Georgia Southern Environmental Activism in 1970s

Editor's note: GSU celebrated its 100th anniversary in December. Each Thursday The George-Anne Daily highlights something from our past.

By Casey Altman
Features editor

In the 1970s the planet was hurting. Her rivers caught fire and entire cities were hidden under clouds of smoke. It was a time when people didn't think twice before throwing bags of trash out car windows. It was also time for a movement that aimed to clean up the world to begin.

In 1970 the Environmental Protection Agency was born, according to epa.gov. This was the same year the Clean Air Act was passed. Two years later the Clean Water Act was passed. Some people were ready to clean up their acts.

Environmental concern resonated through the nation and through the pages of the George-Anne. Staff writers like Howard Thrower wrote about their own concerns relating to pollution. Thrower was The George-Anne's first environmental columnist. He began writing his column in November of 1970. Some of the headlines were "Man! Get wise - pollution is killing" and "Can the Cans."

His columns asked students to pay attention to what litter and other pollution was doing to the environment. In his column "How long?" Thrower asked students to consider the problem of waste disposal in Statesboro. He said, "Sit down and listen! Our population is increasing more rapidly than new discoveries and inventions can save us."

On April 22, 1970, the first Earth Day was celebrated by more than 20 million people across the nation, according to epa.gov. The Student Alliance for a Green Earth was founded at Georgia Southern in 2000. The first president was Brooke Brandenburg, who is now the director of Keep Bulloch Beautiful. SAGE won the "Student Organization of the Year Award" that same year.

For the first Earth Day celebration at GSU, SAGE gathered bags full of recyclable material they found in trashcans, according to the SAGE Webpage at georgiasouthern.edu.

SAGE members rummaged through campus garbage cans for several days prior to Earth Day to remove all of the aluminum and plastic beverage containers. They stacked the bags into a mound outside the Russell Union. They called the mound the Recyclable Mountain.

Event encourages creative recycling

Work with some of Statesboro's best artists and common recyclable materials to make a unique piece of art.

The event will take place today at the Russell Union Rotunda from 10 a.m. until 2 p.m. as part of Georgia Southern's Earth Day celebrations.

Local artists Tom Amettis and Donny Humes will be present to help students as they sculpt their reused materials into one-of-a-kind art pieces.

Bryan Petersen, who teaches in GSU's art department, will be making flower pins from tin cans and art from bottle caps, while the local artists will be working on two-dimensional pieces and sculptures.

Scholar Under Siege makes its debut Friday

By Amy McIntyre
Assistant news editor

'A Scholar Under Siege,' an opera composed by Georgia Southern music professor, Dr. Michael Braz, makes its world debut Friday evening in the Performing Arts Center. The opera brings to the stage events that occurred in the late 1930s centered on Georgia Southern.

"About three years ago, GSU was looking for a way to mark the school's centennial, and I had this idea. It went through several committees, as well as President Grube, for approval, and everyone was very excited about the idea of bringing Dr. Marvin Pittman's story to the stage," said Braz.

According to Braz, Marvin Pittman, who was then president of what was then South Georgia Teachers College, was removed from the school by Georgia governor Eugene Talmadge for his support of improving interracial relations. Braz described Talmadge as being of the traditional southern stock who was a strong supporter of segregation.

Braz said he worked for three years on the opera and put the play in the hands of Sarah Hancock, a GSU music instructor, who has produced and directed the opera. Braz said he is very satisfied with the level of commitment the students and faculty have put into bringing the grand-scale opera to life.

"I am very excited about the opportunity to be involved in the opera," said Hancock. "Most of the time, you perform pieces that were written a long time ago, and you rely on previous performances of the piece to draw from. We are doing this all firsthand, and it has been challenging, but we also have Dr. Braz there to turn to and say, 'Hey, how did you want this done?'"

Hancock said that Dr. Pittman was a very honorable man, but she said that stand out character of the play is definitely Gov. Talmadge.

"He was just an extremely colorful character. The opera is all very true to life, and to Earth Day will be celebrated by the Student Alliance for a Green Earth with a number of activities at the Russell Union Rotunda today.

The festivities will take place from 10 a.m. to 2 p.m.

"We'll have a lot of neat things out there, as well as a lot of environmental organizations like the Sierra Club and some local animals from the Raptor Center," said SAGE president William Russell.

Ever wonder what you could do to help the environment? "This year's Earth Day will focus a great deal on education and tips on greener living, especially for students," said Russell.

"Earth Day on April 22 is all about treading lightly on the planet, from conserving energy and resources to buying foods that are produced and harvested in an ecologically responsible way," said Kathie Smith on toledoblade.com.

