern image."

Presley said the architect, the late Edward Echols, designed the large wraparound second-floor porch to mirror the porches found on many Southern homes.

"The library's opening was a moment of great joy," said Presley. "People really felt like the building was a sign that the school was moving ahead."

Prior to its opening, the library had been located in tight quarters in see LIBRARY, page 2

Light pollution: Not a dim subject

"Saving the Night" will be presented on Friday at 7 p.m. and 8 p.m. in the GSU Planetarium. The event will demonstrate how light pollution increases crime rates.

By Justin Burris

Staff writer

If you've ever been far away from civilized areas and looked up the sky, you would have seen an amazing sight. The sky is so full of stars that there's more of them than there is black in the sky. If you look up at the skies here, you'll notice that there is only a small handful of stars in the sky. Issues such as light pollution have caused much of the sky to be lost in an ugly haze.

Not only does light pollution affect the sky, it really affects things here on Earth as well.

"Lighting affects everything from humans, animals and even plants," said Becky Lowder.

Friday's presentation is going to display various reasons for imposing strict lighting restrictions and ways that people can help the situation at their own homes.

This presentation, entitled "Saving the Night," is presented by the GSU physics department and will run twice on Sept. 29. The first show will begin at 7 p.m., with the second one starting at 8 p.m.. The presentation was written and narrated by David Levy, with Lowder giving supplementary information throughout the show.

An interesting part of the show is the idea that glare from bright lights actually increases crime. Through these glaringly bright lights, criminals can hide and commit crimes easier than they would in more dimly lit areas. There will be demonstrations of this at the presentation, along with displays of what the night sky would look without the glares.

In addition to the information provided, free star maps will be given out for some of the patrons. After the completion of the presentations, a trip up to the top of the physics building to look through telescopes will follow. Sights such as the surface of the moon, Jupiter and many other interesting things will be seen during this time.

That's what happens when 'Mama' comes to town

By Lyndell Nelson

Staff writer

Multitalented comedienne, actress and singer Vicki Lawrence is scheduled to perform at the PAC Friday at 7:30 p.m.

The routine, "Vicki Lawrence and Mama: A Two-Woman Show," will showcase Lawrence as herself, and as her famous character 'Mama' from the Carol-Burnett Show.

Voted "Most Likely To Succeed" by her high school graduating class, Lawrence earned an Emmy Award and five nominations for her role as 'Mama' on the hit television program "The Carol-Burnett Show."

The show premiered in 1967 and ran for 11 consecutive years. Due to the popularity of her character, Lawrence went on to star in "Mama's Family" after "The Carol-Burnett Show" went off the air.

"She became part of Americana with the Carol-Burnett Show," said Assistant Professor of Broadcasting Mark Mohr. "Her characterization as Mama became one of the favorite characters of the show. She was very witty. She became one of America's sweethearts."

Lawrence was the honorary head of the D.A.R.E. program in Long Beach, CA for two years while her children were still young and in school.

It was around that time that she and her husband became members of the Long Beach Police Officers' Association, which raises money to protect families of slain police officers.

In 1988, Lawrence was also recognized as "Person of the Year" by the Coalition of Labor Union Women. Perhaps one of Lawrence's most notable achievements was her Daytime Emmy nomination for her talk show "Vicki!" The show ran from 1992-1994, making Lawrence the only talk show host since Oprah to earn a nomination in that category.

Lawrence has appeared in many onstage productions including "Hello Dolly" and "Annie Get Your Gun."

"Vicki Lawrence and Mama: A Two Woman Show" will be conducted in two parts," said Carol Thompson, assistant director of the PAC. "In the first part of the show, she will come out as Vicki, singing and telling some jokes."

She will perform her hit "The Night the Lights Went Out in Georgia" among others. Then she will leave the stage and outtakes from 'Mama's Family' will be shown. All of that will take five to ten minutes.

"For the second part of the show, she will enter among the audience as Mama, harassing members as she makes her way to the stage. The entire show will be about 90 minutes without an intermission."

Tickets are on sale now at the PAC for $35. A ten percent discount is offered to GSU students.

Special Photo

Vicki Lawrence will be performing at the PAC this Friday night. Lawrence played 'Mama' on 'Mama's Family,' a popular comedy in the 1970s. She will perform as 'Mama' and will also sing at the show.

HIV

Because the dangers are often life threatening, testing was added to the fall 2006 diversity calendar.

"Our planning committee met in the spring, and because October is AIDS awareness month, we thought it would be a good idea to host these tests," said Consuela Ward Pender, director of the Multicultural Student Center.

The program was an instant success when it was first hosted two years ago. "We had lines and lines of folks, and we hope to recreate that success," said Pender. "Everyone is welcome and encouraged to come."

The HIV tests being used are called Orasure. They include no needles or blood work. While traditional blood testing can take three weeks, the results of Orasure should be ready within one week.

Orasure works by placing a special pad between the lower gum and inner cheek. The pad draws antibodies, which are tested instead of blood. Antibodies show up within three months of exposure to HIV. Chatam County Laboratories will carry out the testing.

Junior nursing major Crystal Stevenson said that the testing process is nothing to worry about. "The process includes pre-test counseling. There are five specially trained HIV counselors here on campus," said Stevenson.

"Pre-counseling includes a couple different parts, the most important of which are identifying risk factors and how to reduce those risks," said La Shanda Johnson, interim assistant director of health education.

The CDC recently issued new guidelines suggesting that health care providers screen every patient between the ages of 13 and 64 for HIV. These changes mean that doctors who fail to at least discuss the significance of testing might face legal ramifications. Previous recommendations suggested testing only for pregnant women.

