MIDTERM ELECTIONS

Democrats' Day

House of Representatives Minority Leader and soon-to-be Speaker of the House, Nancy Pelosi (D-CA), center, joins hands with fellow Democrats during an election night celebration at a Washington hotel in Washington, D.C., Tuesday.

HOUSE POWER

Democrats had a solid majority (232-203) Wednesday with several seats still undecided.

SENATE POWER

Democrats seemed poised to take control of the Senate (51-49) with upset, but close, wins in Missouri and Virginia.

RUMSFELD RESIGNS

The controversial defense secretary announced he would step down Wednesday. His replacement is Robert Gates.

WOMAN SPEAKER

Nancy Pelosi, who became a lightning rod of controversy during the election, is set to become the first female speaker of the house.

BUSH CHANGES

Political pundits say changes at the Defense Department signal that Bush may be ready to change his stance on Iraq policy.

HIGH TURNOUT

Almost 79 million people voted in Tuesday's election, with Democrats drawing more support than Republicans for the first time in a midterm election since 1990.

Barrow says he's the winner, vote count still close by Adam

John Barrow (D-Savannah) said Wednesday he's the winner of Tuesday's 12th District Congressional race.

He was running against former Georgia Southern professor Max Burns. The race was a rematch. Barrow unseated Burns in 2004.

Political watchers, and Burns, said the race is still too close to call.

Wednesday evening, with 97 percent of the votes being counted, Barrow had 50.4 percent of the vote to Burns 49.6. Barrow

Pelosi wants to be bi-partisan speaker

By M.T. Talev and William Douglas
McClatchy Newspapers

Nancy Pelosi, who's expected to be the next speaker of the U.S. House of Representatives, signaled Wednesday that she intends to steer a centrist course and work across party lines with President Bush to shape policy on Iraq, energy, Social Security and immigration.

Pelosi acknowledged that her party's return to the House majority after a dozen years in exile occurred largely because at least nine fairly conservative "Blue Dog" Democrats won Republican seats. The liberal-tilting House Democratic caucus must accommodate them — and the centrist voters they represent — she conceded.

"Impeachment is off the table," she declared, spiking one dream that many liberal activists cherished. "Democrats are not about getting even . . . This election is about the future, not about the Republicans."

Pelosi's great challenge is to keep her party's liberal and more conservative wings united behind achievements that win the respect of voters in the presidential election year 2008, especially the great centrist bloc that abandoned Republicans across the country Tuesday. If Democrats pursue an excessively partisan agenda over the next two years, President Bush can block them with his veto, and centrist swing voters could be repelled

Democrats likely pick up both Senate, House

By Jill Zuckman
Chicago Tribune

As the extent of the Democratic rout became apparent Wednesday with Republicans likely losing control of the Senate, President Bush promised to work with the new leaders of Congress and Democrats moved quickly to consolidate power and pushed for a new path in Iraq.

"I'm, obviously, disappointed with the outcome of the election, and as the head of the Republican Party, I share a large part of the responsibility," said Bush, who described the results as "a thumpin'."

"I told my party's leaders that it is now our duty to put the elections behind us and work together with the Democrats and Independents on the great issues facing this country."

At the top of that list is the war in Iraq, and Democratic leaders expressed a measure of conciliation towards Bush and the Republicans as they began to lay out their agenda.

"This is something that we must work together with the president," said Rep. Nancy Pelosi (D-Calif.), who is expected to be the next Speaker of the House, replacing Speaker Dennis Hastert (R-Ill.).

Sen. Harry Reid (D-Nev.), who would become the Senate majority leader assuming the Virginia race is finally called for Democrat Jim Webb, said the election confirmed Democrats' call for a change in direction, particularly on Iraq.

"Without getting into the details of what we want to do legislatively, the main point is that we want to do things on a bi-partisan basis," Reid said.

Bush himself acknowledged the need for some sort of change regarding the war when he fired Defense Secretary Donald Rumsfeld.

"I recognize that many Americans voted last night to register their displeasure with the lack of progress being made," Bush said.

"Yet I also believe most Americans, and leaders here in Washington from both political parties, understand we cannot accept defeat."

Band questioned G-A ethics with musical lashing

By Casey Altman
Sr. staff writer

The Eagles' Fight Song was written and performed for the first time by the Georgia Southern College marching band in 1982, the year that Coach Erk Russell resurrected the Eagle football program.

While Russell was preparing the Eagles for their first flight, another man, Jerold Michelson, was preparing the marching band to do what it does best, fill the fans with team spirit.

Professor Matt Fallin has been here from the beginning. He was a freshman in the first GSC marching band and is currently the band's director. He has been involved in the band for the past 24 years. He was only away from GSU while he was in graduate school. He was hired to work with the band again in 1991.