SAGE thought it would be better to hold Earth Day events on Thursday so more people could participate.

The first Earth Day started back in 1970. Twenty million people took part in the first Earth Day, according to the Environmental Protection Agency.

"It was on that day that Americans made it clear that they understood and were deeply concerned over the deterioration of our environment and the mindless dissipation of our resources," said U.S. Senator Gaylord Nelson, founder of Earth Day, in the EPA Journal.

The first Earth Day has led to the creation of the passage of the Clean Air, Clean Water, and Endangered Species Act as well as the EPA.

There will be several events going on during the celebration.

"We're going to have a guy bring out his modified Mercedes-Benz that runs completely off of vegetable oil. He made all of the modifications himself," said Russell.

According to PlanetPals, people at home use more than one-third of all energy.

To find out what your ecological footprint is you can visit www.earthday.net/footprint.

Earth Day is Sunday, but GSU is celebrating the day with lots of events today!

Make a difference for the Earth

Compiled by staff

With Earth Day coming up Sunday, April 22, it is important to remember what people can do to help make sure the world stays clean, vibrant and healthy.

Even though it is very important to collect recycling and drop it off at designated centers, there is more to it than that.

By recycling, it promotes a more conservation and environmentally aware world.

Last Saturday, April 14, was The Great American Clean-Up, which is sponsored in Bulloch County by the local organization Keep Bulloch Beautiful.

The event has people from the community, permanent or otherwise, pick up trash at designated areas throughout the county. It is also sponsored by area merchants.

Keep Bulloch Beautiful was founded in 2000 and is made up of four committees: litter, recycling, beautification and education.

A key part of the group's vitality is the support that they receive through volunteers and community members.

For more information about Keep Bulloch Beautiful or to find out how you can help throughout the community, go to www.keep-bullochbeautiful.org.

WVGS launches alumni Web site

GSU News Service

Georgia Southern's campus radio station, WVGS 91.9, has launched the WVGS Alumni Portal at www.wvgsalumni.com for alumni who have worked at the station to stay in touch and find out what the station is doing currently.

"The site helps build alumni support, but more importantly, it's a great way to keep in touch with friends from the station who have graduated and moved away," said Miguel Fuller, station manager.

The site was created because current student broadcasters of the station wanted a way to stay in touch after graduation.

It is open to any alumnus that has donated time to WVGS since its beginning in 1974.

"I am impressed with the number of alumni that have already signed up," said site creator Andrew Hodges.

Members of the Alumni Portal can share experiences from WVGS by contacting members, sending messages, posting and viewing pictures of the station over the years, and submitting news.

For more information on WVGS or the Alumni Portal, contact Jake Crawley at mcrawley1@georgiasouthern.edu.

College campuses see rise in mental health issues

By Kendal Duresky

Staff writer

Colleges all over the United States have been seeing a rise in students with mental health issues.

The most frequently diagnosed mental illness in college aged patients is anxiety. Anxiety disorders refer to a spectrum of illnesses characterized by worry and fear, which includes obsessive-compulsive disorder (OCD), panic disorder, posttraumatic stress disorders, as well as phobias.

According to anxiety-connection.com, heading off to college and the separation from a student's family can present difficulties and this is the time of life when mental health problems tend to emerge.

"Everyone has anxiety, just some people deal with it better than others," said staff counselor Keith Arnett, "In today's society there is so much more to be anxious about and it has become a real issue, we aren't as resilient as we once were."

The first step to diagnosing anxiety is to go to the counseling center and have an evaluation to determine the level of anxiety.

From there it is suggested to work with a professional therapist and come up with a treatment plan.

Treatment plans can consist of therapy, utilizing the resources on campus, for example, the academic success center or the RAC and workshops. Medication is sometimes prescribed for anxiety; however, it is not the first form of treatment.

Georgia Southern offers many on-campus outreach programs for students who are suffering from anxiety.

"I get anxious about school and relationships," said GSU alumus Jamie Meyer, "Every now and then my anxiety gets extreme and I needed a way to fix it."

Meyer attends anxiety workshops that help her deal with stress and improve her behavioral skills.

The workshops are open to everyone, free of charge, and highly recommended. For more information on anxiety or mental health issue contact the counseling center at 912-681-5541.

Tips for coping with stress

- Listen to music
- Take deep breaths
- Spend time with family and friends
- Get at least eight hours of sleep
- Try to exercise at least three times a week

Virginia Tech gunman sends chilling video to MSNBC

By Lisa Anderson
McClatchy Newspapers

Days before he massacred 32 people at Virginia Tech and took his own life, Cho Seung Hui concocted a vicious and meticulous multimedia plan for how he hoped to be remembered.