"Tests are routine nowadays," said Johnson. "We suggest that students get checked at least every six months."

Free HIV and AIDS testing is also available at the health center Monday through Thursday. Walk-ins and appointments are welcomed.

last year and it was a lot of fun."

Keep Bulloch Beautiful is involved in this major undertaking again this year. With an expected attendance of 150 people, they will be meeting on the last Saturday of this month, Sept. 30, at Mill Creek Park. Volunteers are asked to arrive at 9 a.m. and go to the first parking lot on the right to be assigned groups and to receive information on where they are to go to gather trash.

Snacks and supplies for cleaning will be provided. Be prepared to drive to the sites to gather the trash, though there will be as much car pooling as possible.

Once at the sights, volunteers will be gathering trash along with a few other tasks. Through working with the Ogeechee River Keepers, volunteers will also be able to create stencils on sewers that drain out into streams or oceans so people may think twice before dumping their trash there.

Volunteers should wear appropriate clothing for gathering trash and making stencils. This means wearing closed-toe shoes and long pants. It's also a good idea to make sure you bring some bug spray.

Interested in signing up, or maybe just want a free t-shirt?

Students and staff can sign up as either a team or an individual by contacting Brooke Brandenburg at brooke@keepbullochbeautiful.org.

If you sign up as a team, you should include your group name, contact information for the leader and an approximate number of volunteers.

If you'd rather go it alone, you'll be assigned a team when you arrive at the site. The t-shirts are limited so make sure to sign up asap to try and receive one.

If you'd like more information on this event or others, you can visit SAGE at bio.georgiasouthern.edu/bio-home/SAGE/ or Keep Bulloch Beautiful at keepbullochbeautiful.org.

Prior to its opening, the library had been located in tight quarters in the Rosenwald Building.

"The space we had in the old library ... was inadequate," said Bonds. "The new building had an academic atmosphere and as the new library opened and expanded its collection, we really felt like it was an asset."

Bonds said the new library had more books and was maximizing space by introducing more microfiche for research.

"Students probably don't even remember what microfiche is, but it saved a lot of room and provided us with a lot of access to books we didn't have in the old facility," said Bonds.

Much like today's library expansion, the construction of the Zach S. Henderson Library fell on the heels of several large building initiatives.

Presley said at the time, the Family Life Center, Johnson Hall and The Math-Physics Building were all either in construction or had just finished.

"The library was part of a big building initiative," said Presley. "But Georgia Southern didn't build anything in the 10 years that followed. We went from 1978 to 1988 without a single new building."

The Math-Physics Building as well as the library reflect the white brick architectural style of the '70s, but today the look has fallen out of favor. An addition at the math building was completed with a red brick that more resembles modern-day construction.

The new library, when completed, will encompass about 240,000 square feet. Architectural renderings show the white cement portion of the library being bricked to match the new addition.

"I think at the time, they wanted it to be different and stand out," said Presley. "But I think after a while it stood out a little too much."

Teens create popular Web sites and collect comfortable salary

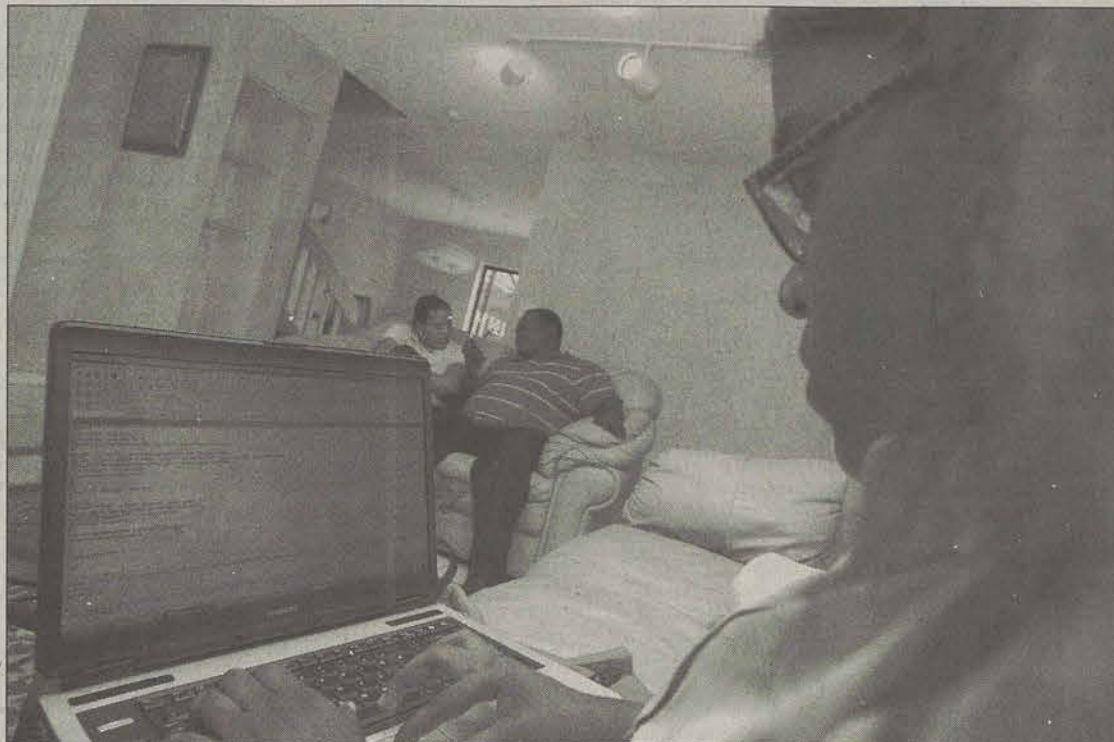

Weina Scott answers about 100 tech support e-mails a day. The Web site must be perfect — one glitch, and 6,000 irate customers will bombard her inbox. But first, she has to study her physics.