According to Fallin, he spent the summer before he came back to the program working with Daniel Pittman via phone and fax to develop the band's current name and logo.

"By the fall of 1991, the band had a name that reflected the heart and soul of GSU football, 'Southern Pride,'" Fallin said.

After deciding on the band name and logo it was time to give the band a makeover. According to Fallin, former GSU President Nicholas Henry volunteered to help design the new uniforms. The uniforms Southern Pride wears today are modified versions of the same design.

Southern Pride hold CD sales fund raiser

By Robert Greene II
Staff Writer

The Southern Pride Marching Band calls itself on its website "one of the finest marching bands in the Southeast." This weekend, they will travel to Furman with the football team to prove this claim with their signature sound.

But you don't have to travel to experience the music of the Southern Pride marching band. Now you can take a piece of the Southern Pride sound with you wherever you go.

Members of the Southern Boosters are trying to raise money for the band so they can take trips like this weekend's trip to Furman to support the football team. By selling CDs of live band performances, Southern Pride is hoping to be able to support the football team on more road trips.

The CDs are sold before every home game at the tailgating area. Several CDs were given to band members as a memento of their time in the band. The CDs were also used as recruiting tools for prospective band members all over the country.

"We want to be able to expand the band to 210 members, and then 250 members," said Jimmy Durrence, one of the members of Southern Boosters who personally took on the project of raising money for the marching band.

According to Durrence, the band, like all other music and arts programs across the country, have faced serious budget cuts recently.

International Festival kicks off

By Matthew Mannila
Staff writer

The second International Festival is coming to Mill Creek Regional Park from 10 a.m. to 4 p.m. this Saturday.

There will be belly dancers, Irish dancers, Thai dancers, a world music ensemble, a Parade of Nations and Tai Chi martial arts performances. After that, The Legends of West Africa will take the T-Mobile World Stage.

"The festival promotes cross-cultural awareness by engaging the audience in international activities," said coordinator Angie Threatte from Georgia Southern's Center for International Studies.

The festival focuses on traditional dances of several cultures. "It should serve as a wonderful reminder of the cultural lineage of the African American community and its influence upon contemporary music and dance forms," said William A. Amponsah, director of the school of economic development.

Saba Jallow, from the Center for Africana Studies, said one group at the festival is popular worldwide. "The Legends of West Africa is internationally known," said Jallow. "The dances and acrobatic movements that they make are reflective of their cultures and are a celebration of their way of life."

The World Stage is part of a Global Village that will also include an international bazaar, international foods, international sports and games and informational booths representative of fourteen different countries. The booths to be displayed are a collaboration between local middle school and GSU Global Ambassador students.

The festival starts off GSU's International Week, spanning from Nov. 11 through 17, which will include further performances by The Legends of West Africa as well as lectures, a talent show, and more culinary experiences.

The week will culminate in the Russell Union Ballroom from 11:30 a.m. to 1 p.m. on Friday, the entire week will come together with an International Conversational Hour.

Admission to the festival is free to the public. The festival is the result of planning from the Statesboro-Bulloch County Parks and Recreation Department, the Statesboro-Bulloch County Chamber of Commerce, Statesboro Convention and Visitors Bureau, the city of Statesboro, Bulloch County Commissioners, Bulloch County Board of Education and GSU professors and students.

'Legends of West Africa' shared

By Jenny Miller
News editor

For three fun filled days, the Legends of West Africa teaching and performance ensemble will be on the Georgia Southern campus as part of International Week festivities.

Starting Saturday, Nov. 11 through Nov. 13, the troupe will be entertaining the GSU and local community with music, dance and even a little educational fun. The Legends of West Africa includes some of the world's leading practitioners of West African traditional dance and music.

Angie Threatte, administrator for the center for international studies got a chance to see the group perform at the International Festival in South Carolina before asking them to come to GSU. "I was just in awe by them, their entertainment, excitement and energy, I just couldn't take my eyes off of them," she said.

The group will perform as a part of the International Festival that will take place Saturday at Mill Creek Recreational Park on Saturday, Nov. 10. Legends of West Africa have been performing for 50 years and their program is appropriate for all age groups.

"This group represents a part of the world we wanted to highlight, they are great performers and feature great music," said Joan Stalcup, the administrative coordinator at the center for international studies.

On Sunday, Nov. 12, at 3 p.m. the group will perform at the Performing Arts Center on campus. Cost for the program is $5 for all GSU students, faculty, staff and children under 12 years old. It will cost $7 for everyone else. Then Monday, the group will present two school matinees, one at 9:30 a.m. and the other at 11:30 a.m.

Stalcup feels that the Legends of West Africa performance will be beneficial to GSU students.

"It is important for students to be familiar with other cultures to gain a greater perspective, branch out and learn," she said.