He got his wish Wednesday night.

Chillingly, according to a U.S. Postal Service time stamp, Cho mailed a package of documents and images to NBC News in New York during a two-hour break in his shooting spree Monday morning.

NBC News Wednesday evening released some of the 27 videos and 43 photographs that accompanied an 1,800-word screed of hate and resentment that "NBC Nightly News" anchor Brian Williams described as a "multimedia manifesto" from a "uniquely sick mind."

While the material doesn't contain any images from Monday's shootings, Williams said much of it is too graphic to be shown on television. In addition, a more detailed picture emerged Wednesday of Cho's mental health record and run-ins with campus police and teachers, indications that there were many signs that he was headed for trouble.

Documents uncovered by ABC News showed that in December 2005, a Virginia magistrate had deemed Cho mentally ill, in need of hospitalization and "an imminent danger" to himself and others.

After NBC employees opened the posted package from Cho on Wednesday morning, the network swiftly turned over the original material to FBI agents in New York, said NBC News president Steve Capus in an interview given to MSNBC.com. He characterized the material, which NBC made copies of for itself, as "disturbing, very angry, profanity-laced."

Much of the material contains rants against Christianity, the rich and the hedonistic lifestyle of his fellow students, mocking their interest in things like "golden necklaces" and vodka.

Apparently made over six days before the massacre, according to electronic time stamps, the videos show Cho with vacant, glassy eyes and no affect to his soft voice.

At another point, he observes, "You had 100 billion chances and ways to have avoided today, but you decided to spill my blood. You forced me into a corner and gave me only one option. The decision was yours. Now, you have blood on your hands that will never wash off."

Students can now help reduce waste by dropping off their old tennis shoes at recycling bins available around campus.

Recycle your gym shoes at the RAC

By Christina Hess
Staff Writer

Instead of throwing your old gym shoes in the trash, recycle them. Drop-off bins can be found at the RAC and in many residence halls.

Volunteer Services and the Wellness Council are heading up this environmental effort for the month of April. According to Wellness Council member Angie Peden, both campus organizations were inspired by Nike's Reuse-A-Shoe program and wanted to get Georgia Southern and Statesboro involved.

"After we collect the shoes in Statesboro, we'll send them to the Nike Reuse-A-Shoe program," said Peden.

Nike will then convert the worn out shoes to basketball courts, athletics fields, running tracks, or the likes for undeserved communities.

"Nike recycles any brand of shoe. This is such an easy way for students to help decrease wastes in landfills," said Peden.

According to Campus Recreation and Intramurals Assistant Director Angie Frederick, the RAC is a perfect location to collect the shoes. "CRI is committed to promoting healthy lifestyle choices, which includes making environmental friendly decisions such as reusing and recycling," said Frederick.

In conjunction with recycling gym shoes, Volunteer Services and the Wellness Council will be sponsoring "Sneaker Shoot-Out" today at 7 p.m. at the RAC. According to Peden, students will have the opportunity to win a free 30-minute CRI Massage, t-shirts and Athlete's Foot prizes. All participants have to do is make a basket using one of the shoes collected from the recycling bins. "Even if you didn't have any shoes to contribute you can still come out tonight, make a basket and win something," said Peden.

"My shoes were falling apart and I knew I was going to buying a new pair. Why not support a good cause? It just makes sense to recycle them," said undergraduate Leslee Clark.

Professor authors 'Computer Forensics'

GSU News Service

Computer security expert Robert Newman says the average person has no idea how much information is available about him or her in cyberspace or how to prevent that information from being used against them.

Newman, a lecturer of information systems at Georgia Southern, said his concerns about the increase of Internet predators and computer scammers prompted him to author the new reference book "Computer Forensics – Evidence Collection and Management."

"My goal is to educate others about computer security," said Newman. "Numerous crimes are committed using computers and other electronic devices such as cell phones and digital cameras. The public needs to be aware of how cybercriminals operate and first responders have to know what evidence to look for in order to bring these digital predators and scammers to justice."

A certified Information Security Systems Professional, Newman has more than 38 years of experience in computer technology.

Newman uses everyday language to provide information related to cyber crime, e-commerce and other activities that exploit digital devices.

Tips to Keep Your Kid Cyber Safe

- Set up a master account for online services in your name. Do not give the password to your children.
- Keep the computer in a common room to better monitor their usage.
- Learn the latest Internet language and abbreviation.
- Do not let them post names, address, phone numbers or school names on social networking sites.
- Discuss with your child how to handle certain situations, like if a stranger contacted them, ahead of time.
- Use blocking software and other Internet filters to control your child's access to certain Web sites.
- Watch out for file attachments on e-mails; if unsure of the sender – delete them.