At age 17, Weina is the chief executive of her own Web-based podcast hosting company and makes an annual salary of $40,000 for working 20 hours a week. Her office is her laptop in her parent's townhouse near North Miami Beach, Fla.

"This is the American dream," Weina said. "Start the company with zero dollars and end up with a $40,000 salary. I think I'll take that."

Experts said there is a growing number of teenage entrepreneurs like Weina, and most dive into the online business world. But because of their inexperience with promoting themselves, their stories are rarely heard.

Weina is the creator of Switchpod.com, which gives users space to upload audio and video programs as podcasts. She started it last year with the help of friend Jake Fischer, a 16-year-old living in Minnesota. The two met while posting on a message board on the topic of Web site hosting. Switchpod's success caught the attention of Wizzard Software Corp., which deals with speech recognition

CULTURE

For Afghan women, the veil prevails

In a country where most women still don't show their faces in public, the government offer seemed revolutionary: Free market stalls for women to encourage them to start their own businesses.

But there were strings attached. The seven shops proposed were located in a remote section of Bamiyan's bazaar far from customers, and far from anyone who might be offended by independent Afghan women.

"The deputy governor told us we should be in the far corner so that nobody bothers us, so they won't see our faces," said Fatima Hassanzada, 27, the sole female shop owner in this mountainous provincial capital in central Afghanistan.

So much for social engineering. The six other women interested gave their market stalls to male relatives. Hassanzada's cosmetics business survived because she traded her shop for a better location in the bazaar. "If I cared about my face bothering people," she said, "I wouldn't be in business."

Such are the small steps forward for women in post-Taliban Afghanistan.

Five years ago, when the repressive Islamist government was ousted, women celebrated the end of restrictions that banished them from jobs, schools or even walking alone on the street without a male family member. But social change has come neither dramatically nor as easily as some expected.

Afghanistan has a new constitution that guarantees equality for women — a rare declaration in the Islamic world. And nearly 2 million girls have returned to schools and women have returned to the workplace, including to Parliament, where a quarter of the members are women.

But women said the new freedoms are largely superficial that profound cultural restrictions remain. Most women still wear burkas in public, and those who don't must endure stares and hisses on the street.

"We do have rights on paper, but we don't have them in reality," said Fatima Kazimyan, Bamiyan's representative for the Ministry of Women's Affairs.

What quickly became clear after the Taliban's ouster five years ago was that Afghanistan was not going to return to the ways of the 1980s, when the Soviet-backed government diminished Islamic influences, and women discarded their veils.

Afghanistan and the Islamic world have changed a great deal in the last two decades, and conservative forces reacting against secularism have gained power. Though the Taliban governed Afghanistan for only five years, they expressed a sentiment that resonates deeply in this male-dominated society.

What is a veil?

Since ancient times, women have worn head or face coverings for a variety of cultural reasons, but the veil was embraced and spread by the Muslim religion. Not all Muslim women wear veils, and among those who do, the styles vary widely.

The burka (below), in its most conservative form, fully covers the face, with only a mesh screen to see through. This Afghan woman is wearing the burka the Taliban regime requires women to don outdoors. The burka is thought to have originated in the Arabian peninsula and is still there, often in a less conservative form that reveals part of a woman's face.

The nikab (right) veil is often worn by Pakistani Muslims. This woman wears a nikab and a bandana that reads, "God is great."

The hijab (below right) is a scarf or cloth covering the hair, neck or shoulders. It is the most common form of headcovering for Muslim women in the U.S. and Western nations. The version shown here leaves the face open.

Moroccan type of nikab (right) is an enveloping "veil" in the Western sense of the word. It covers everything below the bridge of the woman's nose and upper cheeks and may also cover her forehead.

Hindu women (left) are not Muslim, but many wear veils. Traditional and orthodox Hindu women, such as this one, cover their heads and at least partly obscure their faces in the presence of men who are not relatives. Sometimes veiling is accomplished with a loose end of the woman's sari, and sometimes with a scarf-like "dupatta."

The chador (left) is the full-body cloak, sometimes covering the face, that Muslim women in Iran are expected to wear outdoors. It was forbidden under the reign of Iran's last shah, who was exiled by the 1979 Islamic revolution. Many Iranian women today subvert the official dress code by wearing Western-style clothing under the chador.

Bush coming to Macon

President George Bush is scheduled to visit Macon next month.

The president will be there for a fundraiser for Republican congressional candidate Mac Collins on Oct. 10, according to the Houston County Republican Party. He'll be at a reception at the Centreplex complex on Coliseum Drive, said Judy Goddard, Houston County party chair.

The White House would not confirm the visit Monday, and spokesman Blair Jones said, "We haven't announced the president's schedule that far in the advance," Jones said the president's schedule is typically updated on Fridays.

But invitations, complete with a sheet to fill out so the Secret Service can perform background checks, are circulating. Gov. Sonny Perdue plans to attend the event, said Derrick Dickey, spokesman for Perdue's reelection campaign. Goddard said the president's visit has been discussed for some time.

GEORGIA POLITICS

Taylor chides Purdue

A day after the governor heralded last year's high school graduation rate as the best in state history, his Democratic rival, Lt. Gov. Mark Taylor, chided Sonny Perdue for cutting money from education.

And he stopped just short of questioning the authenticity of Perdue's figures, which were calculated by the state Department of Education and submitted to federal authorities as the state's official rate under the No Child Left Behind Act. The Georgia numbers show a 70.8 percent graduation rate.

