Student media advisor Bill Neville retires

By Rachel McDaniel
Executive editor

Bill Neville, student media director at Georgia Southern, retired last week after 22 years of working at The George-Anne.

Neville worked as an editor for the GSU campus newspaper from 1969 to 1970, and he also wrote stories, columns and even drew the paper's editorial cartoons.

Neville was destined to be a journalist from early on. He started working in journalism at the Statesboro High School newspaper. He worked his way to editor in chief of The George-Anne and after graduation from GSU, he worked as the executive editor of the Statesboro Herald for seven years.

Over the years, Neville has helped The George-Anne make the transition from printing editions once a week all the way up to becoming one of only 100 daily collegiate newspapers in the U.S. He also helped launch The George-Anne Daily Web site, www.gadaily.com, last year.

When Neville first started working at the newspaper, all of the pages were designed by cutting and pasting stories and photos. In the late 1990s, he helped install and operate the servers that allowed the newspaper to be designed electronically.

Hundreds of students have worked with Neville during his tenure, and they all learned from his example. Chris Breneman, worked at Student Media from 1997 to 2002. He currently lives in Atlanta and works as a freelance writer.

"It was the most fulfilling working experience I've ever had. He was more than a mentor; a lot of us call him our journalism father," said Breneman.

"You could go to him with any questions, and some of my most fond memories are sitting in his office for hours talking about music, life, politics. I've been gone for five years, but I still talk to him on a regular basis."

Neville worked with many administrators during his years at GSU.

"Bill Neville has retired. I've only worked with him for a short time, but the students who worked under Bill have always done a great job of representing the university," said Dean of Students Georg Lewis. "As an institution, every day our goal is to get better, but there are no anticipated major changes for student media. We are going to keep supporting our students and the student media office."

Jon Middleton, former George-Anne news editor, worked with Neville when the newspaper was published once a week during the 1970s.

"It was great, he was the editor of the paper and he was always involved as a student. Bill was really laid back, and I don't remember ever a harsh word being

Identity thieves cross cyber space security

By Jenny Miller
Staff writer

It might feel like something from a bad dream, but it can easily become a reality. In the last year, over 9.3 million Americans have become the victims of identity theft, a problem that has also quickly become a threat in cyber space.

Many identity theft victims are accosted with scams through E-mail, with the fraudulent claims posed as familiar Web sites or services.

Recently, scammers have posed as officials from Paypal, a business that allows money transfers to be made over the Internet. When Pat Farmer, a local independent consultant, logged on to her Paypal account a month ago, she was prompted to enter personal information via a pop-up window. It asked for her 16-digit credit card number, the three-digit security code and the name as listed on the card. It also asked for her security questions that were used when she locked herself out of the account.

The security question and answer was how the scam artists were able to enter Farmer's account and steal her identity. Within a two-hour period, the password

Lakeside Cafe goes wireless

By Amy McIntyre
Assistant news editor

This past week, Lakeside Café went high-tech with the installation of a wireless network.

The wireless network will allow students to grab lunch from Wrapsody and continue working on assignments without being confined to the IT building or one of the computer labs around town.

"The plan to go wireless in Lakeside is just one step in expanding our wireless infrastructure at Georgia Southern," said Thomas Wilson, assistant director of IT services.

"We began last year in expanding our network by providing wireless connection to buildings like the Russell Union and Brannen Hall among others," said Wilson.

This is good news for all Georgia Southern laptop owners.

Previously, students with portable computers had only limited wireless connection on campus, which meant the benefits of lugging it around all day was limited to taking lecture notes and playing solitaire during class.

Now, students can continue working with access to the Internet from numerous locations around campus like Lakeside.

"It's great that we are able to bring wireless connection to Lakeside and other buildings because students and faculty alike will be able to continue working in more comfortable environments without being crowded into places where there is wireless connection," said Wilson.

"I like to study at different places around campus," said Ferry. "I have studied before at Lakeside, but I was only able to use my laptop in places like the IT building and the Union."