VT shooter Cho was declared an imminent danger in 2005

McClatchy Newspapers

He made overtures so unwellcome to young women that their ultimate rejections had to be delivered by the campus police.

They in turn were troubled enough to send him to a mental health facility after a court magistrate declared him "mentally ill" and "an imminent danger" to himself or others.

That was in 2005.

But as disturbing details began to pile up about the demented Virginia Tech student responsible for unprecedented carnage on Monday, police struggled with some of the most perplexing questions of all: How did Cho Seung-Hui choose his 32 victims, and why did he pick the buildings and rooms where he sprayed bullets?

"We are not aware of any connections with any of the victims at this point in time," said Col. W. Steven Flaherty, superintendent of the Virginia State Police. "There is no connection we are aware of."

Authorities might have gotten important clues later Wednesday, when NBC News discovered that it had received a packet from Cho containing images and "a lengthy diatribe." MSNBC posted a photo of a man it said was Cho with outstretched arms and a gun in each hand.

On its evening newscast, it showed images of Cho posing with guns and a hammer.

Video footage revealed Cho declaring that the deadly outcome wasn't inevitable, but "you forced me into a corner."

"Now you will have blood on your hands that will never wash off," he said. It was unclear to whom he was directing his comments.

The network reported that the package was postmarked just after 9 a.m. EDT Monday, which would have been after the first two fatal shootings and before the second set involving 30 murders. It was sent overnight, but a wrong zip code delayed it.

With no surveillance cameras near the crime scenes, police have been unable to determine where Cho was during the gap in time.

The material also included video files of Cho ranting about hating the "wealthy." The network said it turned everything over to the FBI.

Past problems

Virginia Tech gunman, Cho Seung-Hui, had been confronted by police and professors in 2005:

Fall 2005 Professor Nikki Giovanni's creative writing class drops from 70 to seven students because of Cho's unsettling behavior

• Giovanni threatens to resign if Cho is not removed from her class

• Professor Lucinda Roy offers one-on-one teaching, has code word with her assistant to call police if she felt threatened by Cho; encourages him to seek counseling

Nov. 27, 2005 Police called when female student becomes concerned with calls and e-mails; Cho referred to a judiciary office, no charges filed

Dec. 13, 2005 At request of another female student, police meet with Cho and ask him not to contact female again; friend of Cho's contacts campus police saying he seemed suicidal

• Temporary detention order obtained and Cho is taken to local mental health facility off campus for evaluation

Dec. 2005 Virginia district court found Cho to be "mentally ill" and an "imminent danger to others"

After clashing for weeks, President Bush and congressional Democratic leaders will sit down in private to see whether compromise is possible on the next steps in funding the war.

The meeting will come at a time when U.S. losses are high. April could be one of the deadliest months of the war, with at least 58 service members killed so far as of Monday.

In public on Monday, the president and Senate Majority Leader Harry Reid, D-Nev., took hard bargaining positions on whether the United States should declare the beginning of a military withdrawal as part of the latest war-funding legislation.

Democrats also were trying to work out differences between the House of Representatives and Senate versions of the war-spending bill so that they can get it to the president's desk within two weeks.

House examines economics of organic farming

McClatchy Newspapers

Lawmakers are giving organic farmers more respect these days. Manuel Vieira hopes that translates into more tangible help, as well.

Vieira grows yams and sweet potatoes organically near the Merced County town of Livingston, Calif. He speaks English with the accent of his native Azores Islands. He wants Congress to seriously step up its organic investments.

"I would like to see more (attention) from the Congress, from the government, paid to the people like myself who are trying to have better food, and a better life," Vieira said Wednesday. And then he made history.

Vieira joined other farmers in what was billed as the first-ever House hearing solely devoted to the subject of organic agriculture. For the first time, a congressional subcommittee has the words "organic agriculture" in its name, and lawmakers are recognizing that the $14.5 billion-a-year industry is not simply a fringe player.

"This broad acceptance and perception of quality is a far cry from where organic food was 20 years ago," said Rep. Dennis Cardoza, D-Calif. "It once was the domain of ugly broccoli, dried-up apples and wormy tomatoes."

Cardoza chairs the House subcommittee on horticulture and organic agriculture. That gives him a potentially big say in writing this year's farm bill.

Bush warns Sudan to end violence in Darfur

President Bush warned Sudan Wednesday that it has one last chance to end the violence in Darfur before the United States imposes strict economic sanctions and weighs other options.

Bush's threat, delivered at Washington's Holocaust Museum, comes amid mixed signals by Sudanese President Mar Hassan al-Bashir.

He now says he has no objections to a large United Nations and African Union peacekeeping force in Darfur, but is reported to be shipping arms and military supplies to the region.