During the performance, the troupe will wear traditional West African clothing while playing ancient instruments as well as tell stories of village life back home.

Tickets for the show can be purchased at the PAC. For more information, call 912-486-7999.

GSU students ride 'Miles for Missions'

Campus ministry to take game ball by bike from GSU to Furman

By Ellen Eklund
Staff writer

Student members of the Baptist Collegiate Ministry will carry the game ball on bikes to Furman in Greenville, SC on Nov. 9 and 10 as part of their "Miles for Missions" fundraiser. All money raised will be used as funding for Georgia Southern students to serve as missionaries during spring break and summer 2007.

Miles for Missions is a bike relay from GSU to Furman where students sign up to ride a bike a certain amount of miles for a period of the trip. No one is required to ride the entire way. Everyone is welcome to participate and students who sign up can ride as individuals, but are required to collect $50 in pledges. Another option for students is to form their own groups, where each member rides 25 miles and that group collects $100 in pledges.

Coach Van Gorder will be at the BCM at 9 a.m. on Thursday, Nov. 9 to send off the BCM riders. BCM students will ride through Sweetheart Circle on their way out of town. Students will bike between 100 and 125 miles on Thursday; however, bike riders will be changing out at certain points along the route. On Friday, students will bike the rest of the way to Furman University. The group or individual who raises the most pledges will carry the game ball the last part of the relay on Friday.

"Donations can be made to the BCM Student Missions Fund or can be donated as a pledge toward a particular student," said Donna Blackburn, associate campus minister for the BCM. "We are also taking donations from businesses from $50 to $1000 for the back of the shirt. An advertisement will be put on the back of the shirt for those businesses."

The trip will be led by Todd Deal, professor of chemistry here at GSU. Deal serves as Faculty Advisor to the BCM and as a volunteer campus minister working with the Discipleship Council. Deal is a native of Statesboro and did his undergraduate work in chemistry at GSU and earned a Ph.D. in Chemistry from Ohio State University. He has been a professor here for 15 years, been a member of the Southern Cyclists for five years and has also participated in the Bike Ride Across Georgia tour twice.

"This year the ride will be a relay much like the Olympic torch relay, but instead of a torch, we are carrying the official game ball," said Deal.

Miles for Missions is only one of several fundraisers planned and organized by BCM students to help fund college volunteers as spring break and summer missionaries. Sarah Brannan, BCM missionary last summer, served in Yellowstone National Park from May 25 to Aug. 1. Her work included housekeeping in one of the park's hotels during the day and leading Bible studies in the evening in order to build friendships with other staff members. Brannan also got to experience the hiking and backpacking adventures the park offered to its visitors.

If students are unable to make the ride, there are other ways to participate in Miles for Missions. Volunteers are needed to help with ride support including driving support vehicles, preparing food for the riders and helping with details the days of the ride. If students want to ride, but they cannot leave at the same time as the starting group, they can catch up at a stopping point. Students can choose when they want to ride, either Thursday or Friday, and join the rest of the group.

This is the second Miles for Missions fundraiser conducted by the BCM. In 2004, the BCM biked to Athens for the University of Georgia game against GSU. GSU members of the BCM delivered the game ball at Sanford stadium and received $3,000 in pledges.

The BCM is located on the corner of Harvey Dr. and Chandler Rd. across from Johnson Hall. For more information, call 912-681-2241 or to be a rider, sign up on the Miles for Missions banner in the BCM lobby.

Durrence also said that the Boosters want to work on ways to keep members in the band as long as possible.

The CDs are made by recording live performances during the games, said Professor Mark Fallin of the music department, who is also the associate director of bands at GSU.

"Our purpose is to record from the last two years," said Fallin. The current CD has songs from 2004 to 2005 performances.

If you want to help the band out and also sample some of their music, there will be CDs available at the last home game of the season, next Saturday against Central Arkansas.

The CDs cost $10, and are sold along with Southern Pride caps and other memorabilia.

Rumsfeld departure signals change

McClatchy Tribune

WASHINGTON — Defense Secretary Donald Rumsfeld resigned Wednesday within hours of a stunning Republican setback in nationwide midterm elections, a vote that became a referendum on President Bush's strategy for the war in Iraq and on Rumsfeld's stormy stewardship of the Pentagon.

Bush announced Rumsfeld's departure during a press conference, stating that he had nominated former CIA Director Robert Gates as his next secretary of defense. All three men convened later in the Oval Office of the White House to discuss the changing of the guard.

While Bush explained his decision as a need to put "fresh eyes" on his Iraq policy, it came after voters Tuesday turned over control of the House to Democrats, who had made the military stalemate in Iraq a campaign priority. The Senate may fall to Democratic hands as well, pending the outcome of a close race in Virginia.

Rumsfeld's sudden departure was the clearest signal yet that Bush may soon make a dramatic shift in his Iraq war strategy.