"Those numbers don't correlate with independent studies of Georgia's graduation rates," Taylor said Friday, after speaking to the Georgia Association of Economic Developers. "And the fact that we're last in the nation by other independent research institutions in the number of students who graduate in four years shows that we need to stop the cuts to public schools."

Whether the actual graduation rate is closer to 54 percent, as Taylor suggested, or has indeed shifted into the 60s or 70s, "it is not high enough," the lieutenant governor said.

And like Perdue, Taylor picked out education as a key tool to building Georgia's prosperity.

What the state needs to do more of, Taylor said, is to focus resources on small businesses and companies that already are established in Georgia. That's where 80 percent of new jobs come from, he said, making it a waste to spend time exclusively recruiting new industry from out of state.

for any errors in advertisements and its liability for adjustments is limited to the amount of space the error occupied in the ad. Further, the newspaper is not responsible for any damages caused due to an ad's omission from a particular edition and its responsibility solely is to reschedule the ad in the next regular edition at the regular advertising rates.

CLASSIFIED ADS: Free classified ads from students, faculty and staff must be non-commercial in nature and submitted in writing, with the name of the sender, local address, and phone number. No free ads taken via telephone — at this price we don't take dictation. One free ad per person per week. Commercial classified are available only from our online site at www.gsuaads.com. The price of commercial ads is $7 for 200 characters for line ads. Ads must be paid for using a major credit card. For classified display ads, contact gaclass@georgiasouthern.edu

CIRCULATION INFORMATION: Mail subscriptions are not available at this time. However, readers may visit our web site for free access to current and past issues. Visit www.stp.georgiasouthern.edu. It is the goal of the newspaper to have its edition placed on-line within 24 hours of publication. Breaking news will be placed on-line as warranted. The G-A is distributed free of charge on the Georgia Southern University campus through delivery sites located in campus buildings, at off-campus sites, and in residence halls.

NOTE

Readers may pick up one free copy, and a second for a roommate or acquaintance, at distribution sites. Additional copies are 50 cents each and are available at the Williams Center. However, unauthorized removal of additional copies from a distribution site constitutes theft under Georgia law, a misdemeanor offense punishable by a fine and/or jail time. Editors will seek to have any person(s) who removes more than the authorized number of copies from distribution sites prosecuted to the full extent of the law.

NOTE

We gratefully acknowledge the theft of one of our slogans — "Liked by Many, Cussed by Some, Read by them All" — from Robert Williams of the Blackshear Times. Call Bob and he can tell you who he stole it from originally. Credit for the other — "Covering Campus like A Swarm of Gnats" — goes to G-A alum Mike Mills.

WORDS YOU THROW AWAY

The king of all crapshoots

Major League Baseball's post-season play has been around for almost a full century and yet they still can't get it right.

After playing 162 regular season games over almost seven months, a playoff contender must win only eleven of nineteen games to be declared World Series Champions, making it the biggest crapshoot in the history of pro sports.

Will Adams is the sports editor of the George-Anne. He is a journalism major from Dunwoody, Ga.

To some baseball fans, making that last pitch or connecting on the final at-bat to win the game might be a test of all the determination, pride, guts, nerve and courage any human being can muster, but at the end of the day it's arbitrary.

A team wins 110 games in a season, has the best pitching staff, best hitters, etc., but gets upset in a five game Division Series by an 85-win club. What is that? How does that justify who is the better team?

Over the course of the past seven months and hundreds of innings played and it comes down to one pitch or at-bat to decide the world champions of baseball?

Obviously it has to end somewhere and a team must be declared the winner, but when people completely disregard the past 170 games and declare one team better than the other after only a few postseason games, it's pathetic; no, it's insane.

Maybe I'm bitter because I've watched my Atlanta Braves live and die (13 times) in postseason play. The World Series winners in four of the past five seasons have all been wild card teams, which explains the fact that the best club doesn't win. It means that teams who are just beginning to hit their stride in the latter part of the season win.

The World Series rewards teams for being on a roll, not great. See the 2002 Angels, 2003 Marlins and the 2004 Red Sox.

Aside from the fact that division winners are at a significant disadvantage in a five game series over a hot division club, they get no respect for being the best team over the long haul (see Braves 1991-2005). Baseball analysts and other so called 'know-it-alls' put too much value on a World Series win.

How a team performs and plays over 162 games should be valued significantly more than how a team performs in just barely over a dozen postseason games.

So, as we all relish in lazy Saturday afternoons and embrace the hard-hitting action and suspense of college football, remember that the Fall Classic isn't baseball; it's just a plain crapshoot.

Eagles look for first SoCon win

By Will Adams
Sports editor

Georgia Southern (0-1, 1-2) football hits the road again this weekend as they travel to Cullowhee, North Carolina to take on Southern Conference foe 24 ranked Western Carolina (0-1, 2-1).

GSU is coming off a heartbreaking road loss to Chattanooga after the Mocs kicked a last-second field goal by Esteban Lopez to seal the victory. In a game plagued by missed extra points and late penalties, the lone bright spot was the Eagles' air attack with Travis Clark passing for over 200 yards and a touchdown, the highest total for a GSU quarterback since 1998.

"[Clark had a] good performance. I think every game he's getting more confident. I like a lot of things that he did, a couple plays I don't like what he did, but each week I'm seeing less of those types of plays," Head Coach Brian VanGorder said.

"He made a lot of good throws Saturday night, a lot of good decisions. He's a quarterback in development, he's still a sophomore," he said. "I'm encouraged the he will continue to get better and better."

Western Carolina is looking to take advantage of a home game after losing by 35 points to third-ranked Furman on the road last weekend. Despite the loss, the Catamounts remained in the Sports Network Top 25 Poll at number 24.