Sen. Boxer prepares global warming Web site

Want to know how you can help cut global warming? Sen. Barbara Boxer is here to help.

The California Democrat, chair of the Senate Environment and Public Works Committee, announced at a National Press Club speech Wednesday that she has prepared a committee Web site to help you determine how big of a polluter you are, and to provide tips on how you can reduce carbon dioxide emissions.

Ruling upholds ban on partial-birth abortion

The U.S. Supreme Court handed conservatives a long-sought victory today, upholding a nationwide ban on a medical procedure opponents call "partial-birth abortion."

The 5-4 ruling said the federal abortion ban signed into law by President Bush in 2003 does not violate women's constitutional right to terminate a pregnancy.

BLUE AND WHITE GAME

SATURDAY, 1:00 PM
PAULSON STADIUM

Hatcher era begins now

QB battle favors Clark

By Nick Burgess
Staff Writer

In the last week of spring practice, with the Blue and White game being Saturday, the competition for quarterback has become a two-man race. Last year's starting quarterback Travis Clark and redshirt freshman Kyle Collins seem to be the favorites in the coaches' eyes for the starting job.

"Travis and Kyle will split the snaps Saturday" said offensive coordinator Rance Gillespie. "They have made a lot of progress so far this spring and I'm optimistic heading into Saturday."

Clark and Collins took most of the snaps in practice Wednesday.

"We're working together helping each other out, we're competing but also helping and coaching each other," said Collins.

Clark is a relative veteran, compared with his competition has had to shoulder the responsibility of mentoring the freshman Collins.

"Everything is going alright, the offense is coming around the receivers are catching along and the whole O-line is doing exceptionally well," said Clark.

Also getting a lot of playing time at practice was a player most Eagle fans should be familiar with, senior Jayson Foster.

"We do certain packages and stuff also we were short one quarterback today, so coach asked me to fill in" said Foster.

Redshirt freshman Jeremiah Enloe's suspension earlier this week for the rest of spring practice due to academic reasons, caused the quarterback shortage.

This coupled with sophomore Chris Griffin's move to defensive back last week, which forced the coaching staff to give Foster a closer look.

When asked whether or not he would get any snaps Saturday Foster said, "I have no idea, probably not, it was more us being short sort of thing."

Despite the shortage of quarterbacks in the spring, coaches expect there to be more competition in the fall when highly touted recruit Lee Chappelle and Northern Illinois transfer Billy Lowe arrive on campus. Lowe, who announced his transfer to Georgia Southern earlier this week, is a product of the nationally ranked Lakeland High School in Lakeland, Florida.

Coincidentally, Lowe succeeded fellow Eagle Chris Griffin as starting quarterback at Lakeland. Lowe flourished as starting QB, leading his team to a 15-0 record and a state title.

Lowe was named First-Team all Florida as well as team MVP, high honors coming from a team that was ranked as the top high school football team in the nation by USA Today.

Though when asked about Billy Lowe the coaches were unable to comment.

Lee Chappelle, also a highly touted recruit, signed with GSU on signing day, is still currently enrolled at Greater Atlanta Christian (GAC).

Considered by some the top quarterback prospect in Georgia, Chappelle set several passing records at GAC throwing for 1,904 yards and 17 touchdowns, with 4 interceptions his senior year.

All four quarterbacks are extremely talented and are expected to make the race in the fall very interesting.

But for now, considering his experience as starting quarterback and his head start with the new offense, Travis Clark remains on top of the depth chart.

Travis Clark

Clark's first season as starting QB had plenty of ups and downs. Clark started all games in 2006, passing for 1808 yards with 8 TDs and four interceptions. Will he be able to keep his job with fresh talent vying for the position?

Coach Chris Hatcher

Hatcher brought a new attitude, new offense, and a 76-12 record to GSU when he was hired in January. However, the only question the Eagle Nation has is, will all of his changes lead to wins on the football field?

Jayson Foster

With the change to wide receiver in 2006, Foster caught 33 passes for 368 yards, to go with his 1287 all purpose yards and 9 TDs. Will he thrive under the Hatcher's new system?

Mike Hamilton

As former Big 12 freshman of the year, Oklahoma State's Hamilton is the favorite at running back. Will he be able to beat out incumbent Lamar Lewis and bolster a running attack that ranked 21st in the nation last year?

The right to be a Hatcher Eagle

The coaching staff covers up all the logos at practice and forces the players to wear their jerseys inside out, hiding their numbers and names. This is seen to be a method of motivation, making the players work hard to earn the right to be called an "Eagle."