"I will definitely use the wireless connection available at Lakeside," said Ferry.

Anyone, including faculty members, students and visitors, can access the Georgia Southern wireless network for free.

Connecting is not difficult.

A complete set of instructions along with step-by-step pictures of what the computer screen should look like when accessing the network is available at <http://cca.georgiasouthern.edu/wireless.php>.

When asked where they would like to take wireless next, Wilson said the Nessmith-Lane building.

Psychology clinic offers free mental wellness workshops

Special to the G-A

The Psychology Clinic at Georgia Southern University will offer a series of workshops designed to help individuals who live in Bulloch County and the surrounding counties with common concerns in everyday living.

Each workshop addresses a specific topic and will be led by graduate students in the Clinical Psychology master's degree program under the supervision of a licensed counselor.

All workshops will take place in the Paul F. Carroll Building, Room 2272.

The series begins with "Beating the Winter Blues" on Tuesday, Feb. 13, from 5-6:30 p.m.

Topics include learning to recognize when the "blues" become a more serious depression; simple things anyone can do to improve their mood; and excellent self-help tactics and resources will be among the topics presented.

The second workshop, "Stress Mastery," will be held Tuesday, Feb. 27, from 5-6:30 p.m.

Stress is an inevitable and sometimes overwhelming problem for many people in today's world.

This workshop will help participants learn to identify and reduce stressors, and how to manage stressors that are unavoidable.

"Spring Cleaning: a Guide to Organizing Your Life" will be presented Tuesday, March 6, from 5-6:30 p.m.

Getting rid of unwanted items and organizing the things you want to keep is a challenge for many.

This workshop will focus on making the needed decisions and seeking support from friends and family in doing so.

The final workshop will be Tuesday, April 10, from 5-6:30 p.m. It is titled "The Worry Cure" and is based on the self-help book of the same title.

Presenters will review the author's Seven Steps to help reduce worry and to lead a life free of unnecessary anxiety.

While these workshops are free to the public, they are limited to the first 12 participants who call.

Spaces may be reserved by calling the Georgia Southern Psychology Clinic at 912-871-1685.

22 years in review

Bill Neville has been an important part of The George-Anne since his years as editor from 1969 to 1970. He retired last week after more than two decades of leading Student Media publications, including the Reflector, The George-Anne Daily and the Miscellany.

Neville help move the newspaper from printing twice a week to publishing daily and from pasting together the paper to using the technology we have today.

Earlier this month The George Anne Daily won 14 awards at the Georgia Collegiate Press Association, including first place, general excellence.

spoken," said Middleton.

"He was learning a lot about journalism then. My George-Anne experience was a positive thing, and it really helped me assimilate back into society after coming back from Vietnam," said Middleton.

Although Neville's experience at GSU and in the field of journalism will not be easy to replace, student media is still moving forward.

"I'm really proud of the work that the students are doing and we're going to continue to support Student Media in their efforts and endeavors," said dean Lewis.

"We will continue to look for and expect great things from Student Media."

An early picture of Neville shows him at the Bulloch Herald's printing press where The George-Anne was printed and is still printed.

Neville made time to see his students outside of the newsroom, even traveling to Tybee Island to see an editor get married.

Bill Neville holds former editor Kelly Calloway's young daughter Riley.