"[Western Carolina is] another good football team, a football team that's playing with some confidence," said VanGorder. "They have a very good defense. I like what they do on offense, they've got a very good run game and they do a good job throwing the ball. It's going to be a tough football game."

Eagle Head Coach Brian VanGorder talks with the team after Wednesday's practice. The Eagles are 1-2 and will hope to get their first conference win Saturday against Western Carolina.

The Eagles defense played well at times last week with Brandon Jackson and Dedrick Bynum both recording game-changing interceptions, but coach VanGorder believes that the group must continue to work on consistency in order to be successful.

"[The defense was] dominant for 52 plays. They gave up 170 yards in 52 plays, and in three plays gave up 130. It's kind of like a step forward and two steps back because big plays can't be a part of good defense. Until we stop that, we can't be good."

Senior linebacker John Mohring continues to play at a high level and is doing his best to lead some of the younger guys on defense.

"I'm just trying to step up," Mohring said. "Some of the guys look up to me and expect me to make plays out there. I'm just trying to do my best and make as many plays as I can."

Going into a road game against a conference opponent should be tough, but Mohring said that the Eagles defense must step up and "eliminate the big plays and stop the run. If we do those two and the offense scores some points, we should be okay."

The Eagles are currently riding an eleven-game winning streak against the Catamounts, suffering only one loss in the last fifteen meetings, the last of which came in October of 1994 in Cullowhee.

Kickoff is scheduled for 6 p.m. at E.J. Whitmire Stadium.

What's next for the Eagles:

Saturday vs. Western Carolina in Cullowhee, NC at 6 p.m.

NATIONAL NEWS BRIEFS

Owens denies attempting suicide

Ron T. Ennis / Fort Worth Star-Telegram

Terrell Owens made headlines yet again Wednesday morning when it was announced that the controversial wide receiver was hospitalized after ingesting painkillers in an attempt to kill himself.

Owens was out of the hospital a few hours after the news broke. He insisted that the allegations were false, stating in a press conference that it was only an allergic reaction. He denies any allegations that he was depressed.

A Dallas police report stated that Owens' publicist found the athlete unconscious and his pill bottle empty and dialed 911.

Owens is expected to return to the team for Dallas' matchup with Philadelphia

Odell Thurman suspended for season

Bengals linebacker Odell Thurman was suspended for the entirety of the 2006 season on Wednesday following a drunk driving charge. Thurman was arrested at 3 a.m. Monday, mere hours after the Bengals' 28-20 rout of the Pittsburgh Steelers.

Police say Thurman's blood alcohol content was 0.18 according to the Associated Press, more than twice the legal limit of Ohio.

Thurman is the second Georgia alum playing for the Bengals to be out for the season. Linebacker David Pollack is out for the season following a neck injury.

Thurman had 70 solo tackles and 1.5 sacks for the Bengals last season.

Volleyball defeats the Citadel 3-0

GSU News Service

With 10 service aces in the match, the Eagles defeated The Citadel 3-0 (30-17, 30-10, 30-21), capturing their second Southern Conference win of the season and improving to 8-3 on the season.

"It's huge for us to get a win in our last match on the road," said Head Coach Nicole McCray. "We played a well-executed match against a very good Citadel team. We are excited to play at home this weekend for the first time in a month."

Georgia Southern went on a scoring streak early in the first frame, taking nine-of-ten straight points from The Citadel and taking a 13-6 lead. Jennifer Charles had five kills and recorded a block assist with Bailey Coleman as the Eagles took the game 30-17.

In the second game, the scoring streaks continued as the Eagles recorded 10-of-11 straight points to go up 23-8. Gorana Basic and Jennifer Schenk recorded two block assists each as GSU held the Bulldogs to just 10 points, eventually taking the contest 30-10.

The final frame of the three-

Easy instructions for building your own home computer

By Jeff Martin

Assistant Hiatus editor

Building your own computer is a fun and interesting hobby. It is also a great way to learn more about how your computer functions and how to improve on your hardware's performance. There are several important components to a computer of which you need to be aware; the processor, the motherboard, the RAM, the hard drive, the video card, the sound card and the case. Before you even think about what sort of parts you want to buy you should set out a budget. A good budget for the average PC builder is around $1500. Any more than that and it becomes less cost effective to build your own computer and any less than that might leave you settling for cheap parts.

Now you need to ask yourself what you want to use this machine for. Do you want to play a lot of brand new games, record video and do heavy graphics work? Then you need to focus more on your processor, video card and RAM. If you plan on storing a large amount of information then you'll want to focus more on your hard drive space. Finally, if you want a computer that does all of the above then you will probably have to settle for a happy medium.

The first thing that you should purchase is your processor. You won't be able to do anything with it, but it will lock-in the type of motherboard you need to buy. The best two chips on the market are without a doubt the AMD Athlon 64 X2 and the Intel Pentium D 840. These chips are fairly reasonably priced and also fairly powerful.

Next you should buy your motherboard. With your motherboard you want to make sure it is compatible with your processor, has plenty of PCI slots and a good chipset. I recommend an Asus brand board, however, shop around for a good deal.

Finally, you should go buy the rest of your equipment. I would recommend that you shy away from top of the line graphics and sound processing because they become obsolete at a very rapid rate. As for RAM try to get around a gigabyte of DDR RAM and you'll be sitting pretty. Your hard drive can pretty much be whatever you get the best deal on, however, try to get at least 80 gigabytes of memory.