Notable players missing Blue and White Game

- Mike Hamilton, RB (academic)
- Matt Covington, DB (injury)
- Lyon Jefferson, WR (injury)
- Jeremiah Enloe, QB (academic)
- Damon Suggs, DL (injury)
- Harland Bower, LB (injury)

Hatcher optimistic heading into Blue White scrimmage

By Claire Gallam
Staff writer

Never mind the fact that new Eagles Head Coach Hatcher has been on the job for only four months.

Forget about that he's had to move his family and install an entirely new offense and defense into a football team he barely knows.

And don't worry that the Eagles have had only 13 practices to prepare for Saturday's Blue White spring scrimmage game at Paulson Stadium, Hatcher isn't nervous. He feels confident about the team's progress throughout the spring.

"We definitely accomplished most of our goals we set out to accomplish this spring. All of the players have shown tremendous effort and came in with great attitudes, and kept those attitudes throughout the training. They all came in willing to learn and improve what they needed to improve. I'm very impressed with how the spring practices went," said Hatcher.

Despite all of the improvements and how well the team has practiced, the Eagles have focused on significantly on the basics.

"We're still working hard, but it has kind of become monotonous to the guys because we haven't installed any new things, we've been working on the fundamentals we implemented on day one."

First year head coach Hatcher didn't see the intensity he had in recent practices, as the team had the last four days off from drills, but thought the team responded near the end.

"We still have a long ways to go before next season, and there are still things we have left to cover, both offensively and defensively, before we're ready for the fall," Hatcher said.

The Blue-White festivities will begin at noon as all fans are invited to tour the Bishop Field House from noon until kickoff.

"Even though it's finals, the Blue and White game will kick off the off season. We're already in pretty good shape for camp, and I know camp will only keep and put these boys into better shape for the season. I know they will be mentally preparing just as much as they are going to be physically," said Hatcher.

The Blue and White game is not the only thing buzzing around the football field lately.

A new quarterback has come down from Northern Illinois to play for the Eagles. Hatcher, though, seems to have no favorites and still has yet to comment on the set positions yet.

"Every position, in both the offense and defense I have seen, has improved this spring and each player has individually overcome obstacles and have all pulled together for the team. They have shown a drastic improvement in just the short while we have been practicing, so I have nothing but confidence for how the season will play out," Hatcher said.

"The Blue and White game is more of a scrimmage game for us, it's definitely a game for the fans. I just want the boys to go out and have fun, as well as implement what I've taught them and what they've been working on this spring."

Tao Ventre/STAFF

The Eagles take a rep at practice Wednesday. The eagles have one practice left before the Blue and White Game on Saturday.

Battle for the 'Boro Saturday

By Jessica Emery
Staff writer

This Saturday, April 21 Statesboro will be hosting one of the longest concerts in its history. Twelve hours to be entertained by over eleven bands, with local favorites Dayfall and No JabOinga headlining.

The battle begins at 12 p.m. this Saturday and it will last until midnight. The music will be non-stop, with the bands playing at both Dos Primos and Oasis. The event is being sponsored by 11th Hour and 91.1 The Buzz. GSU student Charlie McCoy, also known as "Chuck" is the Launchpad Director at 91.1 The Buzz. His goal is to promote a creative music scene in Statesboro through events such as this. "This town's music scene can be so much more than the sub-par cover band scene that dominates the night life currently," McCoy said.

The battle will be judged based on stage performance, crowd participation, lyrical content, musical ingenuity, and various other factors. The bands will have thirty minute sets and the winner of the battle will receive eight hours for studio time at Digital Realm Recording, with second place receiving four hours.

Unlike many concerts in bars around Statesboro, these bands will only be allowed to play one cover song. This allows the bands to fully show off their talent.

With enthusiasm from the bands as well as the event's planning committee, this will surely be a success. What adds to this enthusiasm is that the event will only cost three dollars to attend. This event is not genre-specific either; each band has their own unique sound.

Local band Greasy G, which is made of five members, Brian White, Luke Cole, Steven Bell, Ohki Komoto and Chris Plumer describe their music as "drunkrock," although emphasizing that their music is not easily labeled. Singer White said that Greasy G would have played in the event regardless of the prizes. "Fans of Greasy G will tell you that we rarely charge a cover for shows, it's all about getting people out and making sure they have a great time," White said. White also suggests coming with an open mind, being ready to party and adds that Greasy G is "No, top 40 band!"

Fellow competitor Cam Caldwell's music is more on the acoustic side. Although a competition, Caldwell said "It really feels more like a showcase for the variety of original music that is being made by artists in Statesboro than a competition." Caldwell has been playing for ten years and is used to playing at local Statesboro bars.