Bill-isms: quotes from Neville

- * Mr. Bill on journalism: "Journalism is history on the fly."
- * Mr. Bill on Student Media: "Student Media not only lets students get real experience in the field, but it puts the kids that go through it an edge because by the time they've graduated they have clips ready to send to employers and a lot of them will have had experience managing their peers."
- * Mr. Bill on a good news story: "Oh yeah, I only demanded you have some balance. Imagine that!"
- * Mr. Bill, after looking into The Reflector office circa 2001: "Isn't this nice? Here comes deadline and you're just sitting on your thumbs."
- * Mr. Bill on problem solving: "Well, it's time to figure it out, isn't it?"
- * Mr. Bill on getting his long hair cut off: "Why did I cut my hair? Well, most people have a bad hair day. I just decided to have a bad hair decade. Figured it was time for a change."
- * Mr. Bill at a George-Anne meeting less than an hour after the 9/11 terrorist attacks: "People right now have no clue what's going on in the country, let alone on campus. It's your job today to find that out for them. The paper still has to go out tomorrow and I know all of you can do this. Now get to it."
- * Mr. Bill on freedom of the press: "I don't care who it is, no one gets to dictate what the paper publishes. That's just the way things are and sorry if you don't like it."
- * Mr. Bill on a job well done: "Not bad, not bad"
- * Mr. Bill on undue criticism: "Let them hang themselves."
- * Mr. Bill on saying goodbye: "Catch you on the flip side."

Newspaper design during Neville's years as editor in chief was done by cutting and pasting photos and stories.

Library receives donation

GSU News Service

The Friends of Zach S. Henderson Library at Georgia Southern have given $10,000 to the library's endowment.

The annual interest from endowment funds is used to purchase books and subscribe to various electronic resources.

"As the costs of information resources continue to increase faster than the University's budget, we are very grateful for private support," said W. Bede Mitchell, the dean of the Henderson Library.

"This gift will not only benefit Georgia Southern's faculty and students, but also the entire region since all Georgia residents and businesses are welcome to use the Henderson Library."

The Friends organization is dedicated to supporting and strengthening the Henderson Library's services and collections.

According to advisory board chair Laura Wheaton, the money donated to the library endowment was raised through annual membership dues and a variety of special events, such as the December book signing at Statesboro's Gallery 33 West by University historian Del Presley, who wrote "The Southern Century: Georgia Southern University 1906-2006."

Kordia Hardy, president of the fraternity, stated that this year's pageant was truly a remarkable event.

"I'm extremely happy with the attendance at the pageant. So many people came to cheer on and support the contestants, who did an amazing job. Overall, the pageant was great and there will be many more in the future," said Hardy.

Hosts for the evening included Miss Purple Essence 2006, Brenda Bridges and member of the fraternity, Christopher Pugh.

After the competition, Ms. Joi Livingston of Ocilla, GA was crowned Miss Purple Essence 2007.

Livingston also received a $500 scholarship and other gifts. Miss Purple 1st Runner Up was Jaeda Bennett and Miss Gold Second Runner Up was Asiaa Karriem.

Delores Jones of Richardson, Texas, is at risk of outliving her money, but with the help of a financial planner she hopes to change her spending habits, December 22, 2006.

For many retirees, outliving savings is a growing concern

McClatchy Newspapers

Delores Jones is worried her money will run out. "I'm either too old or too fancy," she told Dr. Phil after her divorce in 1983.
But living well isn't Jones' weakness. Living too long is what the former ad copywriter from Wichita Falls, Texas, needs to worry about. She's still going strong at 71, and longevity runs in her family.
"I wanted to be certain that I wouldn't outlive what I have to live on," she said.

If Jones doesn't act quickly, she will outlive her money, said Lynn Lawrance, a certified financial planner at Financial Network Investment Corp. who came up with an action plan for Jones.
Jones' situation is common among retirees and pre-retirees. "There's a tendency for people to grossly underestimate what it'll cost in retirement," Lawrance said.

With people living longer, thanks to medical advances, a person who retires at 65 could very well live an additional 20 or 30 years — the equivalent of a second career.
What's more, with traditional pensions disappearing, the difference between a comfortable retirement and living hand-to-mouth increasingly hangs on a person's individual savings.