Other important pieces of equipment you need to worry about are a network card, a fan/water cooling system, CD/DVD drives, a monitor, keyboard, mouse and speakers. Once you have all of the hardware then it's time to worry about software. If you want to save money try Linux instead of Windows for an operating system, try Open Office instead of Microsoft Office and try to get mostly freely distributed and open source software.

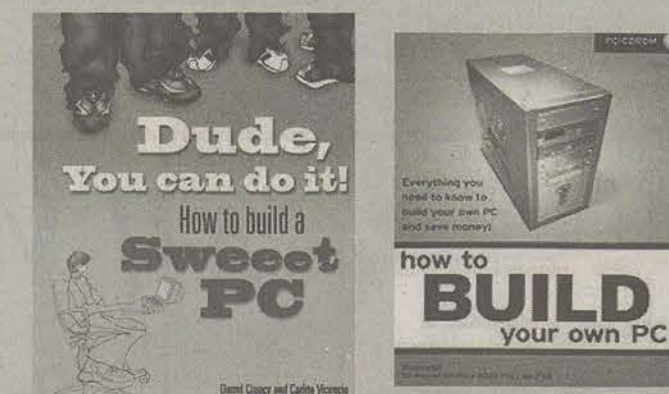

Putting it all together is a fairly simple process which is explained in the manuals which come with your hardware and software, however, there are additional books you can buy and websites you can visit. Good luck and have fun building your own computer.

Step 2: Shop around for the best prices

Step 3: Decide what kind of software you want to use.

Step 4: Put it all together

THE BOTTOM LINE

By NICK ABNEY

Hunger and homelessness

Beginning Mon., Oct. 2 through Thur., Oct. 5, students will get the chance to learn more about being homeless and hungry.

The event starts off Monday with a poverty simulation at 3:30 in the Russell Union Ballroom. Students will be able to walk through several simulations to see just how it is to be homeless. On Tuesday, there is a Hunger Banquet. The cost to get in is $5 or $2 with the donation of three canned goods.

Wednesday will play host to a discussion by Vickie Davis on "A World Without Substandard Housing: Future or Fantasy?" Thursday will see another discussion on "We're Americans! How Can We Be Malnourished?"

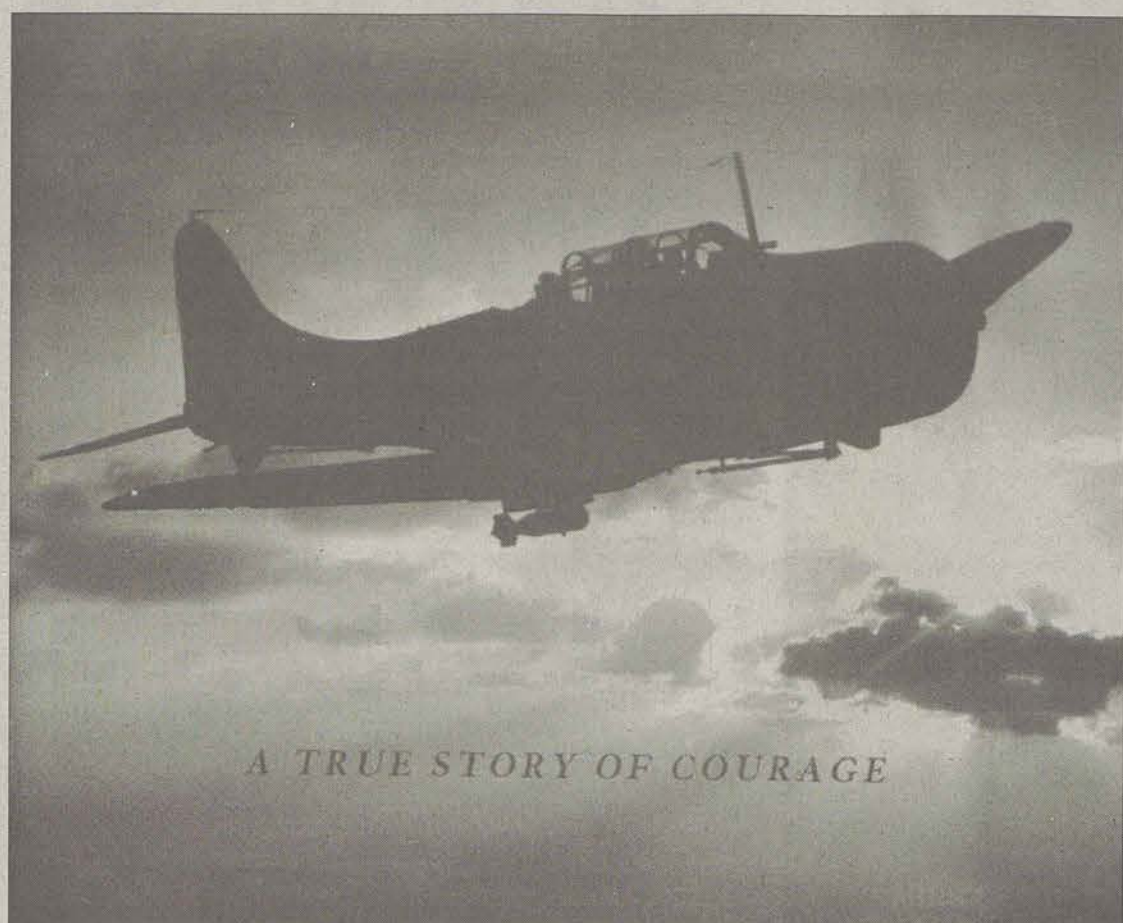

BOTTOM LINE

Students can experience what it is like to be homeless and hungry starting next Monday.

MOVIE REVIEW

‘Flyboys’ takes a dive in theaters, but is OK

Despite lackluster reviews from critics and a poor performance in the box office, if you like action movies, then ‘Flyboys’ may be for you.