Rumsfeld, the Pentagon chief since Bush took office in January 2001, was viewed as the key architect of the 2003 military invasion of Iraq, and in more recent times the public face of the failures there. His ouster could both embolden the military, with which he was often at odds, and those who have pressed for solutions that Rumsfeld strongly opposed, such as a partitioning of Iraq.

Rumsfeld's primary strategy of having U.S. troops train Iraqi military and police units to take over security in Iraq was viewed by critics as progressing slowly and poorly managed.

Rumsfeld

led Burns by 1,077 votes.

Georgia laws allows for a recount of any election that is within 1 percentage point.

Burns wouldn't concede the race Wednesday, saying he thought there would be a recount. That didn't stop Barrow from moving ahead.

"I think you can stick a fork in this election. It is done," a grinning Barrow told reporters at a mid-day news conference in downtown Savannah.

A Burns spokesman said the declaration was "absolutely inappropriate."

"We have a lot of votes all over the district that haven't been tallied," said John Stone, a spokesman. "It looks very positive for us."

The Burns-Barrow rematch was strikingly similar to another Congressional race just to the west. Rep. Jim Marshall (D-Macon) was being challenged by former Congressman Mac Collins.

With 99 percent of the votes being counted there, the Associated Press had named Marshall the winner.

Similarly, Collins wasn't ready to concede.

With 99 percent of the precincts reporting, Marshall led by only 1,682 votes in middle Georgia's 8th District.

But one of the outstanding precincts was in Bibb County, which has strongly favored Marshall and includes his hometown of Macon, where he was mayor.

"It is unique and has spawned a variety of similar uniform designs by the DeMoulin Uniform Company, said Fallin. "Our uniform has been displayed in their product booths across the country."

In 1998, Southern Pride came under fire from George-Anne sports editor Mike Davis.

According to Student Media Director Bill Neville, Davis said the fight song was not as classic or as inspiring as some other teams' fight songs.

"He offended a large number of students in the band," Neville said.

According to music professor Michael Braz, the column basically put down the fight song.

The band responded to Davis in a way that only a marching band could.

"Rather than marching in the editor's office with pitchforks, we decided to come up with a letter to the editor," he said.

Braz composed the letter and met with several members of the band late one night in a teaching studio in the Foy Fine Arts Building to record the letter to the music of the Fight Song.

According to Neville it is the only musical letter to the editor the George-

Anne has ever received.

"The band works extraordinarily hard," said Braz. "Most people don't realize how much they put into performing."

According to Fallin, the band has become much more consistent in numbers in the past several years. About eight years ago, the band had nearly 200 members and the number has stayed about the same ever since.

He also said that the musicians in general are better.

"They know more before they get here," he said.

According to Fallin the most controversial thing with the band today is the "Hey!" cheer. Fallin said some people think that the song encourages students to curse.

"We have been asked not to play it by some people," he said. However, many people request the song. He said the students will start the cheer even without the band so he has the band play along to tone down the words for the people that it may offend.

"It is the one thing we play that people respond to the most. The purpose of playing the song is to get the team and the fans fired up, not to get people to curse," Fallin said.

Listen out for Southern Pride at Paulson, Nov. 18, when the Eagles take on Central Arkansas.

by Democratic partisanship just as they apparently were by Republicans this year.

Pelosi, a 66-year-old San Francisco liberal who'll be the first female House speaker in history, used her first post-election news conference to quell speculation about how she intends to govern her fractious caucus.

Even as she pledged bipartisanship however, she challenged Bush to "signal an openness to new, fresh ideas," especially on Iraq, by dumping

Pelosi talked about Democrats' agenda. Here are some of their priorities:

- Raising the minimum wage.
- Repealing oil company subsidies.
- Expanding stem cell research.
- Allowing the federal government to negotiate lower prices from pharmaceutical companies for Medicare and Medicaid beneficiaries.
- Reducing college loan rates.
- Tightening lobbying restrictions.
- Adopting the 9-11 commission's anti-terrorism recommendations.

Defense Secretary Donald H. Rumsfeld, a move that, as it turned out, the president announced an hour later.

ELECTION ANALYSIS

Bush must alter approach

McClatchy Newspapers

President Bush faces fateful new choices. With his party's loss of the House, experts said Bush must fundamentally alter the way he approaches Congress for any hope of salvaging his own "aggressive" agenda for the remaining two years of his presidency.

And with criticism of his conduct with the war in Iraq mounting even within his own party, Bush and his embattled secretary of defense, Donald Rumsfeld, are likely to confront searing congressional hearings led by Democrats intent on exerting new oversight and challenging the course

NATIONAL POLITICS

Pelosi to work with Bush

McClatchy Newspapers

Nancy Pelosi, the next speaker of the U.S. House of Representatives, signaled Wednesday that she will try to work with President Bush and steer a centrist course.