U.S., Iran could be starting new 'proxy war'

McClatchy Newspapers

During the Cold War, the United States and the Soviet Union avoided fighting each other directly, with both great powers fearing direct battles could escalate into a nuclear war. Instead, they supported opposing sides in conflicts in Afghanistan, Angola, Korea, Vietnam and other hotspots around the world.
Analysts now say that the U.S. and Iran could be at the start of the same sort of "proxy war" in Iraq, perhaps the first such conflict in the new era of warfare since the end of the Cold War.
The latest verbal shot was fired Sunday when U.S. military officials in Baghdad accused "the highest level" of Iran's government of supplying Iraqi militants with armor-piercing roadside bombs called "explosively formed penetrators," or EFPs, that have been responsible for the deaths of 170 members of the U.S.-led coalition.

When President Bush recently accused Iran of providing weapons and training to militias attacking U.S. troops in Iraq, he said U.S. forces would kill or capture Iranian operatives in Iraq, but would not attack Iran directly.
"We've known for a while that Iran was providing lethal aid to the insurgents, we're just finally pushing back," a senior administration official said last week in an interview. "Iran has to understand that it is not getting a free pass anymore."

In turn, Tehran's ambassador to the United Nations, Javad Zarif, accused the U.S. in a column Thursday in The New York Times of "trying to make Iran its scapegoat and fabricating evidence of Iranian activities in Iraq."
With the ratcheting up of tensions, analysts say the potential for a misstep looms large.
"The worst case is that there's an accidental war," said Robert Malley, Middle East program director for the International Crisis Group, an independent research organization. "Neither side may think it's in their best interest, but they have to hit back to show they're not doing nothing."

Physics team works with world's largest radio scope

GSU News Service

Physics Professor Sarah Higdon and students Josh Davidson and Daniel Richey of Georgia Southern recently returned from a visit to the world-renowned Arecibo Observatory in Puerto Rico, home to the largest radio telescope in the world.

Using the observatory's radio telescope - which features a dish that measures 1,000 feet in diameter - scientists search for dark galaxies, consisting of dark matter and hydrogen gas, and very few stars and other features in space.

"The survey is looking for larger gaseous features known as tidal tails. These are formed when galaxies collide and can be 500,000 light years in length, which is five times longer than the diameter of our own galaxy, the Milky Way."

The Arecibo Observatory is part of the National Astronomy and Ionosphere Center, a research facility operated by Cornell University under a cooperative agreement with the National Science Foundation.

The observatory is considered one of the most important centers for research in radio astronomy, planetary radar and terrestrial astronomy.

According to Higdon, radio telescopes are crucial instruments in the study of the heavens because they can detect things that are invisible to optical telescopes.

A radio telescope is comprised of numerous intricate parts, but the most striking feature of the one at the Arecibo Observatory is its dish. Looking somewhat like a TV satellite receiver on steroids, the dish covers almost 20 acres and is 167 feet deep.

Thanks to the Arecibo Observatory's mammoth radio telescope, the ALFALFA survey expects to locate and study 20,000 galaxies - some of which are a billion light years away from earth.

A single light year, by the way, is six trillion miles.

"Radio observations are often used to see the 'stuff' between the stars, which is called the interstellar medium," Higdon said. "The ALFALFA survey is detecting atomic hydrogen gas in the interstellar medium."

A typical time scale for the emission of a photon from a single hydrogen atom is around 11 million years. That's a long time to wait to see something.

"However, there is such a vast amount of hydrogen in these atomic clouds that we can detect them in a matter of minutes using the Arecibo telescope," she said.

Through their relationship with the ALFALFA survey, which is led by Cornell professors Riccardo Giovanelli and Martha Haynes, the Georgia Southern group was able to work at the Arecibo Observatory for five days in January.

Once there, they helped to put a protective cover on the Arecibo L-band Feed Array (ALFA), a sophisticated seven-receiver system that allows large-scale surveys of the sky to be conducted with unprecedented sensitivity. The cover protects ALFA from the potentially destructive radar waves.

"The ALFALFA survey will take about six years to complete, and this trip was the first step in our students becoming regular participants," Higdon said.