For more information about the bands playing and the event itself, join their facebook event, "The Battle of the Boro." Each of the bands' names and MySpace links are listed on the event. There will also be information on 91.1 The Buzz as well as flyers around campus promoting the event.

Dayfall

Originally from Swainsboro and Hazelhurst Dayfall has been gaining notoriety on the air waves.

Greasy G

Student-produced 'I Hate Hamlet' premieres today

By Peter Berta
Staff writer

Plays happen on campus all year long, typically over seen by the theater department, but the Averitt Center is offering a change. Looking to offer a change from the normal campus production, the Averitt Center is producing "I Hate Hamlet", by Paul Rudnick.

What change is that? The production is completely student run, letting theater majors control every aspect of the show. "It's a learning experience," said Senior Matt Lyles, the actor playing the lead role.

A Georgia Southern Graduate, Robert Fallar, founded the project. Last year he contacted the Averitt Center and started the project, in an effort to work with students to produce great plays. In addition to Fallar, Eric Linebarger, the director of this years play, and Senior Sean White helped found the project. Linebarger, who was the producer last year, steps up to take the reigns and lead the project.

Being only in it's second year the Project and it's members already hope to establish a tradition at GSU. "I want to be able to come back here five years later, and see the project still going on," said Linebarger. According to Linebarger, a lot of work has been put into getting the production together and working; everything in it was left in the hands of the students.

"It's been a lot of work finding props, making all of the decisions as a group," said senior JD Lane, props manager for the play.

The play itself about Andrew Rally, a man down on his luck; his television series cancelled, his girlfriend refuses to take their relationship any further and he has to play the role of Hamlet in central park. A role he hates.

To further Andrew's plight, the ghost of John Barrymore, a famous Shakespearian actor, haunts Andrew's new apartment. The play promises to please with its quick wit, and enthusiastic performance.

The play is open for anyone to see. Any student with an ID, not just GSU, is able to purchase the reduced price tickets, at five dollars. Non-student theatre patrons are able to purchase a ticket for ten dollars. The playhouse is the Averitt Center for Arts, next to the Court House, located in down town Statesboro.

The playtimes are at 7:30 p.m. until around 9:30 p.m. The plays will run three times this week from Thursday, April 19 until Saturday, April 21.

THE BOTTOM LINE

By Justin Burris

Relax and get some rest

The shootings this week at VT ripped across the college world like a firestorm. Students from all colleges across the country felt an effect, which can't really be described.

As is inevitable, debates on campus security and gun control are surely in the works.

In the mist of all of this, it's important that we remember that sometimes relaxing and doing something fun can help people deal with any pain they might feel. Take a trip off the beaten path or go out with best friends you haven't spoken with in a while.

In the end just remember to stop in your busy college life and take a break from all of the hard work and stress.

Sometimes even a small day break can make a world of difference.

ACTING

Uhm there was acting in this film? I couldn't tell with all the fancy cars and completely unbelievable characters.

CINEMATOGRAPHY

Style? They don't need no stinkin' style. I mean sure they made the cars shine, but as far as ground breaking cinematic effects go, the movie is a bit of a dud. There was nothing too special about it.

PLOT

I'm still not entirely certain what the movie was supposed to be about. I think there was a race and then a random counterfeiting scheme, but since the transitions were so awful I'm not sure.

FINAL VERDICT

I can't really say that this movie is for anyone wanting to get there money's worth or to anyone wanting to see something with a smidgen of intellect. But if you want dumb this movie has that in spades.

Special Photo

PLOT SUMMARY

Redline is a fast paced movie filled with slick cars, women, and high octane race scenes. The main story follows the daughter of a race car driver who has sworn that she will never race, an ex-marine, and an exclusive group of high stakes gamblers who all collide at a race outside Las Vegas.

ACTING

The acting in this movie was amazing. The Ferraris, Bentlies, Mercedes, Porches and others executed the movie without a hitch. Wait, I'm supposed to review the cast? Horrific.

CINEMATOGRAPHY

The cinematography was great. It kept the emphasis on either the cars or Nadia Bjorlin, so I can't possibly complain. Although, there were a few times when I wanted to see more. (Of the cars that is, perv...)

PLOT

What do you mean, plot? This movie was full of expensive cars, beautiful women, and fighting. Don't put plots where plots aren't needed. Ever seen a porno with an amazing "I wanna watch it again to see what I missed" plot? Exactly.

FINAL VERDICT

This movie was great. The plot was nonexistent and the actors had no idea what they were doing, yet I still can't help but want to see it again. The cars were nothing short of amazing and the race scenes were wickedly intense.