One big challenge she must resolve: How will she run her majority? The new House Democratic majority is built on new members elected from centrist and conservative districts.

Pelosi must harness traditional House Democratic liberals and the new more-conservative members that gave the party its majority and drive them in a direction that voters respect.

NATIONAL NEWS

First electronic election glitchy

McClatchy Newspapers

Long lines, balky new voting machines and confusion over proper identification frustrated voters in scattered precincts across the country Tuesday as the nation worked out the kinks of its first largely electronic election.

But election observers said most of the voting problems reflected poor management by state election officials more than politically motivated interference.

CIRCULATION INFORMATION:

Mail subscriptions are not available at this time. However, readers may visit our web site for free access to current and past issues. Visit www.stp.georgiasouthern.edu. It is the goal of the newspaper to have its edition placed on-line within 24 hours of publication. Breaking news will be placed on-line as warranted. The G-A is distributed free of charge on the Georgia Southern University campus through delivery sites located in campus buildings, at off-campus sites, and in residence halls.

NOTICE

Readers may pick up one free copy, and a second for a roommate or acquaintance, at distribution sites. Additional copies are 50 cents each and are available at the Williams Center. However, unauthorized removal of additional copies from a distribution site constitutes theft under Georgia law, a misdemeanor offense punishable by a fine and/or jail time. Editors will seek to have any person(s) who removes more than the authorized number of copies from distribution sites prosecuted to the full extent of the law.

NOTE

We gratefully acknowledge the theft of one of our slogans — "Liked by Many, Cussed by Some, Read by them All" — from Robert Williams of the Blackshear Times. Call Bob and he can tell you who he stole it from originally. Credit for the other — "Covering Campus like A Swarm of Gnats" — goes to G-A alum Mike Mills.

Men look to build on last season's success

By Mike Anthony

Staff writer

After last year's first postseason tournament in 14 years, the Georgia Southern men's basketball team is preparing to begin the 2006-07 season. The team will return three starters from a squad that won 20 games last year.

The most challenging task for Head Coach Jeff Price and his team will be replacing last year's leading scorer and honorable mention All-American, Elton Nesbit, who was the team's unquestioned leader on the court.

Price was hopeful that those returning will be more than able to handle the pressure. At the annual tip-off dinner Tuesday, he said "Dante Gennie, Louis Graham and Dwayne Foreman were all big for us last year and I'm really looking forward to them leading the way for us this time around."

There are several larger players that were added to the lineup during the off-season. Junior college transfers, Ryan Hines (6'8") and Matt Fields (6'7") look to make an immediate impact while freshmen Krzysztof Janiszewski (6'11") and Jared Collins (6'8") figure to press their more seasoned teammates for playing time.

Also returning to the lineup this season is Anthony Marshall. His athleticism and big-play ability was evident during his freshman season two years ago, but he was forced to sit out all of last season after tearing his ACL during the first practice of the year. His return to the team this season should help Foreman, Gennie, and Jimmy Tobias in a very talented GSU backcourt.

Price discussed the team's appreciation for the turnout at Hanner Fieldhouse over the last few years.

"When I first got here," said Price, "GSU ranked 11th in the league in attendance. Now I look up during games like Davidson last year and see over 4,000 people cheering us on. I can't really describe it."

He said the team's success at home is due in part to the increased attendance.

"It's too bad that we can't get any bigger names to come to Hanner, but that just shows how far we've come. We've won 35 of our last 37 home games and teams don't want any part of Hanner Fieldhouse," he said.

The Eagles travel to Durham, N.C. Sunday for their opening game vs. UC-Davis. The game will air on ESPN-U. If the Eagles win that matchup, they will likely square off against the nationally-ranked Duke Blue Devils Monday.

Lady Eagles at full strength

Mike Anthony

Staff writer

The Georgia Southern women's basketball team is ready to hit the ground running this season. This should be quite a change of pace considering all the limping they endured last year. After a season that saw injuries to key starters, 11 surgeries and seven players benched, the Lady Eagles are back at full strength and ready to take flight.

The young team does not have any seniors on the roster, but does not expect to be slowed down by inexperience.

At Tuesday's basketball tip-off dinner, head coach Rusty Cram discussed what the team has been up to through the first few weeks of practice.

"Right now, we're all still trying to mesh. We have a bunch of new faces and we're all trying to get on the same page. Last year was tough in that we figured to make a run. We started off with some big wins, but then ran into a bunch of injuries and could never get back from it," said Cram.

"The good thing about last year though, is that because of the injuries to our starters, we got some of the younger girls some valuable experience. Hopefully that will put them in a better position to step up this season."