"Few undergraduate students ever get the chance to participate in an astronomical observing run at a world-class facility. This opportunity is usually only available to Ph.D. students." Davidson is a sophomore from Byron, Ga., and Richey is a junior from Claxton, Ga.

In addition to visiting the Arecibo Observatory, these and other GSU students will be trained as remote observers who can control the radio telescope from offices within the university's physics department.

They will analyze the data as part of their research projects and present their findings at a conference in Puerto Rico this fall.

"The direct involvement of undergraduate students in research projects within a legacy survey will enhance their education, and involvement in interesting, exciting research projects encourages students to consider careers in science," Higdon said. "The Arecibo program will extend research opportunities to undergraduates who otherwise not participate."

This is especially important as we see a declining number of domestic students continuing in science.

"Faculty and peer mentoring, which is an important part of this program, is a proven method for facilitating the next generation of astronomers," said Higdon.

Identity

had been changed and there were three transactions on her account that totaled over $2000.

Fortunately, the fraud unit at Paypal saw that these transactions were from a different ISP number and alerted Farmer about them. The ISP's used were in both located in Thailand and Nigeria, a long way from Statesboro.

"I learned that once you get onto a secured website, those companies will not ever ask for personal information," said Farmer.

She called the fraud unit right away and within a week, she had gotten all of the money back that had been stolen from her. Farmer still is not able to accept credit card transactions from her customers because after you are a victim of identity fraud, you have to verify the information through a landline telephone and she only had a cell phone.

She said she understands that it is easy to think that identity fraud can't hit home.

"Until it happens to you, you just don't know about the dangers," she said.

What are the concerns that go along with identity theft? Along with stealing your credit card and social security numbers, identity fraud victims can lose all sorts of personal information. It is also possible for identity thieves to open other accounts in your name and charge items in your name.

Paypal is not the only site to fall victim of identity theft. Most people have received some form of the email that is most popularly known as the "Nigerian money transfer" scam, asking the person to create a bank account and to share a large sum of money.

There are more than 250 variants of the scam and has been around for over 25 years. The technology age has made it easier than ever before to con people out of money. According to the Federal Trade Commission, billions of dollars have been lost on this scam.

There are several things you can do to avoid being a victim of online identity theft.

"No banks or secure sites are going to request information online," said Georgia Southern lead Security Support Specialist Mike Fox.

According to Fox, any emails that you are not expecting, you should not open. Contact whom the email came from and never click on any attachments if you do decide to open the email. If you do open any identity theft tools, make sure they are scanned with Spybot Search and Destroy or some program similar to it. Fox also said that programs like these can help, but are not 100% effective.

"Pay attention to where you go online...and always keep antivirus software up to date," he said.

Lady Eagles lose to Davidson

GSU News Service

The Georgia Southern women's basketball team trailed by just seven points at the half, but Davidson's all-around strong shooting produced a 75-52 victory over the Lady Eagles, Saturday afternoon, at Belk Arena.

Georgia Southern falls to 9-16 overall and 4-10 in Southern Conference play, dropping its second consecutive match.

Davidson improves to 19-6 overall and 10-4 in league play, snapping a two-game skid.

Junior guard Katie Hamilton led all scorers with 18 points, shooting 5-of-19 from the field and a perfect 6-of-6 from the free-throw line. Senior guard Tia Washington followed with 16 points on 4-of-9 shooting and 8-of-8 from the charity stripe.

GSU was paced by freshman guard Carolyn Whitney (Duluth, Ga.) with 14 points.

North Carolina native Tiffany Brown (Waxhaw, N.C.) followed with 10 points and pulled down five rebounds.

In first-half action, GSU jumped out to an early 4-0 lead sparked by Shawnda Atwood's (Pensacola, Fla.) jumper and, after two ties, Whitney's three-pointer gave the Lady Eagles a five-point advantage with 12:12 on the clock.

GSU led a majority of the first half until Hamilton highlighted a 7-0 run with the go-ahead layup, giving the Wildcats a 23-21 advantage with 5:16 remaining in the first half.