Nick Abney

Hiatus editor

It’s been a long time since there was a movie made about World War I, but the wait was worth it for “Flyboys.”

The movie is set in 1920’s America and has an interesting cast. The characters join the Lafayette Escadrille to fight in a new invention known as the airplane.

Blaine Rawlings, played by James Franco, leaves to fight in the Great War after the bank forecloses on his family’s ranch. He soon realizes that war doesn’t just affect soldiers, but also civilians who get caught in the middle.

The movie has great effects, really capturing the horror that was the First World War. The animosity between pilots is displayed by the hate of squadron leader Reed Cassidy, played by Martin Henderson, for the German with the black crows painted on his fuselage. He wants his adversary so badly that, he risks his life after every mission to go back up solo to hunt for more Germans.

“Flyboys” also has a love story wrapped up in it. Rawlings seems to find love after an unfortunate accident during training. Between fighting and living the military life, he finds time to pursue the lady he met after his plane crash, Lucienne.

The movie, which is based on a true story, is pretty historically accurate, representing tensions between races as demonstrated by the black pilot Eugene Skinner (Abdul Salis) and upper class white pilot Briggs Lowry (Tyler Labine). The aircraft of the period are also represented, pitting the French biplanes against the German triplanes.

All in all, the movie is good. It is a bit long at a little over two hours, but it’s worth it for those looking for a good action movie with a little bit of romance thrown in.

FASHION

Men sized up for fall fashion

Ashley Ferguson

Staff Writer

This week we are taking a break from the universe of fall fashion for women and changing the focus to men. What drove designers to reconstruct fall fashions for men are rather interesting: the preppy look (which never really disappears), “post-post-modernism” (claiming “sheen is the new color”) and – hold on to your horses – HBO’s series Deadwood.

All three of these trends are calling for tweed jackets, white-collared shirts, three-piece suits, double-breasted suits and loose-fitting trousers. Some of the oddballs for male fashion are the off-color tuxedo, detachable-collar shirt, the one-button suit and the flannel shirt.

Yet do men really care about fashion? I asked a few guys about fashion and shopping and received some interesting responses.

A man’s first priority when shopping varies with the individual. Some guys will shop based on price or shop for something new and different. Others will shop when they are looking for something in particular, and others will buy something simply to look good.

Most men notice when things go out of style and when they dress within the fashion laws, it is usually for themselves and to impress other people. Some guys will dress based on where they are going and what the occasion is, and others just do not care what other people think.

Not what you expected? I decided to ask some women to think about men’s fashion and the answers were a lot more predictable.

Women think that men focus on style and that they only follow the fashions to fit in, look nice, keep up with icons or impress women. We all knew that last answer was coming. Gentlemen, the majority of women at GSU would like for you to pay attention to your shoes! Also, keep different styles in mind and try to look presentable. I understand that it is hard to look your best when you just woke up ten minutes before class, but try your best.

The ladies on campus would like to see the gentlemen in more collared shirts, less jeans and t-shirts, in a more “grown and sexy” look. They are tired with the white tees and are looking for decent jeans and shirts on you guys. By the way, when you men wear jeans, please make sure they fit. No more jeans hanging down past your butt.

This answered a lot of my questions and hopefully, gave women some help with what guys look for. Thanks to the students that helped out with the survey. Now I know that some guys may be paying attention when I say “happy shopping!”

The Fray plays good music, but it all feels like the same song on repeat.

The Fray’s new album disappoints

Edgar Fernandez

Staff Writer

If you own a radio, or cable TV, you are more than likely to have heard the Fray’s single “Over my Head.” The popularity of this first single has helped the band reach national and international top charts. And why would it not be popular? It is the perfect music to sing in your car. With the release of their debut album, “How To Save A Life,” the Fray have shown the extent of their musical continuum, which is not much at all.

The variations between and within the songs are minimal, from the instruments to the vocal styling of the lead singer. There were times where I would doze off and the song’s divisions would be blurred, making the entire album seemed to be one giant song.

A few of the songs have certain positive qualities. “Little House” is the most energetic song in the album, with good use of guitars and a decent chorus. There are certain moments where it slows down, but it picks up the pace quickly.

“All at once” is quite good too, with good variations, which is seldom seen in other places. One of the better “slow” songs is “Look After You,” which possesses emotion without becoming dull. One of the songs that I truly dislike is the first single, “Over my Head,” which is downright annoying. There is something about the singer’s way he does the chorus that really throws me off. It which distracts me from the music.

The Fray is not a terrible band. They play great music, and the lead singer has a great voice. My only problem is that their songs fail to captivate the audience, especially when you can’t finish a song without yawning. However, people that enjoy this type of music will surely get something from this album. The band shows talent, now they need to move in different directions.

CINEMA ARTS SERIES

Michele stumbles upon an interesting hole while playing in Italy. He soon discovers that there’s more to this pit than meets the eye.

‘I’m Not Scared’ impresses audience

By Justin Burris

Staff Writer

Most of the time dramatic movies are played off badly. This isn’t true with “I’m Not Scared.” This Italian movie was brought to us by the John Humma Cinema Arts Film Series.

Directed by Gabriele Salvatores, this movie doesn’t keep you on the edge of your seat, but it does keep you interested in what’s going to happen next.

The flick began a little late, but I suspected that was due to waiting for more people to arrive at the movie theater.

Without having a good understanding of Italian culture, the children seemed to be a bit odd, as presented by this movie.

They were even slightly disturbing, displaying attributes I would expect to see in adults more so than someone of the age of ten.