The team will be counting on the players returning from last season to provide early leadership. Ashley Melson and Ashley Rivens were two of the few players to make it through last season uninjured. The two guards are vying for starting positions and Cram will be expecting them to set an example of the intensity that he expects from his players.

Junior Tiffany Brown looks to provide her explosive abilities while on the court. The lightning-quick guard constantly came up with big plays during her freshman year, and in the Southern Conference tournament final in 2005, she carried the Lady Eagles to within two points of the NCAA tournament.

GSU fans will likely be seeing double this season as identical twins Elise and Carolyn Whitney will be suiting up this year.

"They'll be two of the smallest ones on the court this season," said Cram of the 5'7" sisters, "but they're going to get after you. They play at a very high level and are fun to watch."

The Lady Eagles kick off their season this Sunday at 5 p.m. as they take on Stetson at Hanner Fieldhouse.

Statesboro band "Achilles' Downfall" will be opening on Saturday, November 11, at Apex for the "Rock in the 'Boro" show. Starting at 8 p.m., the show will feature four bands from Georgia. The members of "Achilles' Downfall" are Drew Smith as lead singer, Jon Moore and Walt Shuman on guitar, Khreston Edenfield on bass and Phillip Clements on drums.

Local bands hit the stage

Apex sponsors Rock in the 'Boro with four local bands

By Katie Glorieux

Reflector editor

Rock and roll is back in Statesboro this Saturday at the Apex. The unofficially named "Rock in the 'Boro" show will feature four bands from around Georgia, opening with "Achilles' Downfall," a progressive rock band from Statesboro.

Following "Achilles' Downfall," the punk band "Save It For Sunday" from Bainbridge will take the stage. Then "Dora Maar" from Hinesville and "The Silent Escape" from Atlanta, both emo bands, will wrap the show up.

Eccentric Energy Entertainment, the promotions group that has organized this concert, wants to continue to bring live rock to the 'Boro.

"We felt like Statesboro would be a great launch pad for local music. We want to exploit that," said Georgia Southern student Jessica Richard, the Eccentric Energy Entertainment advertising representative.

Eccentric Energy Entertainment founder and GSU student Matt Vigliotti, plans to bring more bands to Statesboro from all genres, like Jam bands, Indie, Powerpop, Alternative, Emo and Post-hardcore.

"I love the local music scene. I enjoy being a part of something being created from nothing," Vigliotti said. "My goal is to make Statesboro the southeastern hub for music and give the bands exposure and the opportunities to perform with other bands that have established themselves."

The show starts at 8 p.m., but the doors will open at 7 p.m. There will be a $6 cover. Tickets can be purchased at the door or in advance.

For early tickets, contact Matt Vigliotti or Jessica Richard at <http://www.myspace.com/apexroxxx> or on the Facebook group Statesboro Rock-N-Roll.

Local bands that are interesting in performing in Statesboro should also contact Matt Vigliotti at the address above. Your band could become the next local legend.

GSU hosts Georgia Collegiate Flag Football Championship

By MJ Trahan

Staff Writer

If you're a sports fan, participate in intramurals, or looking for some great games to watch, then stick around this weekend as Georgia Southern hosts the Georgia Collegiate Flag Football Championships (GCFFC) Friday, Nov. 10-Sunday, Nov. 12 at the RAC Multiplex Fields.

Teams and officials from 21 state institutions will be heading to Statesboro on Friday to begin the annual tournament. GSU is extremely fortunate to host a tournament of such magnitude, and hopes to be represented well as 9 GSU flag football teams are entered to participate including defending men's state champs, The Wreck.

"This is an opportunity to see the best teams in the state of Georgia compete against each other. Some may even go on to become the best in the nation. And the teams really appreciate all the support from the people who come and watch," said Matt Rice, co-tournament coordinator and graduate assistant. "It's a great accomplishment to have made it this far!"

Three divisions are being represented in the GCFFC. Men's, Women's and Co-Rec leagues will play for state titles in each division.

Tournament play will begin on Friday night at 7:30 p.m. The 53 teams participating will be split into pools of 3 or 4 and play the teams in their pools. Of the 3-team pools, the top two teams will advance. The top three will advance from the 4-team pools. Saturday night, single elimination play will begin and continue until the championship games on Sunday.

But let's not forget the guys and gals in stripes! The tournament has staffed 36 of the state's best officials from 8 Georgia colleges and universities to officiate this weekend's tournament. It's not all fun and games for them, though. Every official present at the tournament is being evaluated by professionals from different state institutions. The top four will be selected to referee at the National Collegiate Flag Football Tournament in Dallas, Texas in January 2007.

"We've had a lot of success from GSU in the state championships for the past few years. We've had teams from all three divisions go to the National Championships, and we also have 4 All-American officials on our officials' staff," said Kelly Danison, co-tournament coordinator and graduate assistant.