Bright Eyes ends up dim

By Edgar Fernandez
Staff Writer

Conor Oberst, lead singer of Bright Eyes, is known for his emotional, gloomy style, and his recognizably whiny voice. Yet, among the angst, Conor is able to bring deep songs with curious and witty lyrics. His best performance so far was 2005's "I'm Wide Awake, Is Morning," which was noted for its acoustic sounds, simplicity and earnest appeal.

Bright Eyes has used a variety of instruments and sounds before, and Cassadaga is no exception. The instruments in the album vary from the staple acoustic guitars to violins, from bass guitars to accordions. The album's influence is drawn from pop, soul, and folk. However, all the different influences in the album do not seem as pervasive at first, mainly because most of the songs are too similar.

The album begins with "Clai-

Members of Bright Eyes play a set, showing off their musical skills

raidents (Kill or Be Killed)," which is probably my least favorite song in the album. The first half of the song is a woman speaking nonsense, with annoying background music, after 3 minutes the song really begins. This is probably the band's way to scare away any uninitiated listeners, leaving only their fans.

"Four Winds," is one of the better songs, with its appealing acoustic sound. "Cleanse Song" is one of my favorites, it has a bubbly, catchy sound to it.

Most of the songs don't stand out when compared to one another. If you don't pay close attention to the songs, they just dully drift from one to the other, but if you take the time to truly listen to each and every one of them you can see their true potential.

GEEK CORNER

This Week: They control what you buy

By Justin Burris

Hiatus Editor

Digital Rights Management, or DRM, is a hot topic in the tech world today, but it's something that everyone should know about, especially college students.

DRM is what music, movie and other media companies are placing on their content, so they can control how you use and play it. For example, some new DRM movies will only play in certain brands of DVD players. Also, music companies want to restrict your ability to rip music and burn CDs. The most famous recent example of this is the Sony-rootkit.

Last year, all over the news, people were kicking and screaming about the rootkit debacle. Haven't heard of it or not sure what it was? It's pretty simple once broken down.

Sony set it up so once you put one of their music CDs into your computer, it would install software and monitor how you used your computer, all in the name of DRM. Not only is this illegal, but it also caused hundred of computers to break down.

Another example of this is Apple's iTunes music downloading service. Once you download a song, and pay for it, you can only download it 5 more times. Apple has recently contested this, but the record companies still require this restriction, trying to protect their failing business model.

DRM is also now rearing its ugly head in the new forms of digital movies, HD-DVD and BluRay discs. These discs are designed where you can not copy them to your computer or make backups of them. In addition to this, in order to receive the full benefit of your new HD disc, you have to have hardware that is "certified" by their companies.

That means if you want to watch a HD-DVD on a player that the company who produces it hasn't paid the MPAA money, most likely it won't play. There are ways around this, but of course they are illegal, even though you are playing a disc you purchased on a player you own.

These DRM woes extend to more than just media though, in new versions of the operating system from Microsoft, you're required to tell them whenever you install new hardware, as part of them making sure you aren't using hardware Microsoft doesn't like.

You also can't install your copy of windows on as many times as you'd like. You purchased it, why do you have to buy it each and every time you want to install it on more computers? Plain and simple, these companies want more money than they've already pulled from your pocket.

If things with DRM continue to spiral downwards as they have companies are going to begin locking out consumers from listing, and watching or using media on any device they want to, while having to use specialized devices for each of their media.

In an extreme example, but possible one imagine having to listen to Sony BMG music on only Sony players, or being able to watch movies from Paramount on their sanctioned players.

Consumers need to strike out now before these companies make their media so locked down it's not even possible to play it any more. Don't think it's possible? New Sony DVDs only work on certain DVD players. It's happening now, whether we, the consumers, like it or not.

Southern's top models face off in finale competition

GSU News Service

Twelve weeks ago, 15 women began a journey that would change theirs and others lives. Doing everything from selling water and walking runways, like wild animals to battling each other as video game characters. These girls endured the most extreme tests to demonstrate their ability to become high-fashion models.

Weekly photo shoots have also called for these models in the making to conjure up unknown confidence to do everything from portraying celebrities to modeling a pregnant belly.

Now, after twelve weeks of hard work, broken hearts and smeared makeup, only three contestants remain.

In these final weeks of the competition, the girls have portrayed both models from "The Price Is Right" and even the human conscience.

Through it all though, the last models running, Christine Chianumba, Sarah Gowland, and Urian Booze have really outlasted the competition. The last hurdle for them to overcome is to prove to the judges that they deserve to be named Southern's Next Top Model.

The finale party in which the top three will compete for $1000 in prizes will take place in the College of Education's theater at 7 p.m. on Monday, April 23. For more information, contact the_jokers_wild_gsu@yahoo.com.