Davidson's Julia Paquette hit the last bucket of the half with 1:40 on the clock, and Davidson led 32-25 going into the locker room.

Hamilton led all scorers in the first half with 11 points, while Brown netted eight points, including two three-pointers.

"We played well the first half," said 11th-year GSU head coach Rusty Cram. "I think the frustration started setting in when we went seven or eight minutes without scoring a bucket in the second half. I think the first four or five minutes we got in within five or six points. And at that point, it was like a lid went on the basket, we couldn't hit the broad side of a barn, couldn't hit a free throw, it didn't matter. And they went on a big run at that point and opened the game up."

Trailing by just four points three minutes into the second half, 36-32, Davidson pulled away with a 22-4 scoring run over a span of 8:22, and with 8:50 remaining, the Lady Eagles trailed 58-36.

Davidson hit 17-of-21 (.810) attempts from the free-throw, and although GSU went a comparable 18 times to the line, struggled by making just eight.

"When you shoot 44 percent from the line, that just tells you how you're night's gone," said Cram. "We got there, it's one of the few games that we've gotten there, but we just couldn't take advantage of it. Things just started going their way once they got momentum going midway through the second half."

GSU's performance in the rebounds category gave the Lady Eagles several opportunities to keep the game close. GSU led the Wildcats 15-11 in second-chance points, thanks to a 41-39 rebounds advantage.

Junior forward Chequilla Jessie (Sanford, Fla.) led the team with a game-high tying nine rebounds.

Atwood pulled in another seven boards toward the team total.

"They (rebounds) kept us in the ballgame," added Cram. "I think it got us to the free-throw line because we were rebounding. Had we not been doing that, it could have gotten out of hand quicker. I'm just disappointed in the way things turned out because it was a better effort going into that game. They were ready. I thought they played hard. My biggest frustration right now is the post game. I thought they came out and started trapping the ball on the wings, making our guards play harder, not giving them the free look, and we had nothing to go to, we just couldn't score inside. And until we get that post game scoring, we're going to continue to struggle."

Davidson held a 32-12 advantage over the Lady Eagles in points in the paint, thanks in large part to Wildcat Jessica Robinson, who opened up the second half with three consecutive buckets, part of her 10-point performance. Check out Wednesday's sports section for updates and scores from Monday's action.

Track and field earns two titles at Carolina Classic

GSU News Service

Georgia Southern's track and field team returns home with two titles, numerous season high marks and three career bests after a competitive weekend at the Carolina Classic. Freshman Demetris Anthony had an outstanding weekend, claiming the title in the Triple Jump with a season-high distance of 38'09.75".

Her mark puts her fourth on GSU's all-time list. Seniors Brittany Chase and Lauren Jacobs finished third and fourth (38'01.25" and 37'10.75", respectively) in the event.

Chase also had a note-worthy performance in the 60m Hurdles, finishing third overall with a time of 8.75. Senior Nicole Brown had two individual top three finishes for the day with her best performance coming in the Long Jump. Brown's distance of 19'02.75" put her at second place and is 1'02" better than her previous season high (38'07.5"). In the 60m, Brown obtained her best finish of the season (third) clocking in at 7.63. Anthony took fifth in the event while achieving a personal-best and taking over fourth place on GSU's indoor honor roll with her finish of 7.69.

Senior Emily Greeson's 53'02.75" mark in the Weight Throw gave her a second place finish and a new career-high. In addition to that event, Greeson set a second personal-best in the Shot Put (43'02.25").

Adding to the relay title, Arnold also obtained a runner-up finish in the 400m (57.80) and took third with a time of 25.70 in the 200m.

"The big thing about this weekend was that both ends of the team were pulling their weight, the seniors and the freshmen," said head coach Natalie Smith. "It's really exciting going into [the indoor conference championships] with everyone giving their personal best. They are really starting to gel as a team and the timing is perfect. This indoor meet could really set the stage for the outdoor season and lead to a conference title."