THE BOTTOM LINE

By NICK ABNEY

Earlier every year

It's just the beginning of November and already corporate America is reminding us that Christmas is almost here!

Actually, Christmas is still a month and a half away.

That's really not that close at all. It's closer than January 1, but still a good bit away. Wal-Mart and Kmart are circulating flyers and sales papers already showing what they'll have for their lineups this year.

Sure, preparation is good, but it just seems that every year Christmas shopping and decoration are being pushed back further into the year.

So look forward to Thanksgiving instead of worrying about if you're going to get better presents than your friends.

BOTTOM LINE

Save the Christmas craze for all the day after Thanksgiving sales and worry about the present.

MUSIC REVIEW

New 'My Chemical Romance' album dissolves barriers

'My Chemical Romance' is more than just their music. Much of their presentation is visual as well as musical.

By Edgar Fernandez
Staff Writer

My Chemical Romance released their second album "Three Cheers for Sweet Revenge" in 2004, but it wasn't until a year later that the band gained mainstream notoriety. Many people, myself included attribute this to their music video for their song "Helena." It featured, among many things, the band members in fashionable black suits, red ties and plenty of make-up. It really says something when the fashion and cinematography of a music video comes first with the actual music a distant second.

The band's music is decent, blending classic rock and punk with emo. Their third album, "The Black Parade" is even more ambitious than their former two. For starters, this concept album has a marching band theme. This band could make janitors seem emo. Thankfully, the album uses no actual marching band music, but rather seems to draw inspiration from Queen, glam-rock and the early 20th century.

The album starts with "The End," which does not follow the usual pattern of MCR's songs. This changes quickly with the next couple songs, including "Dead!" and "The Sharpest Lives," which bring the fast-paced sing-along quality back to the album. From there the album takes another turn with their first single "Welcome to the Black Parade," which starts as a ballad and gives singer Gerard a chance to show his vocal range. The piano is soon charged with guitar riffs and a much faster chorus making the song work.

Of course, the least successful songs were mostly slow-paced, acoustic-heavy, filled with silly lyrics and pretty much unoriginal emo songs. The list included "Cancer," which fictionalizes the disease, "Disenchanted" and "I Don't Love You," which were rather bland; of course you just need to look at the titles to realize that.

Despite the band's best efforts, the actual redeeming factor is the originality the band took, especially the boldness to make unconventional songs a big part of the album. Hopefully, as the band's career progresses, they might develop into a transcendental band. After all, they are already showing a higher growth than most of their contemporaries. Overall, the album has enough satisfactory qualities to be a great purchase to anyone, no matter what their musical preferences.

Neverwinter Nights 2 shines brightly

Neverwinter Nights 2 features menacing villains and triumphant heroes.

By Justin Burris
Staff Writer

The King of Shadows, creatures from other dimensions and court politics await you in the world of Neverwinter Nights 2. This successor to the original Neverwinter Nights not only delivers a stronger story, but also holds the player responsible for what takes place in the game world. The things a character does in game has effects that ripple across the game world in ways players might not always anticipate. This concept is executed well, as was to be expected from the creators of Baldur's Gate 2 and Fallout 2, however there are some aspects of this game that cause it to fall short of being amazing.

The game tries to play off as being a race against time to stop an evil threat that has existed for thousands of years. While the characters in the game feel threatened, it plays at too much of a leisurely pace to truly feel like a race against time. That being said, the presentation of the story has been exquisite, with the NPCs having the most interaction with it that I've ever seen in a game.

Your decisions on events will impact how they feel about your character. This is tracked by something called influence, which would be even better if the player could easily view to see how they stand with their party members.

While the story and player involvement in this game is hands down the best I have seen in years, the game really dropped the ball when it comes to the technical side of things. The interface is a little hard to pick up at first with menu icons located in an odd position of the screen. The game is also quite laggy even on powerful machines, with many bugs throughout. Despite this, the Obsidian dev team is working hard to fix these bugs and already have a patch available. In addition to this, they will often post on the technical forums to resolve any problems players might experience.

A big favorite of the first game was the toolset that came with it that would allow players to virtually create their own campaigns and plot lines. This has been included and expanded in the second game and already modders are working hard to expand this already enjoyable experience.

Neverwinter Nights 2 works hard to surpass its predecessor in theme and plot progression and it pulls it off well. This game great for fans of the more story driven role-playing game and will appeal to anyone who enjoyed the first.

Magnolia Springs Park was created as part of the Civilian Conservation Corps state park project in 1932.

Magnolia Springs Park turns 75

By Justin Burris
Staff Writer

It was 1932 when the Civilian Conservation Corps, created by president FDR, began work in Georgia to create state parks and historic sites all across the state.