However, I can understand why they were presented that way. In a way this movie was about the loss of innocence and a child’s introduction to the adult world, albeit a harsh one.

The main grievance I had with the movie was that they gave away the plot extremely early, causing the movie to feel sluggish at times.

What was nice, though, is that in doing this, they didn’t use a lot of plot crutches that so many writers seem to rely upon.

With a somewhat straightforward plot, the actions the characters took gave the movie depth.

Other than the visuals of the film, I enjoyed the pulling sound track to go with it.

The tunes all seemed to be well placed and they fit the moods of the scenes.

The characters themselves were also quite interesting. Instead of having the standard abusive dad we seem to see in so many movie, he was quite a dynamic character and was exceedingly well written.

The mother too was well done, and had her own layers to peel off.

The main character, however, was one of the most interesting. The actor did an impressive job of pulling off a child who was confronted with the world of adulthood at such an early age.

‘I’m Not Scared’

Synopsis : 9 year old Michele finds an abducted child hidden in a hole while playing, and he suspects his family may be involved.

Going car crazy

Eagle Motorsports revs up Kmart

Nick Abney
Hiatus editor

It may have been hot Saturday, but that didn't stop car aficionados from showing up at 1 p.m. to enjoy a car show.

The Eagle Motorsports club put on their second annual car show in the Kmart parking lot with fun for everyone.

The Buzz 91.9 FM showed up to DJ the event and ask trivia to all the show attendees. Prizes included t-shirts, screwdrivers and various other prizes.

"I really liked all the cars there," said Robyn Cessna, sociology major.

The automobile is a fascination with some people, and Statesboro has its fair share of car nuts. Some of the cars there carried a hefty price tag. Ken Kelley's 1934 Ford Coupe is an example, sporting lots of chrome parts inside and out and a classic hotrod-with-flames paint job.

Cars can also bring families closer. Ethan Brown and his father showed

Ethan could be seen throughout the show polishing his father's car to the point of perfection.

There were plenty more cars for everyone to peruse, including several body styles of Corvettes, a myriad of muscle cars and even some newer cars like a custom Thunderbird.

Every owner has a story about why they love their car, and Jim Holmes was no different. His Galaxie was bought brand new by his father and has been in the family ever since.

Holmes, a retired professor from Georgia Southern, started dating Becky while driving the car. They have been married for 38 years now.

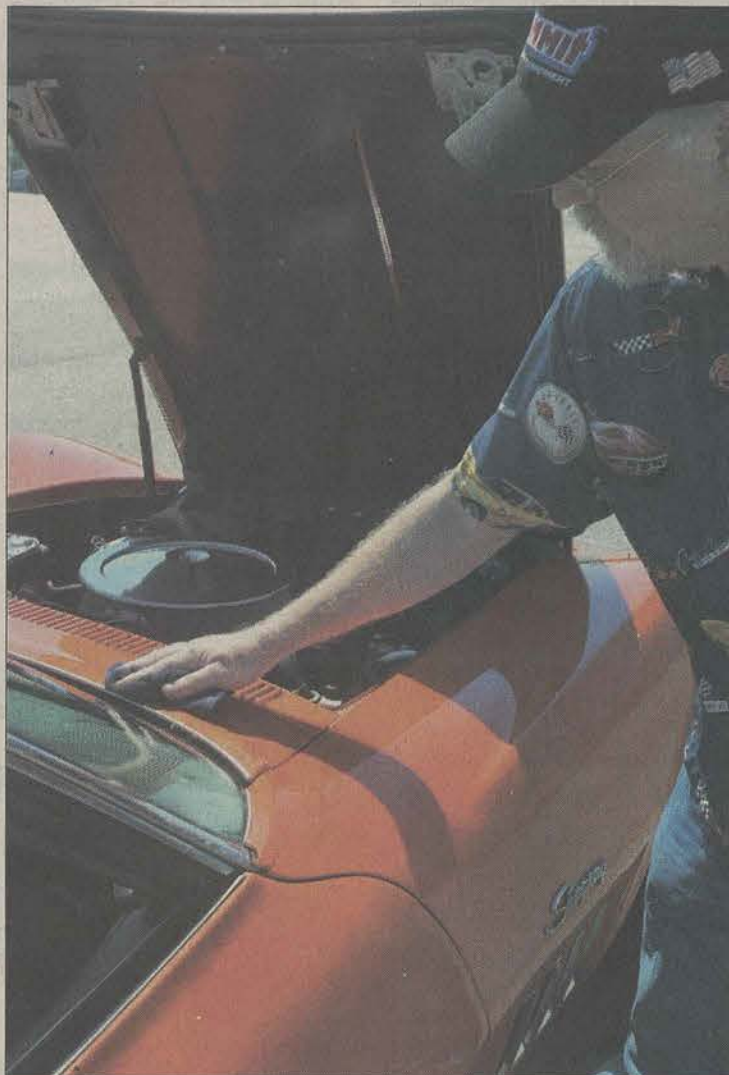

Eagle Motorsports realized it was going to be hot, so they had members going around selling water and food to the scorched crowd. It was a lifesaver in the middle of a blazing day, as people were standing on the black asphalt.

The show was a hit, with many people coming to both look at cars and participate in the show.

Jason Siri/STAFF

Custom hotrods have been an American staple since the inception of the automobile. This example of a 1934 Ford Coupe by Ken Kelley is a perfect example of what the forefathers of the modern car modification industry had to play with. Many hours of blood sweat and tears go into building a car of this caliber, as well as lots of chrome blood, and a big, powerful Chevy 350 cubic inch motor set this car apart. Many spectators showed up to gawk and talk "car speak" at the second annual Eagle Motorsports car show.