Now 75 years later the Georgia Department of Natural Resources celebrates their efforts and the parks across Georgia with the Magnolia Springs Heritage Festival.

The festival, held at Magnolia Springs Park, kicks off with a cross-country run at 9 a.m. The run is an annual 5K race, and will last until 10:30 a.m.

The festivities don't really fire off until 11 a.m. when a meal brought by Ms. Seales will be provided at a cost of up to 7 dollars a plate. The plates will consist of meals prepared on a wood burning stove and will last until 2 p.m.

While eating lunch, participants will be able to observe Veterans Day, according to Connie Fitch, of Magnolia Springs, a special ceremony to commemorate this event will be held. This ceremony includes raising the flag followed by an accompaniment of an airplane fly by.

According to the park's webpage, not only will observance be held to the veterans that helped to keep this country safe, but also, at noon, a film will be presented depicting the past of the parks and the involvement that the CCC had in their creation.

The film lasts an hour and will also focus on the future of Magnolia Springs. After the film a tree walk, which will identify various trees indigenous to the area, will be held at 1:30 p.m. and 3:15 p.m. There will also be a bird walk at 2 p.m. and 4 p.m. It is advised that participants bring their own binoculars so they can spot some of the birds along the path.

These nature walks will be accompanied by a civil war reenactment at 2:30 p.m. and 4:30 p.m., which, according to Fitch, will "depict the lives of Captain Vowles and his entourage". Vowles was a captain of a civil war camp, Camp Walton, in 1864.

While these events are going on, free hayrides will be given and throughout the festival. Also old radio shows will be played inside of a 1930's built house. The shows include the famous FDR fireside chats, Drag Net, Little Orphan Annie and various other programs from that era.

The festival wraps up with a musical performance presented by the Renegades from 5 p.m. to 7 p.m., along with a fish fry for dinner. There will also be a guided lantern tour, led by a ranger, to the remains of Fort Lawton, which according to Fitch, "may turn into a ghost hunt." The site states that Fort Lawton is one of the best remaining examples of a civil war earthwork.

Entrance to the event is free, however a $3 charge per vehicle will be required. In addition the first 300 children will receive free popcorn and cotton candy. The main office of the park will be the hub for most of the events. A listing of all events will be provided at the event, however, for more information contact Magnolia Springs at 478-982-1660.

Schedule of Activities

9 a.m. Millen Milers 5K Race

11 a.m. Lunch ($7.00 a plate)

12 p.m. Programs including: a discussion of the history of the Civilian Conservation Corps

For the Kids:

10:30 a.m. Junior Rangers workshop and a fishing rodeo at the Bo Ginn Aquarium

VIDEO GAME REVIEW

The Force is stronger with 'Lego Star Wars II'

By Matt Gibson
Staff writer

Star Wars games are always a big hit, and throwing in Legos makes it even better. Legos Star Wars II plays, sometimes loosely, through the story of the original Star Wars Trilogy. The game starts off with the player taking control of Princess Leia as she tries to send her distress message to Obi Wan Kenobi to warn the rebels of the impending doom from the Empire. Of course, as thrilling as this story may be on the big screen, it's down right hilarious in Lego form. Watching characters pop apart, like C-3PO does whenever he's hit, is more than enough to get a chuckle out of anyone playing.

The graphics in Lego Star Wars II are well done, it's almost like controlling actual Legos on screen. Of course, this is one of the few games where blocky graphics are perfectly ok. The cinematics are similar to the in game graphics, and usually mimic important scenes in the movies, usually with a hilarious twist.

The controls are easy to pick up, and the tasks that the Star Wars characters have to complete aren't that difficult. There are two basic types of characters, blaster characters like Han Solo and light saber characters like Obi Wan. Of the two, the light saber characters are the harder to get used to because after the first couple levels it's easy to get used to the auto targeting that the blaster characters have. After playing for a few minutes, however, and figuring out the moves the light saber characters are way more fun. For example, Obi Wan can use his Jedi mid tricks to wreak all kinds of blocky havoc like confusing Jawas or tossing C-3PO against the wall.

Lego Star Wars II also has tons of extra features. For example, players can mix and match Lego parts and create their own characters. As players progress through the game and finish levels they unlock the level for free play, which allows the player to use their custom character and wreck the stage as they see fit. Lego Star

Put down the blocks and pick up your controller because Legos go electronic again with Lego Star Wars II.

Wars II also has a multiplayer mode if any friends feel like helping take down the Empire.

All in all, Lego Star Wars II is great game, even for someone who doesn't know Boba Fett from Jabba the Hutt. Just being able to repeatedly blow up C-3PO is enough to keep someone playing. After a while it doesn't matter if it's the bad guys or your guys getting blown apart, it's still fun. By combining levels from the original trilogy and the added feature, Lego Star Wars II has hours of replayability.
